In Mt. Diyan v. Hira Nand (7), a Bench of High Court of Lahore emphasized the necessity to endeavour to ascertain the existence or nature of the custom in cases where the custom is alleged.

The question which now remains for consideration is whether the evidence establishes a local custom which is reasonable and certain and leading to the conclusion that it has become the local law of the place by virtue of which the respondents derived the right of use of the water flowing from holding No. 8/219 into their lands. The evidence is to the effect that where the land is undulating only the lower lands are cultivated and almost all such lands have some higher lands as their water resources called in Burmese "yegya" which apparently are lands regarded as catchment areas.

The appellant Maung Pwe went as far as to say "we cannot cultivate the place if it is kept as the water resources for fields" This statement, however, is quite insufficient to warrant the belief that all unoccupied lands on higher level from which water runs down to the lower cultivated lands are recognized as having been reserved as catchment areas or 'water resources. The uncultivated lands on the higher levels are apparently Government waste lands as was the holding No. 8/219 before the appellants' occupation.

Looking at the relative advantages to be gained by lands in higher and lower levels of an undulating area in the dry zone, it is evident that cultivators would prefer to occupy the lower lands and not the higher ones and it would not be strange to find that most of the higher lands have no occupiers or persons who would think of cultivating them. While they remain vacant, those occupying the lower lands would enjoy the benefits of water much or little which flows down from the higher lands; and these cultivators would certainly call all the unoccupied higher lands as their catchment areas In my opinion the evidence does not go further than that

It is not contended that the unoccupied waste lands on the higher levels have been reserved as catchment areas like, for instance, grazing grounds reserved for the benefit of the cattle of certain localities The unoccupied State lands are the property of the Government, and it is inconceivable that the Government should be considered to have reserved them as catchment areas or permitted the cultivators to reserve them as such merely on account of the fact that the Government has, by reason of the absence of cultivators to apply to cultivate them, allowed them to remain unoccupied. There would, of course be nothing to prevent a cultivator to occupy a large area of land and cultivate only the lower part thereof, keeping the higher part as his water resources or catchment area. In such a case the uncultivated area would not be Government waste land, and it is not certain that when Maung Pwe spoke of lands kept as water resources he was not referring to such lands as are kept as water resources without being Government waste lands. The alleged custom if stretched to the extent to which the respondents attempted at stretching, must necessarily be unreasonable because anybody by cultivating a piece of land in the lower part of a slope in the locality in question would successfully deprive the Government of the right of disposal of State lands in the higher part of the slope for the purposes of cultivation to those sufficiently enterprising to attempt at cultivating them.

For these reasons I am not satisfied that the alleged custom is reasonable or certain or that it establishes a custom to enjoy the use of the water flowing down from the higher part of the slope as of right. The respondents did not think of setting up such a custom even up to the time when the case went to the District Court for the first time. Nor does it appear that they expressly pleaded the existence of such a custom at any stage before the case reached this Court on second appeal.

In my opinion the respondents' suit failed. I would allow this appeal and direct that the suit be dismissed with costs throughout.

Heald, J.—Respondents sued for an injunction to restrain appellants from working a certain holding of land. Their case was that appellants' working that holding caused a diminution of the water-supply to their lands, and that therefore they were entitled to prevent appellants from working it.

Respondents' lands adjoin that holding but are on a lower level. Until 1922, when appellants obtained permission from the revenue authorities to work that holding the surface water from the higher land of which that holding consists flowed down to respondents' lands and naturally improved their fertility, the rain fall in this neighbourhood, which is known as the dry zone of Burma, being precarious

The lands which are comprised in appellants' holding are State lands and until permission was given to appellants to occupy them were State lands.

Unless respondents could establish that they had a right to the use of the surface water as an easement they would not be entitled to the injunction which they sought. To establish the easement which they claimed they would have to prove enjoyment as of right and without interruption for a period of 60 years ending within two years next before the institution of the suit. Their suit was instituted in 1926, so that they could not succeed if their enjoyment was interrupted before 1924 or if the interruption had been submitted to or acquiesced in for one year after they had notice of it. Since appellants obtained permission to work the land in 1922, it is probable that respondents' enjoyment of the right to the water which they claim was interrupted not later than 1923, and that on this ground, even if they established that they had enjoyed the right for 60 years, which in fact they did not establish, their suit was bound to fail.

There is also another obstacle in the way of their success, and that is that there can be no easement in respect of the use of surface water. My learned brother has considered the law on this subject and I agree with his conclusions.

Respondents doubtless had an opportunity of objecting to appellants' application to the revenue authorities for permission to work the land and an appeal to the discretion of those authorities was in my opinion the only way in which they could attempt to prevent the lands being worked. It is not suggested that they took that course, and as I do not think that they have any rights which a civil Court can enforce, I concur with my learned brother in setting aside the judgment and decree of this Court in Special Civil Appeal No 707 of 1927, and in dismissing respondents' suit with costs for appellants throughout.

Judgment.—On 20th November 1923, the respondents obtained a decree for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage. The preliminary decree directed that if the mortgage money be paid by the 20th May possession of the land would be made over. On 20th May the decree-holder asked for execution of this decree by delivery of possession. The amount due under the decree was apparently not deposited until 19th June. On that date, the decree holder's advocate asked that the case might be closed as the final decree had not yet been passed. The case was closed accordingly and the money in deposit was withdrawn by the decree-holders on 25th September 1924. Nothing further was done until the 23rd July 1927; on that date a final decree was drawn up apparently on a petition filed by the decree-holder, on 5th July 1927. By a curious mistake the trial Court passed a final decree declaring the plaintiffs to be absolutely debarred from all rights to redeem the property. Since a decree in any case could not have been passed in a suit for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage, it was clearly not a decree which the plaintiffs wanted. On 28th July the plaintiff applied for execution of the decree of November 1923. Notice was issued, and when the respondents appeared they asked for time, and again it appears that a long period elapsed during which nothing was done by either party. On 28th March 1928, the decree-holders asked for an order for the delivery of the land. It appears that on 1st August 1927, they had deposited the amount, they were ordered to pay under the decree. Orders were passed for the delivery of the land, without the issue of notice on the judgment-debtors, and the delivery order was returned as duly executed. On 13th April 1928, the decree-holder made a further application saying that the judgment-debtors were resisting their attempts to obtain possession and asking for an order under R. 97, O. 21, Civil P. C. The judgment-debtors objected and orders on this application were finally passed on 16th August. The trial Court dismissed the application on the ground that the time limit for execution of the decree had been exceeded. Against this order the decree-holders appealed to the District Court. The District Court set aside the order and directed that redemption should be allowed. Against this order the judgment-debtors have come to this Court in revision.

The time within which the redemption money could be paid under the original decree expired on 20th April 1924. The application for redemption made on 28th July 1927 could only have been granted under this decree if the time allowed in the decree was extended. It was held by the Bombay High Court in the case of Vasudev v. Gopal (1), that when an application to execute a decree for redemption was made three years after the passing of the decree the application was barred by limitation. It was held that the application must be considered as an application for enlargement of time and would be governed by the provisions of Art. 181, Lim. Act. That would also be the case here. The redemption could not have been granted to the decree-holders without extension of time and the decree-holders could not have succeeded unless their application were considered as one for extension of time to which Art. 181, Lim. Act, would apply.

It was held in the Bombay case that the period of limitation in such a case must begin to run at the latest on the last date fixed in the original decree for payment. I see no reason for not holding this to be a correct exposition of the law, and the right to apply for extension of time in the present case was therefore barred by limitation at the latest on the 20th May 1927. By July 1927, the decree-holders by efflux of time had lost their right to redeem under the original decree. Even if the application were regarded strictly as an application for execution of the original decree, it would still be time barred. The original case was closed on 19th July 1924. The withdrawal of the amount deposited by the decree-holders on 25th September 1925 could not possibly be construed as a step-in-aid of the execution, and by 1927 the right to apply for execution of the decree was barred by limitation. I cannot, therefore, see how the decree-holders could possibly succeed in the present case. The final decree which was drawn up was clearly incorrect, but the application before the Court was not to execute that decree. I am of opinion therefore, that the trial Judge was right in refusing to allow execution of the decree and the District Court was wrong in setting aside the trial Court's order. The order passed would appear to be one under S. 47, Civil P. C., so that a second appeal would lie. But even if the petitioners are correct in coming before this Court by way of revision, I think there is sufficient reason for interference. The District Court in passing orders appears to have overlooked entirely the question of limitation. I set aside the order of the District Court and restore that of the trial Court dismissing the decree-holder's application for execution. Costs in the District Court and in this Court will be borne by the decree-holders, the first three respondents in this application, advocate's fee in this Court two gold mohurs.

Civil Revn. No. 291 of 1929, Decided on 28th August 1929, from decree of Sm. C. C. Judge, Rangoon, in Sm. C. S. No. 3471 of 1929.

Buddhist Law (Burmese)—Husband and wife—Burmese Buddhist husband and wife are partners and so Buddhist wife can sue in respect of partnership asset in her capacity as suriving partner—Contract Act S. 45.

A Burmese Buddhist husband and wife are regarded as partners and as such a Buddhist wife can maintain suit in respect of a partnership asset in her capacity as surviving partner without any reference to her succession to the interest of her husband in the asset or debt due to them jointly : A. I. R. 1927 Rang. 209 and 4 L. B. R. 99, Rel. on; 2 U. B. R. 204, not Foll. [P 306 C 2; P 307 C 1]

Dangali—for Applicant.

Judgment.—The plaintiff in the suit in the Small Cause Court is the survivor of Burmese couple She claimed to recover a debt due to her deceased husband in which she presumably had a half interest as the wife. The defendant objected to the suit on the ground that the plaintiff could not file a suit without first obtaining letters of administration or a succession certificate. The learned Judge of the Small Cause Court held that he was bound by the previous practice, which was to insist upon the production of a succession certificate or letters of administration by a Burmese Buddhist wife or husband when a suit was filed in respect of a debt jointly due to them. In some of the old rulings of the late Chief Court of Lower Burma, and of the Judicial Commissioner of Upper Burma, it was assumed that one of the Buddhist couple got the whole estate not by survivorship but by succession, so far as one half of the estate is concerned and therefore it was necessary for him or her to get a succession certificate or Letters of Administration in respect of the debt.

The position of a Buddhist couple as regards their proprietary rights has been considered in the Full Bench case of Ma Paing v. Maung Shwe Hpaw (1). In that case it was held that their position was analogous to that of a partnership, and that all the incidents of a partnership, which were not obviously inapplicable to them because their relationship was not a contractual one, but a result of status, might be applied in consideration of their rights, proprietary or otherwise If this is so it follows that standing in the position of a surviving partner, the widow could maintain a suit in respect of an asset of the partnership, irrespective of the question whether the share of the deceased partner belonged to the surviving partner or somebody else. In these cases, what the law recognizes is the right of the surviving partner to realize the assets of the partnership. O. 30, R 49, Civil P C. makes this clear, but even before this provision of law, it had been held by the late Chief Court of Lower Burma, that a partner could maintain a suit in his or her own name in respect of a partnership asset without joining the legal representatives of the deceased partner in the suit: K L. P. L. Perianeh Chetty v. Armuga Pather (2). In that case Sir Charles Fox dissented from the Calcutta ruling which took a contrary view and agreed with the rulings of Madras and Bombay. This position is made clear in an Upper Burma case U Guna v U Kyw (3). The Judicial Commissioner of Upper Burma there recognized the position that the union of a husband and wife among Burmese Buddhists should be treated as a partnership, but held that because of the provisions of S. 45, Contract Act, the wife could not sue in her personal capacity alone and must therefore obtain succession certificate in respect of the share of the other partner. But a different view of the applicability of

S. 45, Contract Act was taken in Lower Burma in the case I have cited above, where it was held that nothwithstanding the provisions of S. 45, Contract Act, surviving partners could file a suit in respect of a debt due to the partnership without joining the legal representatives of the deceased partner. It therefore follows that a Buddhist wife can maintain a suit in respect of a partnership asset in her capacity as surviving partner without any reference to her succession to the interest of her husband in the asset or debt due to them jointly. As this is the sole point on which the learned Judge of the Small Cause Judge Court dismissed the case, I set aside his decree and remand the case for disposal on the merits.

Kyaw Din—for Appellant.

Lhein Maung—for Respondent.

Heald, J.—In suit No. 13-A of 1927 of the District Court of Tharrawaddy appellant sued respondent for divorce as by mutual consent on the ground of respondent's repeated acts of adultery, and she also claimed partition of the property of the marriage. In suit No. 16-A of the same Court, respondent sued appellant for restitution of conjugal rights and it was agreed between the parties that the evidence recorded in the earlier suit should be evidence in the later suit, and that the plaint in the earlier suit should be regarded as a written statement in the later suit.

The suits were therefore in effect heard together and the judgment in the later suit followed the judgment in the earlier suit. Both suits were dismissed, the Court holding that mere adultery on the part of the husband does not entitle the wife to divorce, and that in the circumstances of the case respondent was not entitled to claim restitution of conjugal rights. Appellant appeals against the dismissal of her suit for divorce, and respondent, instead of appealing against the dismissal of his suit for restitution, has taken the mistaken course of filing a cross-objection to appellant's appeal. Appellant's sole ground of appeal at the hearing in this Court was that according to the Burmese Buddhist Law laid down in the Dhammathats adultery by the husband is by itself sufficient to entitle the wife to divorce.

The learned advocate's argument is more ingenious than convincing, and can hardly be taken seriously. He says that because one Dhammathat says that a wife may abuse a husband who commits adultery and another Dhammathat says a husband may divorce a wife who abuses him, the Dhammathats must be taken as regarding adultery by the husband as a sufficient ground for divorce. The actual passages in the Dhammathats on which he bases this argument are a passage in Manugye (12, 46) which says:

"No blame attaches to a wife who uses abusive language towards a husband who does not consort with her but consorts with prostitutes and continues to frequent their company in spite of her protests," and a verse from a metrical Dhammathat known as "Myingun's cited in S. 302, Kinwun Mingyi's Digest (Vol. 2) which says that a husband may leave a wife whose language is unrestrained, who is excessively coarse and disgusting, who has hard and bitter tongue, who sulks and has a violent temper and whom he does not want, and that in these circumstances he may live with the wife of his desire.

It is hardly necessary to say that even if these two passages are read together, and there is no reason why they should be, they do not go far towards establishing the proposition that the husband's adultery by itself is a ground for divorce in a suit brought by the wife. The learned advocate has, however, referred us also to two passages from the Dhammathats which are cited in S. 230 of the Digest. The first is the only extract from Kaingsa which runs as follows:

"If a wife say to her husband you have violated another man's house and belongings, you are suffering from a loathsome disease, I do not want to live together with you, she shall not be blamed."

The second is a passage from Dhamma which says that a wife may discard a husband who is a drunkard and a gambler and who seduces other men's wives, if he continues in his misconduct in spite of having promised the wise men three times in writing to give up his evil ways. He has referred us further to a passage in Dhammathatkyaw cited in S. 256 of the Digest which says that if the wife is guilty of adultery, she is to have her head shaved in four patches and to be sold into slavery, and that if the husband keeps a paramour he is to leave the house with only the clothes he is wearing. The last of these passages is the only one which goes any way towards supporting appellant's argument that a wife may divorce a husband for mere adultery, and it can hardly be contended that the Courts are bound to enforce that law at the present day.

As a matter of fact the distinction between wife and husband in the matter of adultery as a ground for divorce is clearly shown in the passage from Manugye (V, 24) which is reproduced in S. 302 of the Digest immediately after the verse from Myingun mentioned above. That passage says that where one party to a marriage behaves like an animal it shall be no defence to a suit for divorce brought by the other party for the husband, if the suit is brought by the wife, to say that he has not been guilty of cruelty and has not taken a lesser wife, or for the wife if the suit has been brought by the husband, to say that she has not taken a paramour. This passage supports the view that the ordinary grounds for divorce are cruelty and adultery on the part of the husband and adultery on the part of the wife.

That is the view of the law which has hitherto been taken by the Courts: vide the case of Ma Ein v. Te Maung (1), and we are not convinced by the reasoning of the appellant's learned advocate or by the passages in the Dhammathats which he has cited that we ought to hold that mere adultery on the part of the husband is by itself a sufficient ground for divorce. It follows that, since appellant bases her case merely on adultery, her appeal should be dismissed.

As for respondent's cross-objection, it clearly does not arise in respect of appellant's suit and appeal but supposing that it could be regarded as an appeal against the decree in respondent's suit, all that need be said about it is that in view of respondent's misconduct, which I would hold proved, the case is not one in which restitution of conjugal rights ought to be ordered. The cross-objection should in my opinion be dismissed. In the circumstances, each party should bear its own costs in this Court.

Otter, J.—This is an appeal against a judgment of the District Court of Tharrawadddy refusing to grant a decree for divorce at the instance of the appellant. The suit was heard together with a cross-suit in which the respondent asked for a decree for restitution of conjugal rights. He was refused this decree. He now files a cross-objection to the appeal of the appellant asking that the decree of the lower Court should be modified by granting him restitution of conjugal rights. The only ground relied on by the appellant in her appeal is that the respondent was guilty of adultery. No allegation of cruelty was put forward and there is no suggestion that the respondent took to himself a second wife. The parties are Burmese Buddhists. The first question therefore is whether, according to the Burmese Buddhist Law, a divorce can be granted to a wife against her husband upon the sole ground of adultery.

Mr. Kyaw Din who appeared for the appellant referred us to a large number of extracts from the Dhammathats, and I would say at once that with the possible exception of an extract from the Kaingza appearing in S. 230 of U Gaung's Digest of the Burmese Buddhist Law, all the passages referred to appear to us to point to a conclusion contrary to that contended for by him. It is necessary to point out that the Dhammathats can only be regarded as directory and not as statements of the law which are necessarily binding in law. Moreover there is authority, which in my view shows that it is not and never has been the law, that a Burmese Buddhist woman can divorce her husband on the sole ground that he has had sexual intercourse with a woman not his wife. The extract from the Kaingza appearing in S. 230 of the Digest, to which I have referred, says that the wife has the right of refusing to cohabit with her husband who is adulterous, or is suffering from some repugnant disease. In my view this expression of opinion, though perhaps then in accordance with the usages of Burmese Buddhist , does not amount to a statement that under such circumstances a divorce even by mutual consent could be obtained.

Turning to the decided cases upon the point the case of Ma Ein v. Maung (1), (decided by a Bench of the late Chief Court) lays down that in the case of Burman Buddhist married couple, adultery on the part of the husband does not alone or even accompanied by a single act of cruelty, entitle the wife to a divorce. In that case the Court expressed the opinion that it appears from the Dhammathats that adultery on the part of the husband does not alone, or even accompanied by a single act of cruelty, entitle the wife to a divorce. A wife is, however, entitled to a divorce as by mutual consent, if her husband takes a lesser wife without her approval. This was decided after examination of a mass of conflicting authorities by a Full Bench of the late Chief Court in the well known case of In re, Maung v. Hwe Ma Sein (2). But the act of adultery, quite apart from that of taking another woman to wife, is different, and on this point no authority was cited in support of the appellant's contention. Thus the proposition that adultery alone does not entitle a wife to divorce her husband has been established and there is no case where the correctness of this view has since been questioned.

Upon this part of the case I need mention one further point only. There was some evidence that adultery took place during the temporary absence of the appellant in a house where they had been living together, and some suggestion was put forward that such adultery under these circumstances might amount to legal cruelty. No authority was put forward in support of this view, and moreover so far as we know there is nothing even in the Dhammathats which supports this view. It seems to me, therefore, that the appellant cannot in law succeed in this appeal It is unnecessary, therefore, to examine the facts upon which she relies.

The only remaining question is whether the learned District Judge was right in refusing to the respondent an order for restitution of conjugal rights. For many years doubts had existed as to whether such a suit would lie under the Burmese Buddhist law In 1907, however, the question was decided in the affirmative : see the Upper Burma case of Nga Chit Dat v. Mi Kin Pu (3). In all such cases, however, the party seeking a decree must be free from blame : see as to this the case of Maung Sein v. Kin Thet Gyi (4). In the present case there was abundant evidence to justify the lower Court in coming to the conclusion, as apparently it did, that the respondent misconducted himself on several occasions with Ma Saw Mya. Comment was made that the evidence called for the appellant upon this matter ought not to be relied upon owing to the low station in life, or relationship to the appellant, of certain of the witnesses. Such comment is, of course, permissible, but I have read the evidence and see no reason to disagree with the view taken by the District Judge who heard these witnesses give their evidence.

The learned District Judge also pointed out that the respondent was at fault in that he left the appellant after a heated quarrel with his wife. There seems to have been repeated quarrels between them. A serious quarrel occurred some three months or so before the final rupture. On this occasion the respondent left the house taking with him some, at any rate, of the family furniture, and an apparently false charge of infidelity was made by the respondent against his wife. I have little doubt that a contributory cause of the quarrels between the parties was the tendency on the part of the respondent to excessive drinking. The respondent finally left his wife saying he would obtain a divorce, and some preparation was made to have a deed drawn up While a discussion about this was going on, the two brothers of the respondent arrived, and after a conversation between them and the respondent the two brothers violently abused the appellant It was said on his behalf that the final quarrel was entirely due to resentment by the appellant on account of this abuse It seems impossible to hold that this was so. It is true that in a letter (Ex. 3) written by the appellant to the respondent after the separation there are many statements which show her resentment at the conduct of the appellant's family It is equally clear, however, that the respondent was in the habit of abusing the appellant to members of his family, and there can be no doubt that they took his part against her

It is unnecessary for us to deal more in detail with the evidence, for I agree with the conclusion arrived at by the learned District Judge From the whole of the evidence it is plain that the respondent has treated the appellant extremely badly and he is not a man whom the Court will assist by ordering his wife to return. The appeal and the cross-objection thereto must, therefore, be dismissed. Neither party is successful, and we, therefore, order that each party will bear their own costs of this appeal and the order of the lower Court as to costs will stand.

Judgment.—The facts of the case are very simple. The suit was instituted by Ma Lon Ma Gale against the defendants, who are husband and wife. It is alleged in the plaint that the husband borrowed the sum of money for which the promissory note was executed for the family purposes, and benefit of himself and his wife The promissory note was in favour of two persons, namely Ma Lon Ma Gale, and Ma Mya Bu. These two were sisters and carried on a money lending business in partnership. The trial Court gave a decree for the amount claimed, and the defendants now appeal.

The sole ground argued in the appeal is that no decree can be passed in favour of Ma Lon Ma Gale alone unless the legal representatives of Ma Mya Bu, the deceased partner are also added as parties to the suit Reliance is placed for this argument on a ruling in U Guna v. U Kyaw Gaung (1), in which the Judicial Commissioner of Upper Burma followed an Indian ruling and held that a suit by the surviving partner was not competent without joining the legal representatives of the deceased partner. The majority of the Indian High Courts have taken a contrary view In K. V. P L. Perinan Chetty v. Armuga Pather (2), Sir Charles Fox, C J., of the late Chief Court of Lower Burma, followed the decisions of the other Indian High Courts and dissented from the Calcutta ruling in Ram Narain Nursing Dass v Ram Chunder Jankee Lall (3). In the present Civil Procedure Code O. 30, R. 4 enacts that where two or more persons may sue or be sued in the name of a firm under the foregoing provisions and any of such persons dies, whether before the institution or during the pendency of any suit, it shall not be necessary to join the legal representatives of the deceased as a party to the suit. In cases of partnership. it is competent for the surviving partner to file a suit in respect of partnership debts, without joining the legal representatives of the deceased partner.

The learned advocate for the appellants argues that it is only when the suit is instituted in the name of a firm that O. 30, R. 4 applies. O. 30, R. 4, does not say so in terms, and merely provides that when two or more persons may sue and be sued in the name of a firm the provisions of that order applies. In this case the two Burmese ladies had no firm name, though undoubtedly they carried on business in partnership. Since they cannot sue in a firm's name, it is argued that the legal representatives of the deceased person are a necessary party. We cannot accept this contention All that O. 30 R 4 contemplates is the existence of a partnership. Even if O 30, R. 4 were not applicable, the previous rulings certainly are. We are therefore of opinion that it was competent for Ma Lon Ma Gale to maintain the suit and it was properly decreed.

The only other point taken before us is, that the promissory note having been signed by Maung Shwe Htein alone, his wife appellant 2, Ma Bu Ma, is not bound by it. It is suggested that the presumption that Maung Shwe Htein was acting on behalf of his wife as well as himself cannot be drawn in this case, because the money purports to have been taken for Maung Shewe Htein and his sister. That does not seem to us to be sufficient reason for not drawing the ordinary presumption in such cases. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

(a) Civil P. C., O. 21, R. 90—Official Receiver not in possession nor party—Absence of notice of auction to him does not amount to material irregularity.

The absence of notice of auction to an Official Receiver of an estate who has an interest in the property sold by auction, but who is not himself in possession of such property and is not a party and has not also applied to be made a party to the proceedings does not amount to material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting the sale : *A. Judgment.—This is an appeal from an order of the original side of this Court, setting aside the sale of a mill by auction in Civil Execution Case No. 605 of 1927 on the ground that the Official Receiver was not given notice of the auction. It is not alleged that the Official Receiver was the receiver in possession of the mill property, but it 1926 he was appointed receiver of the estate of one U Maung Gyi, and U Maung Gyi had a half interest or share in the mill. The learned trial Judge states that the Official Receiver was in legal possession of U Maung Gyi's half share in the mill. That may be ; but it is not alleged that either U Maung Gyi, before his death, or the Official Receiver, was in actual possession of either the mill or its compound, the possession and management being in the hands of the other partners. The learned Judge proceeds on the analogy of an administrator to an estate, but in our view such an analogy is dangerous and not helpful, as the legal position of an administrator is very different to that of a receiver. Unless special powers have been given to a receiver, in the words of Sir Charles Fox in Po Shan v. Mg. Giji (1)

(1) [1910] 5 L. B. R. 213=8 I. C. 976=3 Bur. L. T. 89.

"The status of a receiver is merely that of an officer of the Court. He is sometimes referred to as the "hand of the Court" He acquires no proprietary rights or interest in the property of which he is appointed receiver. Having no title to the property he cannot convey or assign any title to it to any other person"

"A receiver has no proprietary rights or interest whatever. Notwithstanding his appointment the proprietary rights in the estate remain in the persons who are by law entitled to the estate. The receiver's possession is not a possession by any personal right. It is the possession of the Court and he is totally devoid of any interest in the property." (Woodroffe on Receivers, 3rd Edn., p. 4.)

The heirs and legal representatives of U Maung Gyi, deceased, in whom the legal title to the estate is vested, were parties to the proceedings. The Official Receiver was not a party and never applied to be made a party We have not been referred to any provision of the Civil Procedure Code requiring notice to issue to a receiver of an estate, who has an interest in the property in question but who is not himself in possession of such property. In the absence of such provision, we are unable to agree that the absence of notice to the Official Receiver was material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting the sale. Reliance has been placed on what the learned trial Judge calls, "a grossly inadequate price" which the mill and its premises fetched to satisfy the proviso to R. 90, O. 21, Civil P. C., and it is mentioned that the mill was mortgaged for a lakh of rupees in 1921. The mortgage, however, is dated 1921, and the evidence of Mr. David shows that the mill was in a very bad condition and would require an expenditure of something like Rs. 31,000 and odd to put it in proper condition. In a climate such as Rangoon, rice mill machinery deteriorates very rapidly if not properly looked after, and there is nothing intrinsically improbable in a mill which, though it might be worth a lakh of rupees in 1921, at an auction sale would not fetch more than Rs. 21,000, after several years of neglect.

The decree-holders, respondents 1 and 2, had leave to bid and were present at the auction sale, and we must presume that they would have exercised their power if they were satisfied that the property was going to be sold for a grossly inadequate price. We are not satisfied and cannot accept the explanation that they were so persuaded that the auction was going to be postponed through paucity of would be buyers, that they did not pay due attention to the auction. But, if Mr. David's estimate is at all near the mark, namely, that Rs. 31,000 and odd would have to be spent on the mill, we can understand the Chettyar's reluctance to bid any higher price for it.

Reliance was placed on the decision of a single Judge in the case of Fraser v Krishnaswami Aiyer (2), but that decision, even if correct is easily distinguishable from the present. There the receiver was in actual possession of the whole partnership property and had applied to be made a party. Mr. N. N. Sen states that there is a further objection in that his client, Ba U, had not been served with notice. It is true that Ba U was not personally served, but the notice was affixed to his house and we find a diary entry in the execution record dated 23rd March 1928, which the Deputy Registrar held to be good notice. The objection does not seem to have been strenuously urged in the trial Court, and the learned Judge makes no mention of it. We see no reason for differing with the Deputy Registrar, and hold that the service on Maung Ba U was good.

A further point has been raised before us on behalf of the respondent. It is contended that when the applications for setting aside the sale were before the trial Judge, the trial Judge had not accepted the highest bid at the auction or declared the bidder to be the purchaser and that therefore the bid had not been accepted. It was therefore open to the trial Judge to refuse to accept the bid whether there were grounds for setting aside the sale under R. 90, O 21 or not. The contention is based on the judgment of a single Judge of this Court in the case of Afazuddin v. Howell (3). It was there held that the highest bidder at a Court sale of immovable property becomes the purchaser thereof not when the bid is accepted by the fall of the hammer, but when the presiding officer of the Court has accepted the bid and declared the bidder to be the purchaser. Reliance was placed on the case of Jaibahadur Jha v. Matukdhari Jha (4). In that case the properties had been sold in execution by the nazir of the Court. The bidsheet was sent to the Munsif who wrote: "Close against the last offer," but never signed the declaration that the property had been knocked down in favour of the bidder. It was held that in the circumstances the Munsif had the power to refuse to accept the bid and to order property to be resold. It would appear, however, from the judgment that the practice in carrying out such Court sales was for the nazir only to conduct the sale and record the bids, but for acceptance of the bid to be with the Munsif

There has been no such practice in the Courts of this Province. Under R. 65, O. 21, Civil P C., every sale in execution of a decree shall be conducted by an officer of the Court or by such other person as the Court may appoint in this behalf, and shall be made by public auction in manner prescribed Under R. 258 of the rules of this Court published at p 126 of the High Court Rules and Orders sales of immovable property in execution of a decree for money are to be conducted by the bailiff under the direct supervision of a Registrar There is no provision in the Rules which requires a Judge to accept a bid. Under R. 259 if the highest bid be equal to or higher than the reserved price (if any), the bailiff shall make an entry in the sale book to the following effect :

"I declare . . . . . to have been the highest bidder for the purchase of the property above set forth (or of lot No. ) for the sum of Rs. . . . . ."

And under R. 260 an application for an order confirming a sale of immovable property is not necessary. If no application to set aside the sale is made within the period allowed therefor a Registrar may pass an order confirming the sale. It is quite clear therefore that the rules of procedure on the original side of this Court do not contemplate the highest bid at an auction sale being placed before the presiding Judge for acceptance, nor does it seem to us that the provisions of O. 21, Civil P. C., require a bid to be accepted by a Judge before the contract of sale can be held to be complete.

Rule 84, O 21 provides that on every sale of immovable property the person declared to be the purchaser shall pay immediately after such declaration a deposit of twenty-five per cent on the amount of his purchase money to the officer or other person conducting the sale, and, in default of such deposit, the property shall forthwith be re-sold. R. 69, O. 21 quite clearly recognises that a sale elsewhere than in the precincts of the Court house is regular and when the sale is held elsewhere than in the precincts of the Court house the officer conducting the sale has a discretion to adjourn it without reference to the Court On the failure of the payment of the deposit, R. 84 requires that the property should forthwith be re-sold. It is quite clear that if the property were sold away from the Court house, it would be impossible to comply with the provisions of this rule in many cases, if the reference had to be made to the presiding Judge for acceptance of the bid. The bailiff of the Court is appointed to be the officer to conduct the sale, and in our opinion the reasonable interpretation of R 84, O 21 is that the officer conducting the sale shall be the person to declare the highest bidder to be the purchaser.

In Afazuddin's case (3), the sale was not in this Court but in a Court in Pegu District. But in our opinion the same considerations would apply in both cases.

There is no rule in the Burma Courts Manual corresponding to R 259 of the High Court Rules and Orders. But it is clear from the rules laid down in paras. 219 to 222 of the Manual, that the necessity of a declaration as to the highest bidder by the presiding Judge is not contemplated as part of the procedure of a sale. We must therefore dissent from the decision in Afazuddin s case (3). For the reasons already given, we set aside the the order appealed from and confirm the sale. The appellant is entitled to costs of this appeal and also in the trial Court, advocate's fee ten gold mohurs in this Court.

Civil Misc Appeal No. 131 of 1929, Decided on 11th September 1929, from order of original side in Insolvency Case No 150 of 1929.

Section 9 (e) merely lays down that if the property has been attached for 21 days or more there has been an act of bankruptcy. The act becomes complete at the conclusion of 21 days. Thus a creditor is not entitled to present a petition to adjudicate a person insolvent beyond three months after the person's property is attached for 21 days though the property is under attachment at the time of the presentation of the petition : In re, Beaston, (1899), 1 *Q. N. M. Cowasjee—for Appellant

Venkatram—for Respondent.

Judgment. — The appellants have been adjudicated insolvents on the application of the respondents The acts of insolvency on which the respondent relied in their application for adjudication were that certain properperties of the appellants had been under attachment for not less than 21 days They claimed that a rice mill had been attached on 23rd August 1928, that other properties of the appellants had been attached on 6th November 1928, and that in both cases the attachments were still in force when the application for adjudication was filed. The application for adjudication was filed on 20th June 1929, and the contention on behalf of the appellants is that the acts of insolvency alleged were committed more than three months before the application for adjudication, and that the adjudication should not therefore have been allowed. In the case of each attachment it is clear that a period of 21 days had elapsed for more than three months before the presentation of the petition. Under S. 12 (1) (c), Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, a creditor is not entitled to present an insolvency petition unless the act of insolvency on which the petition is grounded has accrued within three months before the presentation of the petition. The contention of the appellants in this case is that the act of insolvency alleged accrued on the expiry of the 21 days and that therefore the respondents were not entitled to present the petition under S. 12.

The learned trial Judge held that the attachments were continuing acts of insolvency and that, as they were still in force at the time of the application, the application was within time. That this is not the law in England is made quite clear in the case of In re, Beeston (1). The relevant section of the English Bankruptcy Act, reads as follows:

"A debtor commits an act of bankruptcy if execution against him has been levied by seizure of his goods under process in an action in any Court, and the goods have been either sold or held by the sheriff for 21 days."

In the case of In re, Beeston (1) the goods had been seized by the sheriff and had remained in his possession for over a year before the application for ajudication had been made. It was held by the Court that the act of bankruptcy was complete 21 days after the sheriff had entered on possession, and that there was therefore no act of bankruptcy within three months of the receiving order being made. On this point Lindley, M. R., remarks at p. 631·

"Now, is it possible to fairly construe that section so as to make continued possession for more than 21 days either a continued act of bankruptcy or if it should be a succession of periods of 21 days, a succession of acts of bankruptcy ? I do not think that it is consistent with the language. We know perfectly well that acts of bankruptcy have to be regarded critically and carefully. There is no such thing as an act of bankruptcy except that which the statute declares to be one, and when the statute says an act of bankruptcy is committed if an execution has been levied by seizure and the goods have been held by the sheriff for 21 days, that means that the seizure and holding for 21 days together are essential for the consideration of whether there is an act of bankruptcy or not. It seems to me it would be straining this section beyond all reason to say that there was a succession of acts of bankruptcy at the expiration of every period of 21 days or that there has been one continued act of bankruptcy running over a year and a half."

In a concurrent judgment Vaughan Williams, L. J., remarks at p. 633:

"I have only one word to add, and that is a word about whether the bankrupt here by the seizure and the possession for 21 days has committed either a continuous act of bankruptcy for the whole term of possession or an act of bankruptcy which will be repeated each time that there is a fresh period of 21 days of possession. I have no doubt myself that it is one act of bankruptcy that it is not a continued act of bankruptcy, and it is not a repeated act of bankruptcy, on the happening of each fresh period of 21 days.

"I entirely agree with all that has been said by the Master of Rolls as to the words of the section, but I wish to add one observation. Until the recent legislature there was no such act of bankruptcy, as this act of bankruptcy constituted by seizure and remaining in possession for 21 days or any other time. The act of bankruptcy was by execution for a certain amount followed by sale, and it is that which has been extended. One finds here in this section two things together, and I have no doubt myself that if, as the legislature intended, the act of bankruptcy defined in respect of the seizure and sale be one act done at the instance of the execution-creditor for the purpose of the realization of his security—a security gained by the seizure—so in respect of the continuing in possession the act of bankruptcy is an act of bankruptcy which takes its origin at the seizure and whether the seizure be followed by sale or whether the seizure be followed by possession for 21 days there is only one act of bankruptcy and if there is no fresh sizure, there is no fresh act of bankruptcy."

This decision was followed by the High Court of Bombay in the case of In re Hyderbhai Husseinbhai (2). The learned Judge in that case considered the difference between the wordings of the English Act and the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act and held that the view of the law taken in In re, Beeston (1) was the correct view to take in construing S. 9 (e), Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. S. 9 (e), Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, reads:

"If any of his property has been sold or attached for a period of not less than 21 days in execution of the decree of any payment of money."

It is contended on behalf of the respondents that the law laid down in In re, Beeston (1) cannot be followed in India, because of the difference in the wording of the Acts applicable. The English Bankruptcy Act provides that the sheriff shall hold the property for 21 days. In the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act the words used are "for a period of not less than 21 days."

The argument, as we understand it, is that under the Indian Act, at the conclusion of any period of 21 days or more there is a definite act of bankruptcy on which the creditor is entitled to rely for the purposes of S. 12 (1) (c), Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. We are unable to accept this view The Presidency Towns Insolvency Act was enacted after the delivery of the judgment in In re, Beeston (1) In its general terms it follows the English Law, as regards this particular act of insolvency. If the legislature had intended to introduce such a change in law from the English law as suggested here, it seems to us that they would have done so clearly and unequivocally. The section as drafted merely lays down that if the property has been attached for 21 days or more there has been an act of bankruptcy. That act is clearly complete at the conclusion of the 21 days. The same considerations would apply as were applied in the case of In re, Beeston (1)under the English Act.

In the Bombay case the learned Judge remarks.

"Having regard to the similarity between the Indian and English sections, in fact they are identically the same as pointed out above, I think that the view of the law taken in In re, Beeston (1) is the correct view to take in construing S. 9 (e) of the Act, and that is clear if we look to the reason of the rule as regards the period of 21 days. The reason appears to be, that, if a debtor is unable to satisfy a decree against him and his property is attached in execution, it shows prima facie that he is not in a position to pay his debts and therefore is liable to be adjudged an insolvent in order that his property may be distributed rateably amongst his creditors. But the legislature provides that a certain period after attachment should be given to the debtor as an allowance made to him in order to enable him to pay off the debt and redeem both his property and his character and that period is fixed both in Indian and English Law at 21 days It is then provided that if the debtor fails to do so within that period, he will be held to have committed an act of insolvency. It is therefore clear that the act of insolvency is committed immediately on the expiry of the definitely fixed period of 21 days, and just as the English section does not say that this becomes a recurring or a continuing act of insolvency if the attachment continues for more than 21 days, equally so there is nothing in the Indian section to that effect."

With these remarks we are in general agreement. We do not know why the Indian Legislature used the words "for a period of not less than 21 days" instead of "for a period of 21 days." But we do not think that it can be held that by such a change in the wording they intended to introduce a radical difference between the law in force in India and the law in force in England It has been suggested before us that if we hold against the respondents on the point that has been argued we should not set aside the adjudication order but should remand the case for hearing as to whether the adjudication should be allowed on other grounds. It is clear, however, that in the application for adjudication the sole ground relied on was the attachment of the properties, and we see no reason to allow the raising of fresh grounds now. The result is that we set aside the order of the trial Judge adjudicating the appellants as insolvents, and direct that the application of the respondent be dismissed. The respondent will pay the costs of the appellants in each Court, advocate's fees in each Court 5 gold mohurs.

Transfer of Property Act, S. 123—Doctrine of part performance has no application in the case of donee—Part performance.

The doctrine of part performance on which it is held that a vendee in possession who has paid consideration but has not obtained a registered conveyance cannot be ousted by the vendor or a person claiming under the vendor has no application to the case of the donee : *A I. Lambert—for Appellants.

I. B. Banerjee—for Respondents

Judgment.—The plaintiffs in this suit, who are the respondents in this appeal, filed a suit for a declaration of their rights to, and possession of a piece of land in the following circumstances :

The eleven plaintiffs are the children and grandchildren of an old couple U Soe and Daw The Hmon, who originally owned this land, defendant 1 in the suit, Maung Hla Maung is a grandson of the same old couple to whom Daw The Hmon is alleged to have gifted the land. Saw Yoe Tha, defendant 2, is a person to whom Maung Hla Maung sold this land. It is alleged that Maung Hla Maung was a minor at the time of the transfer, but the question really does not arise. A Chettyar attached this land as belonging to Saw Yoe Tha and had it sold in execution of a decree of his, and Maung San U, defendant 3, was the purchaser at the Court auction sale. The trial Court found that there was a gift. The gift was not effected by a registered instrument as required by S. 123, T. P. Act, but by a report to the revenue surveyor and entry of that report in a pyatpaing This fact itself was denied, but it has been found by the trial Court that such a report had been made, and I accept its finding that Daw The Hmon did report the transfer by gift of this land. The learned trial Judge also held that, as the matter was one of inheritance, the provision of the transfer of Property Act did not apply to the transaction and that therefore there was no need to have a registered gift for this purpose. This view of the law was not accepted by the lower appellate Court, and the learned advocate for the appellants in this Court does not seek to support it. The lower appellate Court then referred to the case of M. L. M. P. Chetty v. Ma Ngwe Sin (1) and distinguished that case from the present one, and holding that a registered document was necessary to effect a gift held that there was no valid and operative gift in favour of Maung Hla Maung. It will be noticed that the sole question for decision is the question of the validity of this gift. If the gift is valid, the plaintiff's suit is bound to fail, irrespective of whether the property still remains the property of Maung Hla Maung or has become the property of Saw Yoe Tha The lower appellate Court having taken this view decreed the case in favour of the plaintiffs, and the defendants in the suit now come up in appeal. The facts being more or less admitted the sole question for me to consider is whether the ruling in M. L. M. P Chetty v. Ma Ngwe Sin (1) applies and whether the distinction drawn by the learned Judge of the lower appellate Court is a sound one.

He distinguishes that case from the present one on the ground that there was no evidence of Maung Hla Maung's possession or enjoyment of the property and that all that could be said in favour of Maung Hla Maung was that his father So Maung worked the land for about two years. Po Kyaing was admittedly in possession of the land after Soe Maung's death, and he says he was so in possession with the consent of the heirs. The learned Judge therefore held that there was no valid gift and no such possession as would make the ruling in 1 Rangoon applicable. There is another case reported in 1 Rangoon, dealing with gifts unperfected by registered instrument and I shall shortly refer to both the cases. The first Ma Shin v. Maung Hmna (2) is a judgment of my brother Heald, where there was a gift of immovable property made as in this case by a report to the revenue surveyor. There is, however, this distinction between that case and the present one, that all the other heirs of the donor signed the report as witnesses to the transaction and of possession being given to the donee. The learned Judge held that in the circumstances the heirs were estopped from denying the donee's title. It will be noticed that that decision is an application of the doctrine of estoppel.

In the other case of M. P. L. M. P. Chetty v. Ma Ngwe Sin (1) also the gift was purported to have been made by a report to the revenue authorities. The gift was made by the grandmother of the donee. After the death of the grandfather who had also joined in the report, the property was being managed by the father of the minor donee Maung Ba Shewe, who, as the learned Judge deciding the case found, collusively transferred the land as orasa son, with the concurrence of his mother Ma Le Ywa, one of the donors, to the Chettyar firm. On these facts the learned Judge held that the minor donee having attained majority and being in possession of the property it was not open to the transferee of the land to claim possession If the reasonings of this case is that Maung Ba Shwe being in effect also party to the gift, the Chettyar firm who claimed under him was, as in the earlier case decided by my brother Heald estopped from denying the validity of the gift, the ruling may be considered as an application merely of the doctrine of estoppel. But if that ruling is intended to lay down a general principle that in all cases of gift where the gift is not effected by a registered instrument but the donee happens to be in possession for a fairly long time, it is open to the donee, on the analogy of a person buying property for valuable consideration who has been let in possession of it, to resist the claim of the legal owner, then I must express my dissent from that ruling. The doctrine of part performance on which the Indian High Courts have held that a vendee in possession who has paid consideration but has not obtained a registered conveyance could not be ousted by the vendor or a person claiming under the vendor, has no application to the case of a donee That doctrine is based on the application of equitable principles and has for its foundation the maxims of equity. But where there is equal equity, the law must prevail Story on Equity, Edn. 3, p 36. A Court of equity refuses to interfere, either for relief or discovery, against a bonafide purchaser of the legal estate for a valuable consideration, without notice of the adverse title, because his equity is much superior to that of the others. The last sentence in para. 64C is instructive:

"So the purchaser must have paid his purchase money before notice, for otherwise he will not be protected and if he had paid a portion only, he will be protected pro tanto only."

Showing clearly that it is essential that there must be a superior equity in favour of the person who invokes the aid of an equitable principle. One heir to whom property is given to the exclusion of others, has no superior equity because all the heirs are equally entitled to the favour of the ancestor. The other and more direct maxim on which the doctrine is based is that equity looks upon that as done which ought to have been done, so that if there had been a part performance it is the duty of the vendor to perfect the purchaser's title by a conveyance and equity looks upon that as done which ought to have been done. The true meaning of the maxim is explained in para 64G, where it is stated that equity treats the subject matter as to collateral consequences and incidents in the same manner as if the final acts contemplated by the parties had been executed exactly as they ought to have been. The important part is the following sentence:

"But equity will not thus consider things in favour of all persons but only in favour of such as have a right to pray that the acts might be done."

It will thus be seen that whereas a vendee who has paid consideration has a right to call upon the vendor to specifically perform his agreement by execution of the necessary convevance, a gratuitious transferee like a donee cannot compel the donor to perfect the donee's title by executing a registered conveyance and the equitable maxim and the doctrine of part performance based on it becomes inapplicable in the case of a mere donee. As I am in a sense dissenting from that ruling, I would, if it were necessary, have placed the matter before the Chief Justice for the purpose of referring the question to a Full Bench, but as my judgment is open to a Letters Patent appeal leave to file which I shall certainly grant if an application is made for that purpose, it is unnecessary to follow that course.

It is thus not necessary to decide the question of possession which was argued by Mr. Lambert for the appellants. He contended that possession was with his client as long as it was possible and argued that on the evidence, Po Kyaing must be deemed to have worked the land on agreeing to pay rent to Maung Hla Maung. In the view I have taken, it is unnecessary to decide this point, and if the Bench by which the appeal is likely to be heard takes a different view of the ruling cited, the point of possession may then be argued before that Bench. I therefore dismiss this appeal with costs.

D. R Maganlall Brothers—Respondents

First Appeal No. 257 of 1928, Decided on 19th March 1929, from judgment of Original Side in Civil Regular No. 377 of 1927.

(a) Transfer of Property Act, S. 130—Scope.

Transfers of an actionable claim, whether outright transfers or by way of security, are governed by S. 130 : 37 Bom. 198 (P.C.), Foll. [P 319 C 1]

(b) Transfer of Property Act, S. 130—Debtor by letter authorizing his creditor to draw money due to him (debtor) and depositing securities with him (creditor)—No charge or lien on money is created.

A charge or lien on actionable claim can only be created by a written assignment under the provisions of S. 130. [P 319 C 2]

A debtor by a letter authorized his creditor to draw the money that may be due to him and declared that he had deposited with him (creditor) certain securities.

Held : that no charge or lien was created on the money . 37 Bom. 198 (P.C.), Rel. on. [P 319 C 2]

Hay—for Appellants.

Doctor– for Respondents.

Judgment.—The respondents, D R. Maganlall Brothers, carrying on business in partnership, by their partner, Maganlall Popetbhai, field a suit on the original side of this Court against one Maung Po Nyan, Abdul Gunny and four others. They claimed that Po Nyan had executed in their favour four promissory notes on which at the time of suit the sum of Rs 11,285-13-0 was due. They further claimed that on 23rd June 1927, Po Nyan had by a deed created in their favour a lien or first charge on all sums due by the Public Works Department to Po Nyan. In the suit as originally framed, Po Nyan and Abdul Gunny alone were the defendants, and Abdul Gunny was joined on the ground that he had obtained an order of attachment before judgment on the moneys lying to the credit of Po Nyan in the Public Works Department. The other four defendants were added subsequently on the ground that they also had attached the same moneys

The plaintiffs asked for a decree for the amount due against defendant 1, and for a declaration as against the other defendants that the plaintiffs had a first lien or charge on all sums due by the Public Works Department to defendant 1. The plaintiffs were given a decree in accordance with the prayer in the plaint by the trial Court The present appeal against this decree has been filed only by defendants 4, 5 and 6, A. E. Nagoor Meera, N N. Chettyar Firm and S. R. A. S Sidambaram Nadar.

The first ground in the memorandum of appeal is to the effect that the debts alleged to be due by Maung Po Nyan to the plaintiffs have not been established ; but this ground has not been pressed before us. The promissory notes were produced and were sworn to by Maganlall Popetbhai and Po Nyan has not denied executing them We see no reason, therefore, for interfering with the decree for the payment of money by Po Nyan. It has, however, strongly been urged before us that the declaration in favour of the respondents of the lien on the moneys in question was not justified. On this point it has been urged that the plaintiffs did not obtain the execution of the document on which they rely ; that in any case they have not proved that it was executed before the attachment by Abdul Gunny ; and, finally, that, even if the document was executed, as alleged, no lien or charge has been established.

Each one of these contentions has been disputed on behalf of the respondents, but we are of opinion that this appeal can be decided by a consideration of the third contention only. On 17th June 1927, Po Nyan executed a power-of-attorney in favour of Maganlall Popetbhai, and on 23rd June he is alleged to have written the document on which the respondents chiefly rely This document reads as follows :

Rangoon 23rd June 1927.

" Maganlall Popetbhai, Esq.,
No. 81 in 28th Street,
Rangoon.

Dear Sirs,

With reference to the loans received by me the undersigned on promotes hereunder mentioned and marked ' A ' I have deposited with you the security deposit receipts hereunder mentioned marked ' B '—as collateral security and authorize you to draw the same when the work is completed and for which I have executed a power-of-attorney in the name of Maganlall Popetbhai dated 17th June 1927 and recorded as No. 1381 of 1927 of the office of the Sub-Registrar of Rangoon and I hereby declare that I have given as security all bills that I have to draw from the Executive Engineer, Public Works Department Rangoon, in connexion with my contract for construction of clerks' quarters at Pauktaw now and in the future and also authorized Mr. Maganlall Popetbhai to draw the same bills and credit the same to my account with Popetbhai Dayabhai and Sons and D. R. Maganlall Brothers of No. 81 in 28th Street Rangoon.

Yours faithfully,
(Sd.) Po Nyan,
23rd June 1927.
No. 18, Obo Street, Kemmendine. "

The Schedule " A," attached to the letter contains a list of five promissory notes and the Schedule " B, " contains a list of three items, namely one challan, one receipt and a deposit with the Executive Engineer, Rangoon Division. It was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Mulraj Khatan v. Vishwanath Prabhuram (1), that transfers of an actionable claim, whether outright transfers, or by way of security, were governed by the provisions of S. 130, T. P. Act. In that case a debtor held certain insurances on his life. He deposited the policy with regard to one of these insurances with the plaintiff in the case to secure moneys due by him to the plaintiff, and subsequently he executed a formal deed of assignment of this policy to the defendant.

It was held that, in view of the provisions of S. 130, T P. Act, the assignment to the plaintiff was of no effect in creating a charge. At p. 210 of their judgment, their Lordships remark :

" In the present case the respondent bases his claim on a deposit of the policy and not under a written transfer, and claims that this creates a charge on the policy. The section specifically enacts that such a proceeding shall not have any such effect ; such a charge can only be created by a written document. It follows that the respondent acquired no right whatever to the policy or its proceeds by reason of the deposit. "

Under the definition given in S. 3, T. P. Act, " actionable claim " includes a claim to any debt other than a debt secured by mortgage of immovable property, or by hypothecation or pledge of moveable property. In the present case the respondents claim a charge or lien on the money due by the Public Works Department, that is to say, they claim a lien on an actionable claim, and the decision in Mulraj Khatan's case (1) is clearly to the effect that such a charge or lien can only be effected by a written assignment under the provisions of S. 130, T. P. Act.

We are unable to read the document on which the respondents rely in this case as being a document of such a nature. It is merely a letter by Po Nyan in which he authorizes not the respondents but Maganlall Popetbhai, one of the respondents, to draw the moneys that may be due to him from the Public Works Department, and declares that he has deposited with him certain securities. Mr Maganlall Popetbhai is authorized to credit the sums he draws with Popetbhai Dayabhai and Sons and with the defendants. But the document clearly does not assign the debt due to Po Nyan to the respondents, Maganlall Brothers, and the Privy Council case already cited is clear authority for holding that the deposit of the document creates no charge or lien at all on the debts. The letter in effect makes Maganlal Popetbhai solely responsible for the recovery of these debts, but it does not assign the debts due to him or to anyone.

We have been referred on behalf of the respondents to a number of English cases, but it was remarked by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mulraj Khatan's case (1) that in India Courts are bound by the provisions of S 130, T P. Act. Towards the conclusion of their judgment, their Lordships observe :

(1) [1912] 37 Bom. 198=17 I. C. 627=40 I. A. 24 (P.C.).

"The decision of the Court below was therefore erroneous. The error arose from the learned Judges not having appreciated that the positive language of the section precluded the application in India of the principles of English law on which they based their decision."

For these reasons we are of opinion that the respondents did not establish that they had any charge or lien on the debts in question We, therefore, modify the decree of the trial Court by deleting therefrom the declaration of a lien or charge in favour of the respondents. The appellants are entitled to their costs in this appeal In the trial Court, defendant 1, Po Nyan, will pay the plaintiffs' costs, and for the rest the parties will bear their own costs.

S. A. L. S. Chettyar Firm — Appellant.

Daw Saw and another—Respondents.

First Appeal No. 99 of 1929, Decided on 22nd May 1929, from judgment of original side in Civil Regular No. 532 1928.

Contract Act, S 178—K obtaining jewellery from lawful owner by fraudulent pretence that he has prospective purchaser but with dishonest intention of raising money on it himself—Jewellery pledged by K—Jewellery is obtained by fraud and pledge is invalid.

If K obtains jewellery from the owner by means of a fraudulent pretence that he has a prospective purchaser and with the dishonest intention of raising money on it himself K obtains the jewellery by fraud and if he pledges it with a person, the pledge is invalid and the person cannot retain the jewellery : A. I. R. 1922 L. B. 17, Ref. [P 320 C 2]

Aiyangar—for Appellant.

Judgment.—The main facts of this case are not now disputed and it is only the legal effect of those facts which is in question Respondent 2 Ma Ma Gyi went to respondent 1 and induced her to hand over certain articles of jewellery on a pretence that she had a prospective purchaser who desired to have inspection of the jewellery. Respondent 1 handed the jewellery to respondent 2, who in fact had no prospective purchaser, and respondent 2 pledged the jewellery next day to appellant Respondent 2 was prosecuted and convicted of criminal breach of trust. Respondent 2 then sued appellant for the return of the jewellery, and a decree has been passed in her favour.

Appellant appeals on grounds that a person who is in possession of goods of any sort can make a valid pledge of such goods provided that the person who accepts the pledge acts in good faith and that the goods have not been obtained from the owner by means of an offence or by fraud. He suggests that because respondent 2 was convicted of criminal breach of trust and not of cheating, the Magistrate must have found that she did not obtain possession of the jewellery by means of an offence. He cites the case of Annamalai Chetty v. Mrs Basch (1), in which a goldsmith to whom jewellery was entrusted for sale, pledged the jewellery and it was held that because the person who accepted the pledge acted in good faith he was entitled to retain the jewels in spite of the fact that the goldsmith was convicted of criminal breach of trust.

One of the questions to be decided in such cases is whether or not the goods were obtained from the owner by means of a criminal offence or fraud. If they were so obtained the pledge is invalid and the person who has accepted the pledge must return the goods to the true owner. It may be true, as appellant suggests, that such a provision of law is likely to cause serious loss and dislocation of business to money-lenders who act in good faith and with no suspicion that the person making the pledge has obtained the goods by means of an offence or fraud, but it is what S. 178, Contract Act says, and it is therefore the law. In this case we are satisfied that respondent 2 obtained the jewellery from respondent 1 by means of a fraudulent pretence that she actually had a prospective purchaser and with the dishonest intention of raising money on it for herself, and that therefore she obtained the jewellery by fraud. It follows that the pledge was invalid and that appellant cannot retain the jewellery. We therefore dismiss the appeal.

Criminal Revn. No. 64-B of 1929, Decided on 13th May 1929, from order of Spl. Power Mag., Shwebo, in Criminal Trial No. 118 of 1928.

Criminal P. C., S. 439 (4)—Accused acquitted—No erroneous recording or omission of evidence—High Court cannot direct retrial by holding that on evidence as it is accused ought not to have been acquitted.

High Court interfering in revision may set aside an order of acquittal and direct a retrial owing to non-recording of evidence or improper recording of inadmissible evidence but where there is no question of evidence having been erroneously omitted or of evidence having been erroneously recorded and the High Court is asked to hold that on the evidence the accused ought not to have been acquitted no order directing a retrial can be made : *A. Sanyal—for Applicant.

Judgment.—The respondent, Maung Chit Hpu, has been tried and acquitted by the Special Power Magistrate, Shwebo, of an offence under Ss 376-511, I. P. C. The present application has been filed by the complainant, Ma Nyein in revision of this order of acquittal I do not see how this application can be entertained. There is no question of evidence having been erroneously omitted or of evidence having been erroneously recorded. The evidence is there and I am asked to hold that on that evidence and no other the respondent ought not to have been acquitted. This seems to me to go very near to saying that he ought to have been convicted and that is a thing which I hold I have no power to do in a revision application. The point has been dealt with by the Privy Council in a very recent case, namely, Kishen Singh v. Emperor (1). In that case a man was charged with murder (S. 302, I. P. C.); he was convicted under S. 304, and an application for revision was made asking the High Court to find him guilty of murder. In this case the High Court of Allahabad did so, and their Lordships of the Privy Council regarded the case as one which justified them in interfering even though it was a criminal matter, for they pointed out S. 439 (4), Criminal P. C., forbids the altering of an acquittal into a conviction in a revision proceeding.

Were I to say that this case has got to be retried on the same evidence, I should be definitely saying, "On this evidence the man should not have been acquitted," and there is no difference between saying that and saying that he ought to have been convicted, and few Magistrates would be able to retry the accused on the same evidence with my dictum staring them in the face and sufficient independence of spirit to give the man an unbiased trial. Human nature must be taken to be what it is. My attention has been called to the case of Wazir Kunjra v. Emperor (2). In this case a two Judge Bench of the Patna High Court took up in revision the case of a man who had been acquitted, and altered that acquittal into a conviction. They did not mention S 439 (4), Criminal P. C., in their judgment and appear to have overlooked it entirely.

I can well understand that cases may occur in which, owing to non-recording of evidence, or improper recording of inadmissible evidence a High Court interfering in revision might set aside an order of acquittal and direct a re-trial, which the Magistrate before whom the case came could deal with in a perfectly impartial manner. In the present case where there is no erroneous recording or shutting out of evidence, should I direct a re-trial, it would be for all practical purposes the same thing as sending the case to a Magistrate with directions to convict and this I do not see my way to do.. The applicant has still got plenty of time to move the Local Government to file an appeal against the acquittal if she thinks fit, and this in my opinion is the proper remedy if she is dissatisfied with the acquittal. I dismiss this application for revision.

P A. Pakir Mahomed—Accused—Appellant.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 1192 of 1926, Decided on 3rd December 1926, from order of Dist. Magistrate, Rangoon, D/- 9th August 1926, in Criminal Regular No. 84 of 1926.

 (a) Penal Code, S. 480—Ingredients enunciated—Prosecution need not prove intent to defraud—But accused proving want of such intention is entitled to acquittal.

In order to establish a case under S. 480 the prosecution must prove that the accused marked goods, that he did so in a manner reasonably calculated to cause it to be believed that the goods so marked were the manufacture or merchandise of some other person and that such goods are not the manufacture or merchandise of such person. It is unnecessary for the prosecution to prove that an accused in such a case had acted with intent to defraud; should the latter, however, prove that he acted without intent to defraud, he is entitled to be acquitted [P 322 C 2, P 323 C 1]

(b) Trade mark—Trade mark cannot be registered but may be acquired by user.

In India there is no method by which a trade-mark may be registered, but property in or right in respect of a mark may be acquired by user. [P 323 C 2]

(c) Penal Code, S. 482—Person not necessarily manufacturer acquiring rights in respect of the mark can prosecute.

A person, not necessarily a manufacturer, who uses a mark for the purpose of his trade, may acquire rights to and in respect of that mark. Where in the course of a user extending over a large number of years, goods are sold by a firm bearing a certain mark which had been known to purchasers by that mark, a prosecution would also lie at the instance of the firm : 37 Cal. 201, Rel. on. [P 324 C 1]

(d) Penal Code, S. 482—Corporate body may be prosecuted.

A body corporate such as a firm may be prosecuted for an offence under Ss. 480 and 482 : 7 L. B. R. 306, Ref. [P 324 C 2]

(e) Penal Code, S. 482—Want of proof that purchasers were deceived does not prove want of intention to defraud—State of mind of accused should be established to discharge onus of proving want of intention to defraud.

Even though no cases of purchasers having been deceived by the use of false trade-mark are proved, this fact standing alone is insufficient to justify the contention that the accused acted without intent to defraud. The state of mind of the persons responsible for he introduction of the trade-mark is a most relevant fact which can be established by evidence. In the absence of such evidence, the accused cannot be held to have discharged the onus of proving want of intention which was upon him. [P 330 C 2]

 (f) Penal Code, Ss. 480 and 482—Even trader with some claim to mark cannot adopt it if it causes infringement of other's mark—Actual physical resemblance not sole consideration — If mark bears particular name in market, another mark bearing same name cannot be used.

A trader even with some claim to the mark or name cannot adopt a trade-mark which causes his goods to bear the same name in the market as those of a rival trader. If a purchaser looking at the article offered to him would naturally be led, from the mark impressed on it, to suppose it to be the production of the rival manufacturer, and would purchase it in that belief, the Court considers the use of such a mark to be fraudulent. The actual physical resemblance of the two marks is not to be the sole question for consideration. If the goods of a manufacturer have from the mark or device he has used become known in the market by a particular name, the adoption by a rival trader of any mark which will cause his goods to bear the same name in the market may be as much a violation of the rights of that rival as the actual copy of his device : Seix v. Provezende, (1866) 1 Ch. 192, Foll. Case Law discussed. [P 324 C 2, 325 C 1]

O. De Glanville—for Appellant.

Mac Donnell—for the Crown

Judgment.—The appellants are the firm of R E. Mahomed Cassim and are represented by their Manager, P. A. Pakir Mahomed. This firm was convicted upon a prosecution entered into at the instance of a firm called The Trading Co. (late Hegt & Co.) for using a false trade-mark under S 480 read with S. 482, I. P. C., and were fined the sum of Rs. 800 or three months rigorous imprisonment. The material portion of these two sections are as follows :

Section 480. " Whoever marks any goods ..... in a manner reasonably calculated to cause it to be believed that the goods so marked ..... are the manufacture or merchandise of a person whose manufacture or merchandise they are not, is said to use a false trade-mark."

Section 482. " Whoever uses any false trade mark ..... shall, unless he proves that he acted without intent to defraud, be punished with imprisonment ..... for a term which may extend to one year or with a fine or with both."

It is clear, therefore, that in order to establish a case, the prosecution must prove : (1) that the accused marked goods; (2) that he did so in a manner reasonably calculated to cause it to be believed that the goods so marked were the manufacture or merchandise of some other person; (3) that such goods are not the manufacture or merchandise of such person.

It is to be observed that it is unnecessary for the prosecution to prove that an accused in such a case had acted with interest to defraud; should the latter, however, prove that he acted without intent to defraud, he is entitled to be acquitted.

It may be stated generally that the law relating to criminal prosecutions in this country does not differ from that relating to civil proceedings, except that in a civil case it is necessary for the plaintiff to prove that the defendant acted with a fraudulent intention.

The prosecutors are a firm of importers of blankets and other similar goods who have carried on business in Rangoon for a large number of years. One particular line of cotton blanket imported by them in considerable quantities from Holland bears a mark stamped upon it consisting of a crown surrounded by an inscription, the letters of which are within two lines which encircle the crown in the shape of an oval. The size of the oval is something slightly less than three inches from side to side and something less than two inches from top to bottom. Exs. 1 and 4 show this mark

The appellants also carry on business in Rangoon and it is, I think, common ground that some time about the month of July of this year they put on the market a line of cotton blanket said to be somewhat inferior quality but of similar appearance, make and weight to the respondents' blanket.

Stamped upon this blanket is a mark of similar shape to that I have described and consisting of an impression of a Fez surrounded by an inscription delineated precisely in the manner I have described as appearing on the mark of the prosecutors The size of the appellant' mark is something over three inches from side to side and something over two inches from top to bottom. The inscription on the prosecutor's mark consists in their name at the top " Van Hegt & Co.," at the bottom " Emschede." The inscription on the appellants' mark consists in the word " R. E. Mahomed & Co." and at the bottom the word " Rangoon."

It was contended on behalf of the prosecutors' firm, viz., the respondents in this appeal, that by long user they had acquired the right to use this particular mark upon their goods and that the appellants' firm by putting upon their blankets the mark I have described were doing so in a manner reasonably calculated to deceive purchasers and others into believing that goods so marked by them were the merchandise of the respondents' firm. It is to be observed that in India there is no method by which a trade-mark may be registered, but property in or right in respect of a mark may be acquired by user It is not disputed here that the respondent firm have acquired the sole right to use their mark. It will also be convenient to state here that it is not contended on behalf of the respondent firm that the mark of the appellant firm if examined or if looked at side by side with the mark of the respondent firm would be calculated to deceive. What is said, however, is that by long user the mark has come to be well known as the " topee " mark, and that, therefore, as admittedly the mark of the appellant firm is known as " top " or " Turkish topee " mark, persons requiring a blanket of the topee mark might well be deceived into purchasing the appellants' blankets. The case for the appellants shortly was that the mark of the respondent is not known as the topee mark but rather as " taz " or " crown " mark and that, therefore, no confusion could arise. In any event it was also said that no confusion could arise for the marks are easily distinguishable; furthermore it was contended on their behalf that even if there was evidence upon which a Court could come to the conclusion that their mark was reasonably calculated to cause it to be believed that their goods were other person's goods yet they had at all material times acted without intent to defraud.

The law upon the matters under review is clearly indicated in certain reported cases to which I propose to refer before dealing with the evidence Certain points, however, which lie upon the fringe of the case should, however, be dealt with before the main questions arising are considered.

There is no doubt, I think, that the appellants would be entitled to maintain civil proceedings for protection of their trade-mark provided that they can satisfy the Court that by user their goods have become known by the name of that particular mark. It is true that the respondents are not the manufacturers of the blankets in question, but the case of Jwala Prasad v. Munna Lal (1) is I think sufficient authority for the proposition that a person, not necessarily a manufacturer, who uses a mark for the purpose of his trade, may acquire rights to and in respect of that mark. In the present case I am quite satisfied upon the evidence that in the course of a user extending over a large number of years, blankets manufactured by Hegt & Co and sold by the respondents and bearing the mark shown on Exs. 1 and 4 had been known to purchasers by those marks. A prosecution would, therefore, also lie at the instance of the respondent firm

In this connexion I think it is also clear that as a general rule persons dealing in blankets or purchasing them for their own use refer to them by their marks. This practice is common in the East in the case of many other articles besides blankets I need only mention such well known marks as those representing for example a dagger or an elephant

It is also clear on the evidence that the appellants' blankets have a very large sale all over Burma not only in the towns but in the country districts. They are sent out from the larger dealers in Rangoon and are distributed through various small dealers in the province until they reach the hands of the ultimate purchasers. The latter are generally speaking persons in somewhat humble circumstances.

On an inspection of the two marks under review, it is apparent that in ordinary or colloquial English the mark of the respondents would be correctly described as a "crown," in or with an oval, or simply a "crown" Similarly the appellants' mark would be described as a "Fez" or "Turkish Cap." In Urdu the word for a crown is "Taj" and in Burmese "Tharapu." In Platt's Urdu Classical Hindi and English Dictionary, Taj is translated inter alia as a crown diadem, tiara, a highly crowned cap, crest, tuft plume. The suggestion on behalf of the respondents is that their mark has by long custom been termed "topi mark" or "topi marka" It is not said on their behalf that the word "topi" is a correct and comprehensive word indicating a Crown, but what is suggested is that in this province where so many languages are spoken and so many bastard types of languages have sprung up, the word "topi" has been applied generally to the appellant's mark. On referring to the same dictionary, it will be seen that the word "topi" is translated as a hat, cap . . . . . cover or cap (as of a telescope), head or top (of a thing). Thus from a purely etymological point of view, there is some slight support for the suggestion that a "taj" (or crown) which may be correctly translated or described as a high crown cap, might become known as a cap or even turkish cap There is also no doubt that a body corporated such as the appellant firm may be prosecuted for an offence under Ss. 480 and 482, I P. C · see Seena M. Haniff & Co. v. Liptons Ltd. (2).

The case for the respondents is that they have brought themselves within the principles laid down in the well known case of Seixo v. Provezende (3), which have been followed among others in the more recent cases of In re, Worthington & Co's trade-mark (4) and In re, the application of Pomril Ltd., (5). The principles I have referred to are correctly summarized in the headnote to Seixo v. Provezende (3) as follows . "a.

"Nor can a trader even with some claim to the mark or name adopt a trade-mark which causes his goods to bear the same name in the market as those of a rival trader."

The learned Magistrate who tried this case quoted the following passage from the judgment of Lord Cranworth, L. C., which appears to be as good law to-day as it was in the year 1866 when it was delivered. The passage begins at p. 196 of the report as follows :

"If a purchaser looking at the article offerred to him would naturally be led, from the mark impressed on it, to suppose it to be the production of the rival manufacturer, and would purchase it, in that belief the Court considers the use of such a mark to be fraudulent. But I go further. I do not consider the actual physical resemblance of the two marks to be the sole question for consideration. If the goods of a manufacturer have from the mark or device he has used, become known in the market by a particular name, I think that the adoption by a rival trader of any mark which will cause his goods to bear the same name in the market, may be as much a violation of the rights of that rival as the actual copy of his device."

The first question therefore for me to consider appears to be as to whether the blankets in question have become known in the market as the "topi" blanket or "topi mark" blanket

The second question is whether the adoption by the appellant firm of this mark will reasonably cause their goods to bear the same name in the market and thus cause it to be believed that the goods so marked are those of the respondent's firm.

In this connexion I have been referred to the well known case of Orr Erving & Co. v. Johstone & Co. (6) where the judgment of Fry, J , (as he then was) was affirmed by the House of Lords. At p. 447 of the nisi prious report, Fry, J., cited with approval the judgment of Lord O' Hagan in Singer Machine Manufacturers v. Wilson (7) and went on to say

"It appears to me, therefore, that I ought to hold that if one man will appropriate to himself a material and substantial part of the ticket which another man has used for the purpose of indicating his goods, he ought so to appropriate it, and with such precautions as that the reasonable probability of error should be avoided."

It is true that there was some evidence of fraud in that case but the passage I have quoted seems to me to be of general application. I would point out that Fry, J., had already come to the conclusion that the one mark :

"would not be taken for the other by dealers or purchasers of ordinary prudence."

If I come to the conclusion that both the questions I have indicated must be answered in the affirmative, it will then be necessary to consider whether the appellant firm have acted at all material time without an intent to defraud.

On behalf of the respondent firm a mass of evidence is given both oral and documentary.

I do not propose to deal in detail with the evidence but it will be sufficient to say that some 13 or 14 Rangoon traders in piecegoods were called and the result of their evidence is that the mark of the appellant firm has been known to them on the blanket market as the topi mark. (His lordship after considering the evidence, proceeded.) The main intrusion directed against the respondent's evidence is that it was given by traders only and not by actual consumers or purchasers. There is, no doubt, some force in this suggession, for it has been said over and over again in decided cases that it is the interest of the purchaser and especially the ignorant purchaser in a country such as this which has mainly to be considered. I need only refer to two such cases . Badische Aniline v. Maneckji Shapurji (8),

Where Sergeant, C. J., said .

"The question in a case of this description is not what would be the effects on brokers or even dealers in Bombay . but how the label would be likely to strike incautious or unwary purchasers, such as are to be found more particularly in the moffussil."

This decision was approved in Nemichand v. C W. Wallace (9). As was pointed out, however, on behalf of the respondent firm, in the Madhavji Dharmasey Manufacturing Co., Ltd., v. Central India Spinning Weaving and Manufacturing Co., Ltd, (10), this point was discussed in the judgment of Scott, C. J , at p. 62. The learned Chief Justice there stated :

"It is said that the witness for the plaintiffs were middle-men or commission agents and not the ultimate buyers and that the witnesses would not be deceived. To this the answer is that their testimony as to the form in which order for the plaintiff's cloth is usually given is good proof of the association formed in the minds of ultimate buyers between the figures and the article produced by the plaintiffs see also in this point. Level v. Goodwin (11) "

In the present case, a mass of evidence was also tendered consisting of orders from country districts and entries of books in respect of such orders all describing the respondents' mark on the blanket as "topi" blanket or "cap" blanket. It is said therefore that if a small dealer in the district describes the respondents blankets as "topi" or "cap" blanket, the inference is almost irresistible that these blankets are so described by the out of the way purchaser. There is also a certain amount of evidence that actual purchasers in Rangoon described the respondents' blankets as "topi" mark blankets This testimony was, however, somewhat vague and open to criticism.

There was, therefore, called on behalf of the respondent firm, evidence, which, if believed, and if it stood alone, would justify a Court in coming to the conclusion that the first question should be answered in the affirmative. With regard to the second question there was no evidence at all called on behalf of the respondent firm to show that the purchaser or dealers have in fact been deceived by the mark of the appellants' firm into purchasing goods of the latter in the belief that they were purchasing the respondent's goods. It seems to me, however, that when once there is evidence that the mark of the respondents' firm is generally known as the "topi" mark, it will not be difficult also to come to the conclusion that confusion may arise owing to the appellants' mark The point was dealt with by Lord Watson in the Orr Ewing case (6) At p 231 of the House of Lords' report he says .

"When a prominent and substantial part of a long and well known trade-mark, denoting the manufacture of a particular firm, appears as a prominent and substantial part of the new trade-mark of a rival, it seems reasonable to anticipate that the goods of the latter may be mistaken for, or sold as, the manufacture of the firm to which the older trade-mark belongs."

It is said and was urged with some force that looked at side by side, no purchaser could be decieved That I think is clearly proved with regard to dealers and others from India connected with the trade. It is also, I think, proved that a consumer of education and experience who exercises care and skill in his or her purchases might well not be deceived. But blankets of different marks are not always looked at side by side nor are the majority of purchasers persons of skill or intelligence.

Mr. DeGlanville, however, relied on this fact as assisting his contention that the mark of his client's firm ought not to be held reasonably calculated to decieve. Upon this part of the case I would again refer to the judgment of Fry, J., (at p. 448 of the nisi prius report) The learned Judge in considering whether the defendents had appropriated with due precautions to prevent mistake, and he says:

"In considering and answering that question, it strikes one at first that they have thought fit to print the name of their firm upon their ticket in a language which can be read, undoubtedly, by the original purchasers of their goods, but which cannot be read by the ultimate purchasers in the Indian markets, and therefore the protection which would be given by a name capable of being read, wherever the goods go is not afforded by their ticket. According to the evidence before me when the goods reach Bombay, they pass generally into the hands of merchants dealing in a wholesale way, they are then distributed through the intervention of a series of middlemen, who it appears, form a numerous class, employed in the distribution of the goods over the country. In my judgment, the first class of purchasers would probably not be deceived. But, upon the whole of the evidence before me, I think that there is a strong probability that the ultimate purchasers, the weavers who buy the goods in the country villages, and probably also the retail dealers who sell to them would be deceived by the defendant's ticket. One of the witnesses, who is a dealer in English yarn in Bombay, said that, in his opinion the native buyers would be deceived, because, they "would ask for 'Bhe Hathi' and there," (that is, as I understand him, on the defendant's ticket) are Bhe Hathe."

Furthermore the present case is a criminal prosecution and intent to defraud is not an ingredient in the offence

On this part of the case, so far as the evidence for the prosecution is concerned it seems to me that there was evidence, if believed, upon which I could come to the conclusion that the effect of the trade-mark of the appellant's firm is reasonably calculated to deceive. On behalf of the appellants a large body of evidence was also called, and there is no doubt that the witnesses were drawn from both retail and wholesale merchants and brokers. Some of these witnesses say substantially that the respondents' mark is known as the "taj" mark. It is also in evidence that the appellants' mark was also known as "topi" or "Turkish cap" mark, and further a number of exhibits were produced bearing the marks similar to those in dispute, as to which witnesses said that no confusion in fact arose. I will deal with this contention later. Evidence on the latter point was stronger and more definite than that called to establish the fact that the respondent's mark was known as something other than the "topi" mark.

I would refer to the evidence of some of the most important of these witnesses.

A man called Kassim Ismail (D. W. 1) a dealer in piecegoods in Surti Bazar, who sells the appellants' blankets, said that he also knew the mark on Ex. 4, but that he had never sold them (viz. respondents' firms blankets) He stated that Exs. 1 and 4 are known as "taj" mark and that Ex. 2 is known as "topi" mark.

A man called Eusoof (D. W. 6) stated that he called Ex 4 "tarapu" in Burmese and "taj" in Hindusthani. He added that he sold it to the jungle people who asked for tarapu tazeik" (or crown mark).

A man called Mutu Garlan Ahmed (D. W 9) a partner in the firm of Malim Brothers and a merchant in the Surti Bazar said that he knew Ex. 4 and that it was called "taj" mark and added that he had known it since 1899 and had always known it as "taj" mark. He said that he had never heard it called "topi" mark This was perhaps the strongest piece of evidence on behalf of the appellant firm. Several witnesses for the appellants said that they called the respondents' mark "crown" or "taj" or "tarapu" but did not go so far as to say what the mark was generally to purchasers or traders.

Another witness called Aga Ahmed Shirazee (D. W. 10) says that he had never heard of topi mark blankets He said in cross-examination, however, that he dealt with considerably higher class of persons than those who would be likely to buy the blankets of the respondents' firm.

A man called Dada Saheb (D. W. 11), general merchant, who had dealt in the respondents' blankets said that he had never heard of the topi mark blanket.

A great point was made on behalf of the appellants that other similar marks caused no confusion. Exs. A, B and C are such. So also are Exs. 6 and 7, two pieces of velvet one with obvious crown upon it and the other with a Turkish Fez Exs. 8 and 9, two pieces of serge, one having a coloured crown upon the card pattern cover, and the other having a Fez, stamped upon it called a golden cap; Exs. 11 and 12 samples of long cloth, one with a number of crowns stamped upon it, and the other with highly coloured and large label showing a blue Fez.

It was said that no confusion had arisen with regard to these respective marks. No doubt that is perfectly true but as was pointed out by the learned Magistrate non constat that if the matter was tested, a Court might not hold that the purchasers might be deceived by one or other of the marks In each instance, I think it would be possible (as it is of course in the present case) to point to features of difference in each of these marks, but, however that may be, there is no doubt at all that evidence of this kind is of some significance. I would point out, however, that the case for the respondent is, not that purchasers would be deceived by the appearance of the mark, but that they would be deceived into buying the appellants goods because the mark upon these goods was well known by the same name as the mark on the respondents' goods. It is further pointed out that the articles I have referred to would be likely to be purchased by persons of more experience and intelligence than those desiring to buy the cheap cotton blankets in question. There appears to me to be some force in this

The witnesses called on behalf of the appellants therefore did contradict to some extent the testimony of the respondents' witnesses, and it will be necessary for me to consider whether the testimony of the witnesses on behalf of the latter is displaced by that of the former. I would point out, however, that from first to last no light whatever was thrown by the appellant firm upon the circumstances under which their mark came to be adopted. It was suggested that as the appellant firm were represented by an individual in these proceedings, it would have been impossible to adduce such evidence. I cannot agree. The firm are the defendants to the proceedings, and I know of no reason why the manager should not be called on their behalf. It is true that some one must be questioned by the Court upon the evidence for the prosecution but his answers would be given on behalf of the accused (namely the firm) and he would not therefore become the defendant. Furthermore in the event of conviction or fine, the goods of the manager would not be liable to execution. However that may be, and even if the appellant firm believed that their manager was disqualified from entering the witness-box, it seems to me that there must be other persons not necessarily in the position of the manager, who could have been called, and who could have assisted the Court upon this part of the case

It is obvious of course, that such evidence would be the most material upon the question of the intent to defraud to which I must refer at a later stage. In balancing the evidence given on behalf of the respective parties, I have been assisted by the examination of a large number of authorities and also by the arguments of the learned advocate on both sides I propose only to deal here with those cases which seem to me to have the most bearing upon the matter. In doing so I will endeavour to take the various points relied upon by the learned advocate for the appellant firm and discuss them in the light of some of the reported cases.

It will be seen that nearly all the reported authorities relate to civil suits. There are, however, one or two reports of criminal prosecution It was not suggested by either of the learned advocates appearing in the case that the law in this country differs substantially from that as laid down in England and after considerations of a number of authorities it seems to me that this is so. The different conditions of life and habit in the East, no doubt have to be borne in mind in considering the facts of this case, but the main principles are the same. One of the difficulties in such a case as this is that reports of other cases are of less assistance than many other branches of law. Each case must depend upon its own particular facts, and although it is necessary to consider and apply the general principles enunciated by the Courts from time to time, yet it is in the nature of things impossible to find a decided case, the facts of which resemble closely those of any particular case under review.

The case of West End Watch Co. v. Burma Watch Co. (12) among others was relied upon by the respondents' firm as showing that similar principles to those enunciated in the case of Seixo v. Provezende (3) have been laid down in this country. In the course of the judgment of Scott, C. J., in that case the following passage occurs

"The importer who by advertising and pushing the sale of goods under a particular mark secures a wide opportunity for the mark in relation to the goods sold by him is entitled to the protection of the Court for that mark in the country of importation even against the producer of the goods."

This has been recognized by the Madras High Court in the case of Lavergne v. Hooper (13). The case of Seixo v. Provezende (3) was also considered in the case of Emperor v. Bakaullah Mallik (14). This case was relied upon by the appellant firm. It was a criminal case and the short facts of that case were that the prosecutors had been selling fish hooks with labels showing a design of two fish crossed with their heads and tails pointing upwards. These hooks were known in Calcutta generally as "Mach Marka" or fish mark, and commanded a large sale. The defendant firm also had been selling fish hooks with a similar label containing one fish with head and tail turned upwards, and were convicted of using false trademark under S 482, I. P C. On appeal the conviction was set aside, and the Court distinguished the case of Seixo v. Provezende (3) upon the facts. I cannot find the principles laid down in the latter case dissented from at all, and while distinguishing the facts, the Court appeared to be of opinion that when a name suggested by the trade is applied as a trade-mark the matter assumes an aspect different from that existing in the present case. where a "crown" or "topi" has been adopted as a trade mark of a blanket. It seems to be the opinion of the Court that a fish was too common a feature and too fit for application to a trade-mark to be afforded protection by the Courts. How far this doctrine is of general application it is unnecessary for me to consider, but it seems to me that the case of Emperor v. Bakaullah Mallik (14) already referred to does not assist the case for the appellants.

It will be convenient now to deal with the various contentions put forward on behalf of the appellant firm. They were substantially as follows (1) That no evidence had been adduced by the prosecution to show that any one was deceived I have mentioned this contention before, and apart from the defence of want of intent to defraud the matter is not in my view of great importance. It is true that this fact may and should be taken into consideration in dealing with the question whether the appellants' mark is calculated to deceive purchasers, yet as I have already pointed out it is unnecessary for the prosecution to establish an intent to defraud on the part of the appellants' firm. In this connexion I would quote a part of the head note in the case of Madavaji Dharmasee Manufacturing Co Ltd. v. Central India Spinning, Weaving and Manufacturing Co. Ltd (10). It runs as follows :

" It was not necessary for the plaintiffs to prove cases of actual deception, if the defendants had put into the hands of middle-men a means whereby ultimate purchasers were likely to be defrauded. "

This, says Mr. McDonnell on behalf of the respondent firm, is exactly what the appellants did. Mr. deGlanville relied here on the case of Cope v Evans (15). This was a civil suit and it was dismissed because there was no evidence of actual deception and no such limitation of the plaintiffs' trade-mark as in the opinion of the Court made deception probable. A passage in the judgment of Hall, V. C , occurring at p 150 was relied on among others by the appellants. The learned Vice-Chancellor had been considering Seixo v. Provezende (3) and asks himself the questions and answers them all in the negative. Now it may be that those questions are fit to be asked in a civil case but the present case is a criminal prosecution and the question is a different one and depends on the wording of the statute.

" Have the plaintiffs in the present case shown that the defendant's user of the mark will cause their goods to be taken for the plaintiffs' ? Will it be the inevitable consequence of the use by the defendants of their mark that purchasers in purchasing the defendants cigars will believe that they are purchasing the plaintiffs' ? It is true the defendants' mark cannot fail to attribute to their goods the same name as is used by the plaintiffs ?

Again Mr. deGlanville quoted " the Society of Motor Manufacturers & Traders Ltd.. v. Motor Manufacturers and Traders' Mutual Insurance Co. Ltd. (16).

I cannot attach much importance to this authority in the present case. It is not a trade-mark case and it turned only on the right by a company to use certain descriptive words as part of its name.

The real question was one as between the parties concerned, and the rights of the public were only indirectly material. Here the position of the purchaser is vital.

Mr deGlanville also said that there was no direct evidence as to who the actual users of these blankets were. This is to some extent true but it plainly appears I think from the evidence of the prosecution, both oral and documentary that the respondents' blanket were and are largely bought by persons in a humble position in life both in the towns and in the country districts of Burma.

It was said that the witnesses for the prosecution were practically all dealers viz., trading companies and that therefore, their evidence is untrustworthy. I have already referred to this point, and it is an important point. It would have been of great assistance to me had better evidence in this connexion been available. As I have already pointed out, however, there were quite independent witnesses called whose evidence was one of the plainest possible character. Furthermore, as I have also pointed out this was exactly the kind of evidence called for the prosecution in the case of The Madavji Dharmasee Manufacturing Co. Ltd. (10). The above contentions, it will be seen, were directed against the case put forward on behalf of the prosecution.

Mr. deGlanville went on to argue that even were I satisfied that upon the evidence of the prosecution a prima facie case has been made out, yet looking at all the evidence I ought to allow the appeal He also argued that, after considering the evidence for the defence I ought to come to the conclusion that the mark of the respondent firm is not known outside the ambit of blanket dealers as the " topi " mark blankets, but rather is known generally to the public as the " taj " mark blankets

No doubt there were categorical statements made on behalf of the appellants' firm directly contradicting the evidence for the respondent. I have already referred to certain of these. I, however, cannot help being much impressed by the apparent position and experience of the witnesses who testified on behalf of the respondents' firm. Furthermore four of these witnesses were in my view quite independent. Also I cannot lose sight of the mass of documentary evidence put in on behalf of the respondent firm. Some of this no doubt is open to objection. Certain orders were produced without the writers of these being called as witnesses or without their handwriting being identified. Mr. McDonnell contends that under S. 32, sub-S 2, Evidence Act, such evidence is admissible. I am in doubt as to this. It is unnecessary for, me however, to decide the point for in many cases evidence of handwriting was forthcoming, which would, I think, being country orders such as were produced, be directly within the provisions of the Evidence Act I have quoted. Again, account and other books kept in the ordinary course of business were also produced. In substance, the effect of this evidence seems to me to lend very strong support to the case for the respondents' firm. It is true that the evidence for the defendant contains certain categorical statements to the contrary. But upon careful examination of that evidence as a whole it seems to me that it falls short of establishing the contention that the respondents' mark did not and does not bear the significance contended for The witnesses were much more inclined to state that in their opinion the "crown" would and should be translated by them by the word "taj" or "tarapu."

A further strong point was made by Mr. deGlanville to which I have already referred. He said that after weighing the evidence as to Exs. 6, 7, 8 and 9 I must be of opinion that the crown mark was not calculated to deceive I have dealt with this argument and need only add this that, if for example in the case of Ex 6 there was evidence that it was generally known in the market as the "topi" mark I should not find it difficult to come to the conclusion that the "Fez or Turkish Topi" on Ex. 7 might well be calculated to deceive. Upon the whole I have come to the conclusion that the 2 questions I have indicated must be answered in the affirmative. The only question remaining then is whether the appellants have succeeded in satisfying me that they acted without intent to defraud. In the absence of any evidence at all as to how their mark came to be used, it is somewhat difficult to hold, that the appellants have discharged the onus which is upon them. I need not elaborate the sort of evidence which I should have expected to find, but an indication that legal advice had been taken or careful enquiries made among traders before the mark was displayed would have been of the highest importance. It is perfectly true that no cases of purchasers having been deceived have been proved, but in my view this fact standing alone is insufficient to justify the contention that the appellant firm acted without intent to defraud. The state of mind of the persons responsible on behalf of the appellants. firm for the introduction of their trademark is a most relevant fact which could have been established by evidence. As I have already stated, no such evidence is before me.Therefore, in all the circumstances I have come to the conclusion that the appellants' firm has not discharged the onus which is upon it

For the reasons I have given I must hold that the conviction by the learned District Magistrate was right. Further it appears to me that no serious criticizm can be directed against the sentence that was passed. The fine of Rs. 800 does not appear to me to be excessive in a case of this kind, where a very large business in the goods in question is done throughout the province. In coming to this conclusion I am fully aware that no attempt was made to show that the appellant firm adopted their trade-mark either for the purpose of deceiving purchasers or for causing damage to the business of the respondents. Believing, however, as I do, that the act of the appellant firm was in fact reasonably calculated to cause persons to be deceived, a somewhat substantial penalty seems to be required. The appeal against both conviction and sentence therefore must be dismissed.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 221 of 1929, Decided on 3rd April 1929, from order of Dist. Magistrate, Rangoon, in Criminal Regular Trial No 148 of 1928

Criminal P. C., S. 342 — Under S. 342 after examination of fresh witnesses for Crown and recall and cross-examination of prosecution witnesses, accused should be examined, but violation of provisions of S. 342 is mere irregularity curable under S. 537 if it does not involve prejudice to accused—Criminal P. C., S. 537.

A number of witnesses for the prosecution were examined and then the accused himself was examined. At the next hearing two witnesses for the Crown, who had not previously been examined, were examined and after that a considerable number of the other prosecution witnesses were recalled and cross-examined. Subsequently the defence witnesses were examined but the accused was not examined again and a judgment was passed against him.

Held, that the provisions of S. 342 were not obeyed as that section would require the accused to be re-examined when the prosecution witnesses had been recalled and cross-examined and to be further examined after two fresh Crown witnesses had been examined. [P 332 C 1]

Held further: that such violation if it did not lead to a failure of justice would not vitiate the proceedings and is a mere irregularity which could be cured under S. 537: *A. I. Judgment—On or about 20th January 1928, a leaflet headed "Are we dogs" was distributed at various places on the railway line between Rangoon and Mandalay from a passing train and also at Mandalay itself where at that time a meeting of the Hindu Sabha was being held. On 10th March 1928 the Commissioner of Police, Rangoon, under the orders of the Local Government filed a complaint under S. 124-A, Penal Code against the present appellant K. N. Subbaya Naidu, the editor of a newspaper called "The Desopakari" and Chellan Pillay, the Assistant Manager of that paper. At that time the appellant was not to be found and Chellan Pillay alone was tried. He was convicted by the District Magistrate of Rangoon but on appeal was acquitted by this Court on 15th August 1928. On 22nd October 1928 the appellant surrendered himself to the District Magistrate in Rangoon, who then proceeded to try him for the offence and has convicted him and sentenced him to three years' rigorous imprisonment. Against that conviction he appeals.

The petition of appeal is lengthy and verbose It contains contentions that the District Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try the case and that the leaflet was not seditious and the rest of it may be summed up into the contention that the evidence in the case was not sufficient to prove the publication of the leaflet by the appellant. At the hearing of this appeal Mr. Villa, who appeared for the appellant, has dropped the contention that the District Magistrate had no jurisdiction. I may say also that that contention was really unsustainable. Part of the evidence against the appellant is to the effect that he had this leaflet set up in type in his own press at Rangoon and if that fact is proved, then clearly the District Magistrate of Rangoon could try the case. Other evidence is to the effect that the appellant distributed the leaflet at various stations on the Rangoon Mandalay Line, while he was travelling from Rangoon to Mandalay and if that fact is proved, under S. 183, Criminal P. C., the District Magistrate had jurisdiction. Mr. Villa has also dropped the contention that the leaflet was not seditious. Obviously it was almost seditious and inflammatory composition containing direct incitement to murder every Englishman in Burma, referring, in particular, to the collection of the thathameda tax. Mr Villa has, however, raised a further contention of law that the trial is invalid by reason of the District Magistrate's failure to observe the provisions of S. 342, Criminal P. C.

The facts relevant to this contention are that up to 28th November 1928, 25 witnesses for the prosecution had been examined. The accused himself was then examined. His examination was very brief; but he said at its close that he had prepared a statement which would be translated and filed in Court. He did in fact put in a lengthy statement occupying four pages of type. This is dated 14th December 1928. When it was actually filed, does not appear on the record ; but it seems probable that it was filed on 17th December, which was the date of the next hearing after 28th November. Probably it was put in at the beginning of that hearing. At that hearing two witnesses for the Crown, who had not previously been examined, were examined and after that a considerable number of the other prosecution witnesses were recalled and cross-examined on 17th and 18th December. On 9th January 1929, the defence witnesses were examined and finally judgment was passed on 4th February 1929. After his examination on 28th November the appellant was not examined. There can be no doubt that here the District Magistrate did disobey the provisions of S 342 of the Code. That section lays down that the Court shall examine the accused generally on the case after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence. I have no doubt that this, applied to the present case, would require the accused to be re-examined when the prosecution witnesses had been recalled and cross-examined after he was finally charged and there is equally no doubt that, after two fresh prosecution witnesses had been examined after the framing of the charge, the section requires that the accused should be further examined.

The question is whether this is merely an irregularity which, if no prejudice has been caused thereby to the accused, is curable under S 537 of the Code or whether it is an illegality which vitiates the trial altogether Before discussing this question fully, I would say that in my opinion the irregularity or illegality whichever it may be has not in any way prejudiced the appellant The evidence of the two additional witnesses called after his examination though relevant added nothing of any very material importance to the case as it stood before that , nor did there emerge from the cross-examination of the other prosecution witnesses anything which required further explanation by the accused.

On the question now to be decided, there is a very considerable difference of opinion among the High Courts in India. In the case of Re, Maruda Muthu Vannian (1), a Bench of the Madras High Court held that the failure to examine an accused person after the prosecution witnesses had been recalled and cross-examined after the framing of the charge was not a mere irregularity curable under S. 537 but an illegality which vitiated the trial. This case, however, was overruled in part at any rate by Varisai Rowther v. Emperor (2), in which four out of the Full Bench of five Judges held that when an accused person had once been examined after the prosecution had finished calling evidence it was not obligatory on the Court to question him again after the cross-examination and re-examination of the prosecution witnesses recalled at the instance of the accused under S. 256 of the Code The Full Bench further held that, if the prosecution called fresh evidence after the charge was framed, the accused must be questioned generally on the case after this further examination of the prosecution witnesses. The Calcutta High Court has in several cases taken the view set out in In re, Maruda Muthu Vannian (1). These cases are Mazahar Ali v. Emperor (3), Jummon Christian v. Emperor (4) ; Pramatha Nath Mukerjee v. Emperor (5) and Legal Remembrancer, Bengal v Satish Chandra Roy (6)

On the other hand in Byrne v. Emperor (7), one Judge of the Lahore High Court held that when the witnesses for the prosecution had been examined and cross-examined at considerable length before the framing of the charge and the accused had at that stage been examined, the failure to re-examine the accused after the further cross-examination of the witnesses after the framing of the charge was a mere irregularity and no ground for setting aside the findings of the trial Court unless it had occasioned a failure of justice. A considerably stronger case than this is Mohiuddin v. Emperor (8), in which a Bench of the Patna High Court held .

"In every case in which the legality of a trial is challenged on the ground that the provisions of S. 342, Criminal P. C., 1898, have not been complied with, the test is whether there has been prejudice to the accused by reason of the absence of judicial questions and whether the defect is cured by S. 537 of the Code."

Another case is Emperor v. Bechu Chaube (9), which was before one Judge of the Allahabad High Court. In that case a fresh witness for the prosecution had been examined after the cross-examination of the accused, who was not further examined on his evidence. That witness, however, did not add materially to the evidence which had been already given for the prosecution and which the accused had an opportunity of explaining. It was held that, though there was an error, it did not in the circumstances vitiate the proceedings This case was followed by my learned brother Brown in Nga Hla U v. Emperor (10). In that case no fresh witnesses for the prosecution had been examined after the examination of the accused and the question before the Court was whether the failure to examine the accused further after the prosecution witnesses previously examined had been recalled and cross-examined was a mere irregularity or illegality which vitiated the trial, it was held that it was a mere irregularity.

Considering the judgments in the cases above-mentioned it seems to me that the Calcutta and Madras High Courts have taken a very highly technical view of the question while the other High Courts have dealt with it in relation to the merits of the cases before them. The view that the omission again to examine the accused is an irregularity curable under S. 537, Criminal P C., and not an illegality which vitiates the trial in my opinion, receives very considerable support from the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Abdul Rahman v. Emperor (11). The question before their Lordships in that case was the effect of a failure properly to carry out the provisions of S. 360, Criminal P. C., in regard to the reading over to witnesses of their depositions. Their Lordships drew a distinction between that question and the question which arose in Subrahmania Ayyar v. Emperor (12), where the procedure adopted was one which the Code positively prohibited. The concluding paragraph in their Lordships' judgment runs as follows :

"To sum up, in the view which their Lordships take of the several sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure, the bare fact of such an omission or irregularity as occurred in the case under appeal, unaccompanied by any probable suggestion of any failure of justice having been thereby occasioned, is not enough to warrant the quashing of a conviction, which on their Lordships' view, may be supported by the curative provisions of Ss 535 and 537. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed."

These remarks, in my opinion, apply with equal force to the undoubted error which has occurred in this case, and in my view they render strong support to the view taken by my learned brother Brown in the case above mentioned. As I have already said that the omission which occurred in this case has not in any way prejudiced the appellant nor was there anything about it which could lead to a failure of justice being occasioned by it, I hold that the District Magistrate's error does not vitiate the proceedings and is a mere irregularity which is cured by the provisions of S. 537, Criminal P. C. (His Lordship then discussed evidence as regards emanation of the leaflet and of its distribution on the Railway line and at Mandalay and proceeded). His defence is of little or of no value and is certainly not sufficient to rebut the prosecution case, if that is believed. After a careful consideration of the evidence I think that although the case was not in some respects as well handled as it might have been, the District Magistrate was right in holding the guilt of the appellant to be true. The appeal is therefore dismissed.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from the judgment of a single Judge of this Court in Second Appeal No 722 of 1927, the Judge who passed the judgment having declared that the case is a fit one for appeal under the provisions of Cl. 13, Letters Patent, constituting this Court The short facts are as follows:

One Ma Gun held from Government a lease of a holding of town land in Pegu town and transferred her lease of that land to the present appellants by registered deed. but appellants never took any steps to have their names entered in the roll of town lands as transferees of the lease, which remained in the rolls in the name of Ma Gun. Appellants then transferred the lease to one Ma Thein Yin and Ma Thein Yin got her name entered in the rolls as transferee of the lease. In the year 1923 Ma Thein Yin transferred the lease back to appellants by registered deed but appellants did not obtain possession of the document of lease and did not get their names entered in the rolls as transferees Subsequently Government decided to divide the lands in that part of the town into house sites and to lay out roads, and Ma Thein Yin, as being the registered lessee, was approached and agreed to surrender the lease and to receive instead new leases for eight separate house sites into which part of the land covered by the original lease was divided, the remainder of that land being reserved by Government for roads. Ma Thein Yin then transferred the lease of one of the house sites to the present respondents, Maung Kyaing and Ma Mya Kin, by registered deed, and respondents got their names entered in the rolls as transferees of the lease. Appellants on the strength of the transfer of the original lease by Ma Thein Yin to them sued respondents for possession of the house site

This Court found that appellants were estopped from asserting their title to the lease in favour of respondents because they failed to obtain the original lease from Ma Thein Yin or to get their names entered in the town lands rolls as transferees of that lease, and because they stood by and allowed respondents to build a house on the land when they had notice that a lease in derogation from their rights had been made by Government and had been transferred to respondents. Mg. Kyaing v. P. L. T. A. R. Chettyar Firm (1).

Appellants appeal from that decision on grounds that respondents were negligent in failing to enquire into Ma Thein Yin's title, that in view of that failure respondents could not be in the position of bona fide transferees for consideration without notice from an ostensible owner, that there was no estoppel against them, that respondents had notice, actual or constructive, of their title, that if respondents had made proper enquiry they would have found that the land covered by the lease transferred to them formed part of the land covered by the earlier lease which was in Ma Thein Yin's name and that they ought to have enquired how Ma Thein Yin came to obtain the subsequent leases of the house sites, that

(1) A. I. R. 1929 Rang. 17=3 Rang. 643

Ma Thein Yin was not in fact an ostensible owner of the property and that the fact that Ma Thein Yin was entered in the rolls as lessee of the lands was not due to their negligence.

It is clear that if respondents had enquired they would have found that the lease which Ma Thein Yin transferred to them was a lease recently made by Government to Ma Thein Yin, and that if they had gone further they would have found that Ma Thein Yin was the registered lessee under the original lease which covered those lands. There can, in our opinion, be no doubt that Ma Thein Yin was an "ostensible owner" of the property, but appellants' main contention is that she was not an ostensible owner with their consent, express or implied, or by reason of any default on their part They say that the default was on the part of the registering officer or the revenue officer in charge of town lands because under S. 29, Town Lands Act, it was the duty of the registering officer who registered the transfer of the lease by Ma Thein Yin to them to send to the revenue officer a true copy of the entries in the indexes of the registration registers relating to the transfer. It is true that there was probably some default on the part of the registering officer or the revenue officer, but the fact remains that appellants have allowed the lands to remain in Ma Thein Yin's name since 1923. They could have applied at any time for mutation of names and the Act contains provision in S. 34 for such mutation. Further in addition to allowing the lands to stand in Ma Thein Yin's name, they allowed the title deed in the shape of the document of lease to remain in Ma Thein Yin's possession and they allowed Ma Thein Yin to remain in occupation of the land. It seems clear therefore that Ma Thein Yin was ostensible owner of the property by reason of their neglect to take the ordinary precautions which a transferee of a lease of town lands ought to take and that their consent to Ma Thein Yin's position as ostensible owner must be implied from their acquiescence and from their failure to take reasonable precautions.

We are not satisfied that in the circumstances of this particular case where the land had recently been laid out into house sites by Government and leases had been issued by Government it would be reasonable to expect a transferee of one of the leases so issued to look beyond the lease itself, and in a case like the present, where if he had made further enquiries, he would have found that his transferrer who was in possession of the property at the time of the transfer, had prior to the issue of the lease transferred been in possession of the property under an earlier lease, that his transferee was the registered lessee under that earlier lease and that she had actually remained in possession of the document evidencing that earlier lease until the issue of the new leases, the transferee who looked merely at the lease recently issued by Government and at his transferrer's possession of the land was guilty of any default such as would deprive him of the rights given by S. 41, T. P. Act. We therefore see no reason to interfere and we dismiss the appeal with costs, advocate's fee for this appeal to be ten gold mohurs.

(a) Buddhist Law (Burmese)—N few days before his death telling his children by first wife to give K his second wife certain property in lieu of her share—K consenting to this and accepting it few days after N's death—Property little more than nominal consideration—No specific performance of such contract can be ordered and doctrine of part performance also is inapplicable and K is not bound by such contract—Part performance—Specific Relief Act S. 28—Contract Act S. 4.

N, 9 or 10 days before his death told his children by first wife to give certain property to her second wife K in lieu of her share in the estate. K expressed her consent to this and accepted the property from the children 2 or 3 days after N's death allowing it to be understood that she would not make any further claim to the estate. The property that K received was a little more than a nominal consideration having regard to her share in the estate. The children relied on the release and contended that K was not entitled to claim anything.

Held: that K's consent to the contract was largely influenced by her disturbed state of mind and could hardly be called free consent.

Held further: that the contract was so inequitable that no Court would pass a decree for specific performance thereof in favour of children, nor could the doctrine of part performance or any of the equities arising therefrom could be applied in their favour and K could not be bound by the contract.

Judgment.—The appellant Tafuzzal Ahmed filed a suit against the respondents for partition of the estate of one U Su Tha (deceased) U Su Tha first married one Ma Tun, and the respondents are his children and grandchildren by her. After her death he married Ma Po, with whom he lived as husband and wife for some 9 or 10 years. U Su Tha died in about September 1927. The appellant claims that since U Su Tha's death Ma Po has sold to him by registered deed her share in the estate. He claims that she has never yet been given her share and sues the other heirs for partition. The defendants do not admit the validity of the transfer by Ma Po to the appellant, and they claim further that Ma Po was given and accepted certain property in full satisfaction of all her claim against the estate, and that she is not therefore any longer entitled to claim anything. It appears that about 9 or 10 days before his death when he knew that he was about to die, U Su Tha called together his children and his wife, and a number of elders He then stated in the presence of the elders that he was going to give his wife Ma Po Rs. 200, 50 baskets of paddy, ten annas weight of gold and a piece of garden, and that if Ma Po agreed to take this, it would be understood that she would have no more interest in the remaining estate. To this it is said, that Ma Po agreed. The defendants go on to say that after U Su Tha's death, they made over the property to her in accordance with the directions of the deceased, and that she accepted in full satisfaction of her claim. Ma Po admits that U Su Tha spoke about her getting this property, before his death, but she denies that she agreed to accept it. She does not admit accepting the properties after his death.

As to what took place, before the death of U Su Tha, the defendants have established their case satisfactorily. Not only the two defendants Maung Shwe Yi and Maung Shwe Kyi give evidence on this point, but they are corroborated by independent witnesses Maung Dwe, Kya Yan, and Aung Tun. We see no reason for not accepting the evidence of these witnesses. There is no rebutting evidence on the point, except that of Ma Po herself As to what took place after U Su Tha's death, Maung Dwe, Kya Yan, Aung Tun, Shwe Thi, and Po Mya all give evidence as well as two defendants Shwe Yi and Shwe Kyi. U Dwe says that two days after the death, Shwe Yi and Shwe Kyi called him to the house and he went there, and in his presence Ma Po was given Rs. 200, 50 baskets of paddy, and as. 10 weight of gold. Four days later Shwe Kyi gave Rs 8 to Ma Po in lieu of 50 baskets of paddy. He says that Po Mya asked Ma Po whether she had received all the property arranged to be given her by U Su Tha before his death, and she admitted that she had received the same Kya Yan gives similar evidence. Aung Tun deposes to Ma Po admitting having received the property. U Shwe Thi says that at the feeding of the Phongyi after the death of U Su Tha, Shwe Yi asked Ma Po whether she would abide by the direction of his father, and she agreed He did not see the actual payment Po Mya also says that Ma Po told Shwe Yi she would abide by the directions of his father, and that Shwe Yi on being asked mentioned what the property was. Po Mya, however, contradicts U Dwe's statement that he, Po Mya, questioned Ma Po as to whether she had received the property and was told by her that she did.

We think that this evidence sufficiently shows that Ma Po did accept the property after U Shwe Tha's death. The appellant values the estate at considerably over Rs. 10,000. The defendants claim that this is an overvaluation, but the defendant Shwe Yi admits in his cross-examination that according to their estimate the whole estate is worth nearly Rs. 10,000. He further admits that the property received by Ma Po would be worth Rs 300 to 400 only. The appellant claims that some of the property of the estate was the lettetpwa property of Ma Po and the deceased The defendants dispute this, except as to a comparatively insignificant portion of the property. Assuming that the whole of the estate was the atetpwa property of Su Tha, Ma Po's quarter share in that property would still amount on Shwe Yi's admission to about Rs. 2,500. It is quite clear therefore, that what Ma Po got bears no relation whatsoever to what she as an heir was entitled to get under Buddhist Law, and this fact is admitted by the defendants. Maung Shwe Kyi says .

"I never enquired to find out the share of Ma Po in the estate of my father. I myself do not know what that share is" and Shwe Yi says "I do not know what share Ma Po is entitled to legally. I have never tried to enquire. We never consulted with the elders as to the value of the estate in giving Ma Po as directed by our father, but our father consulted with the Phongyis and the elders and then made his directions, and Ma Po agreed."

And of the elders called, U Dwe says : "I do not know why Ma Po was given only this paltry share in the large estate."

In these circumstances, very clear evidence is required to establish the fact that Ma Po did definitely of her own free will agree to accept this property in lieu of all her claims as an heir. Gwan Shein, a witness for the defence, does say that after U Su Tha's death Shwe Yi and Shwe Kyi asked her whether she would abide by the decision of their father about the property and she replied that she would agree and that she was quite satisfied and would not claim any more of the estate. He adds that at the same time she said that she had received the property. There is no obvious reason for disbelieving this witness and we may perhaps accept it as proved that she did make some such statement, but this occurred only within a few days of her husband's death We think we can safely assume that her consent to U Su Tha's request in his illness was largely influenced by her desire not to disturb him in his last moments and two or three days after his death she would still be so affected by his death that an assent to this death-bed request of his can hardly be treated as a free consent. We hold it proved that Ma Po did express her consent to Su Tha himself before his death and that after his death she did accept the property specified by him and did then allow it to be understood that she would not make any further claim to the estate. But can it be said that on these findings of facts she forfeited all her rights to the estate ? A partition of a family estate amongst the heirs can be made orally and does not require any document to make it valid, but it is impossible to hold that the transaction the defendants rely on in this case was a partition of the estate. It was quite clearly not a partition. It was quite clear that no one had in mind at all the extent of Ma Po's claim as an heir. It is quite clear that all they wished to do was to carry out the desire of U Su Tha expressed before his death that Ma Po should give up her claim as an heir altogether on receiving what was little more than a nominal consideration. It is true that family arrangements for the distribution of ancestral property can be and often are validly made In the judgment in the case of Ram Bahadur Sen v. Ganesh Bhagat (1) the following passage occurs :

"Halsbury's Laws of England Vol. 19, p. 542 in dealing with what family arrangements can and cannot be supported, points out that an agreement dividing up family property, though entered into under a misapprehension of the legal rights of the parties, provided such misapprehension is not induced by any party to the agreement is entitled to support even where the fact that misapprehension existed has been established by subsequent legal decision. On the other hand at page 54, he points out that an agreement as to division of the property can be set aside where the heir gives up property to which he had undoubted rights without consideration or where he was ignorant or without professional assistance ; even though there was no evidence of fraud or undue influence "

It is doubtful whether in the present case it can be held that there was any real family arrangement As we have said Ma Po did not partition the estate with the children, she waived her claim as an heir for what was practically a nominal sum, and if this could be called a family arrangement at all, she gave up undoubted rights for entirely inadequate consideration and without any professional assistance. Ma Po as an heir was entitled to a substantial share in landed property, admittedly worth some Rs

10,000. Under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act she could not transfer this property by way of sale or gift save by a registered deed. It is impossible, in our opinion, to hold that there was any partition of the estate between her and the other heirs, and the release given by Ma Po on which the respondents rely is in fact a transfer by sale or by way of gift There was no deed drawn up and therefore the transfer was invalid, and her title to her share in the estate still vests in Ma Po. Nor is this a case where the doctrine of part performance or any of the equities arising therefrom can be applied in favour of the defendants. It may be that Ma Po did enter into a contract to make over her share in the estate but it is quite clearly a contract of so inequitable a nature that no Court would pass a decree for specific performance thereof in favour of the defendants. We are therefore of opinion that Ma Po was not bound by this contract and that she retained her rights as an heir to the estate. We see no reason to doubt that she has transferred her rights to the plaintiff. A registered deed has been produced and she as well as the plaintiff have deposed to the signing of the document. The document is curiously worded In the recital it shows that she is entitled to a one-seventh share in the estate, but from the operative part of the document it is clear that what she intended to sell was her whole share in the estate, whatever that might be. We are therefore of opinion that the appellant did establish his claim to partition, to the estate and the possession of Ma Po's share after allowing for what she was given after her husband's death

Ma Po's share admittedly was one-fourth of the payin property of U Su Tha and a five-sixth share of lettetpwa property of her marriage with him. We allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the trial Court, and pass a preliminary decree declaring that the appellant is entitled to Ma Po's share in the estate after deducting what she has already received and directing that a final decree for partition be passed after such further enquiry as may be necessary The respondents will pay the costs of the appeal. Costs in the trial Court will follow the final result

Judgment—The P. L. M. Chettyar firm of Naikban, Henzada District, applied to the District Court of Bassein for the adjudication of Ko Maung Giy and his wife Ma Chein as insolvents. The application alleged four acts of insolvency. No order either of adjudication or otherwise has been passed on that application In the application the firm prayed for the appointment of an ad interim receiver, and on 16th November 1928, it was apparently agreed between the pleaders of the parties that the debtors should have a month's time in which to arrange to settle the debts without any receiver being appointed On 18th December 1928 the learned pleader for the debtors applied for 10 days' time within which to pay 3000 into Court, and he also had it noted that he paid the amount under protest, that there was no reason for filing the application and that he would later file a suit for damages.

On 2nd January 1929 the debtors deposited 3000 in Court and offered security for the deposit of the balance of the firm's debts On 10th January 1929 the firm was allowed to withdraw the sum of 3000 from the Court On 20th February a bond was executed by the sureties but up to 20th March 1929, the debtors had not deposited the balance of the debt, and on that day a notice was ordered to be issued to the sureties to show cause why they should not deposit the money. With the proceedings initiated or contemplated against the sureties we are not at present concerned. The debtors appeal to this Court against the order for payment of the sum of 3000 to the firm. On 18th February 1929, the debtors, when asking for 2 months' time to deposit the balance of the money also prayed for an order to call on the firm to refund the sum of 3000 withdrawn by it. No order apparently was passed on this prayer. It is urged on this appeal that the firm had no right to withdraw this money from the Court and that the debtors paid the sum of 3000 into Court merely as a practical demonstration of their ability to pay their debts.

Under S. 14, Provl Insol. Act, a creditor's petition for adjudication cannot be withdrawn without leave of the Court. It has been the practice of the Courts not to allow a creditor's application to be withdrawn solely on the ground that the debts of that creditor have been paid. It is a matter of common knowledge that creditors frequently file insolvency applications merely for the purpose of putting pressure upon their debtors to settle their claims It is an abuse of the process of the insolvency Court, and it is in our opinion a wholesome practice never to allow any creditor to withdraw his application on the ground that his debts have been satisfied. If the claims of all the creditors are satisfied the matter is of course different.

Ordinarily if money is deposited in Court by the debtor during the pendency of insolvency proceedings it ought to be kept in Court. If the debtor is adjudicated insolvent the money will be available for the benefit of the whole body of creditors.

If on the other hand the application is dismissed the money may be paid to a particular creditor with the consent of the debtors or the creditor may file a suit and get an attachment of the money before it is paid out to the debtor. In any event the firm in this case had no present right to withdraw the money We, therefore, hold that the P L. M. firm is bound to re-deposit this money in Court and we direct the District Judge to issue an order to it for that purpose and to take steps to compel it to do so. This order does not affect the proceedings against the sureties contemplated in the diary order of the learned District Judge. These proceedings may go on and the matter should be disposed of in due course. The appellants will be entitled to their costs of this appeal from the respondent : advocate's fee two gold mohurs.

Civil Revn. No. 26 of 1929, Decided on 24th April 1929, from judgment of Sm C. C Judge, Mandalay, in Suit No 768 of 1928

Limitation Act, S. 20—Under S. 20 debtor must make payment of interest definitely as interest to start fresh period of limitation.

The creditor is entitled if the debtor makes no stipulation at the time he makes the payment to credit the payment in such a way as would be most profitable to himself. He has a right to appropriate a payment made in a general manner towards interest due to him. But the creditor cannot by his own action and without any act of volition on the part of the debtor start a fresh period of limitation. Under S. 20 the debtor must make the payment of interest definitely as interest and it is the act of the debtor which gives limitation a fresh starting point : 31 All. 495 , 24 Bom. 493 and 2 *U. Ko Ko Gyi—for Respondent

Judgment.—This revision arises from a Small Cause Court suit. In that suit U Ba Gyi sued Ko Than Kyauk and Ko Ba Sein on a pro-note The pro-note on the face of it was barred by limitation, having been executed on 29th September 1924, while the suit was not filed until 21st September 1928. The plaintiff however, alleged payment of Rs. 50 towards interest on 3rd March 1927, which, if proved, would of course save limitation. The trial Court found that the payment has not been made by either defendant "as interest" and therefore limitation has not been saved.

It is admitted now that so far as Ba Sein is concerned the case is hopeless. But it is still contended that limitation has been saved as against Than Kyauk In my opinion this contention is not good As regards the facts I am prepared to take them as found by the trial Court. The pro-note was executed by Than Kyauk and Ba Sein. On 3rd March 1927, Amale was sent by Than Kyauk to pay Rs 50 to the plaintiff and she did so, endorsing the payment on the back of the pro-note. The endorsement simply states that Amale pays Rs. 50 to Daw Su (Daw Su being the daughter of the plaintiff Ba Gyi)

It is argued for the applicant that the plaintiff had a right to appropriate an unspecified payment made in this way towards interest That he had this right is undoubted vide Nemi Chand v. Radha Kishen (1) and Meka Venkatadri Appa Rao v. Parthasarathi Appa Rao (2).

There can be no question but that for account purposes the plaintiff would have had a perfect right to appropriate this payment towards interest. The question remains, however, whether this payment made in this general manner was a "payment towards interest as such" I have been referred to Nga Twe v. Nga Ba (3), in which it is held that to save limitation

"there must be an intention on the debtor's part that the money should be paid on account of interest and something to indicate that intention."

The authority given in that ruling is Muhammad Abdulla Khan v. Bank Instalment Co. Ltd. (4). The headnote of this runs

"Under S 20, Lim Act, the payment of interest will save limitation when the payment is made as such, that is to say, that the debtor has paid the amount with the intention that it should be paid towards interest, and there must be something to indicate that intention. The mere appropriation by the creditor of these payments to interest is not such an indication"

Again in Kariyappa v. Rachappa (5), I find at p. 499

"While the forms of payment may differ, the section provides that it must be a payment made as interest by the debtor to the creditor. Mere crediting by the debtor in his own account books of interest is not enough to satisfy the statute. It must be interest paid as interest and distinctly stated to be so at the time of payment, or there must be evidence from which payment as interest may be distinctly inferred."

It has been argued before me that the two later Privy Council rulings to which I have referred must be held to override the earlier Bombay and Allahabad rulings just quoted. In my opinion there is nothing in these Privy Council rulings to overrule the earlier ones. The point before the Privy Council was mainly one of accounting. The creditor was entitled, if the debtor made no stipulation at the time he made the payment, to credit the payment in such a way as would be most profitable to himself. If the debtor wished the payments to be credited in a way more in his own favour it was for him to stipulate that this should be done, and if the creditor refused he was at liberty to refuse to make the payment.

This, however, is quite a different matter from holding that when a debtor makes a payment, the creditor may by his own action and without any act of volition on the part of the debtor, start a fresh period for limitation The Limitation Act says that the debtor must make the payment of interest as such and it is the act of the debtor which gives limitation a fresh starting point. It is impossible for a creditor to make a fresh starting point for limitation. Time runs against him unless the debtor does something, and one thing which a debtor may do is to make a payment of interest definitely as interest In the present case there is nothing to show that the payment was made definitely as interest Plaintiff himself was not present when Amale came and paid the money. Ma Su in cross-examination definitely says that nothing was said as to whether the Rs. 50 was the principal or interest. Ma E Kin says that Amale and Ma Saing came and paid Rs. 50 towards the loan. They did not say anything definite as to how the payment should be appropriated. Amale denies making the payment. The rest of the evidence is with regard to the execution of the pro-note. I am of opinion, therefore, that there having been no definite payment of interest as such, the suit was barred by limitation as against both defendants, and the lower Court was quite correct in dismissing it. I therefore dismiss this application for revision The applicant to pay the respondent's costs in this Court.

(a) Mahomedan Law—Marriage—If there is evidence of cohabitation and repute, burden is on person denying marriage to prove that it did not take place—Evidence Act, S. 114.

Where a man and woman are living together as husband and wife for a large number of years and have always treated each other as husband and wife have always been looked on as husband and wife, and there is no obstacle to the marriage, the burden is on the person who denies the marriage to prove that it did not take place : 3 *M. Rafi—for Respondent.

Judgment—The main question in issue in these appeals is whether the appellant Ma Chit May was legally married to Dawood, the deceased. According to Ma Chit May, Dawood first eloped with her, and then took her to the house of his mother Ma Shwe Baw. Ma Chit May herself was a Burman, and had hitherto been a Buddhist. But when she reached Ma Shwe Baw's house, a Moulvi was called in and she was first of all converted to Mahomedanism, and was then formally married to Dawood, according to Mahomedan Law. After that, she and Dawood lived together as husband and wife until his death She now has two children by him, one aged about eight and the other about five. Most of the facts alleged by Ma Chit May are admitted. It is admitted that Ma Chit May and Dawood lived together as husband and wife Ma Saw Ki, the daughter and agent of the respondent Ma Shwe Baw says that Ma Chit May and Dawood were living as man and wife for about nine years and during that period there was nothing against her character. She also says :

"I have treated the children of Dawood as my nephew and niece."

Ma Shwe Baw herself giving evidence, says :

"They were living as husband and wife in my house... ..They were living as man and wife for about nine years The two children are the son and daughter of Dawood. Ma Chit May performed the formalities of the Mahomedan custom as I have done now. I treated her as my daughter-in-law, during her coverture with Dawood and I consider his children as my gandchildren, my son Dawood treated Ma Chit May as his wife and her children as his children."

It is also admitted by the respondent that the ceremony of conversion to Mahomedanism did take place.

The only dispute is as to whether the formalities required by Mahomedan Law for a valid marriage were observed. According to the principles of Mahomedan Law by D. F. Mulla, Ninth Edition, para. 196, it is essential to the validity of a marriage that there should be a proposal made by or on behalf of one of the parties to the marriage, and an acceptance of the proposal by or on behalf of the other, in the presence and hearing of two male, or one male and two female witnesses, who must be sane and adult Mahomedans. The proposal and acceptance must both be expressed at one meeting ; a proposal made at one meeting and an acceptance made at another meeting do not constitute a valid marriage. It is admitted that no religious ceremony is necessary at all, and although it may be customary to call in a Moulvi for the purpose of celebration, it is not necessary to do so for the purpose of a valid marriage. In the case of Khajah Hidayut Collah v. Rai Jan Khanam (1) the following passages from the work of Mr. Macnaughten on Mahomedan Law are cited and apparently approved :

"The Mahomedan lawyers carry this distinction (that is against bastardizing) much further , they consider it the legitimate reasoning to infer the existence of marriage from the proof of cohabitation. None but children who are in the strictest sense of the word spurious are considered incapable of inheriting the estate of their putative father. The evidence of persons who would in other cases, be considered incompetent witnesses is admitted to prove wedlock, and in short, where by any possibility a marriage must be presumed, the law will rather do so than bastardize the issue, and whether a marriage be simply voidable or void ab-initio the offspring of it will be deemed legitimate."

It had not been proved in that case that a ceremony of marriage had been gone through, but it is nevertheless held that there had been a legal marriage.

(1) [1841-46] 3 M.I.A. 295=6 W.R. 52 (P.C.).

In the case Habibur Rahman v. Altaf Ali (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council remark, with reference to Mahomedan Law :

"the term "wife" necessarily connotes marriage, but as marriage may be constituted without any ceremonial, the existence of a marriage in any particular case may be an open question. Direct proof may be available, but if there be no such, indirect proof may suffice."

Their Lordships proceeded to point out that the presumption to be drawn from such indirect proof may be rebutted, but that unless and until it is rebutted, the presumption must prevail. The question of Mahomedan Law of marriage was also considered by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Imambandi v Mutsaddi (3) In that case their Lordships found that the oral testimony regarding the solemnization of marriage was unsatisfactory, but that the marriage was nevertheless proved by the subsequent acknowledgment by the husband of the legitimacy of his children, At p. 889 (of 45 Cal) of the report the following passage occurs :

"In the absence of any statutory provision making compulsory the registration of Mahomedan marriages, the Indian Courts, in case of a dispute as to the factum of a marriage, are usually left to discover or attempt to discover the truth from a mass of conflicting and often very unsatisfactory evidence of witnesses."

There are a number of other cases in which the principle has been followed, that marriage between a husband and wife can be presumed from a long course of cohabitation and living together as husband and wife and from acknowledgment of the children as the legal children. In the case of Aklamannessa Bibi v. Mahomed Hatem (4), the High Court of Calcutta held that as pointed out in Wilson's Digest of Anglo-Mahomedan Law, although neither writing nor any religious ceremony is necessary to the validity of a marriage contract :

"words of proposal and acceptance must be uttered by the contracting parties or their agents in each other's presence and hearing and in the presence and hearing of two male or one male and two female witnesses, who must be sane and adult Moslems, and the whole transaction must be completed at one meeting."

(2) A. I. R. 1922 P. C. 159=48 Cal. 856=48 I. A. 114 (P.C.).
(3) A. I. R. (1918) P. C. 11=45 Cal. 878=45 I. A. 73 (P.C.).
(4) [1904] 31 Cal. 849=8 C. W. N. 705.

But the question as to the necessity for insisting on these requirements when there was strong evidence of subsequent living together as man and wife was not discussed Nor have I been able to find any case in which it has been held that although a man and woman have been living together as husband and wife for a large number of years and have always treated each other as husband and wife and have always been looked on as husband and wife the marriage is invalid, if in fact the proposal and its acceptance has not taken place in a formal manner.

It is at any rate quite clear from the ruling that once proof has been given, such as has been given in this case as to cohabitation and repute, the burden is on the person who denies the marriage, to prove that it did not take place. In the present case there was no obstacle to the marriage Can it therefore be held as proved on the evidence that the requirements of the Mahomedan Law as to offer and acceptance did not take place ? Ma Chit May herself says in this point that when the Moulvi came to the house Ma Shwe Baw and Ko Eusoof requested the Moulvi to convert her and then perform the marriage ceremony, according to Mahomedan Law :

"Then I was converted by the Moulvi. He also asked me if I agreed to marry Dawood. Dawood and I had to reply thrice saying that I agreed to marry Dawood. He (Dawood) was also asked if he agree to marry me and he had also to reply thrice that he agreed to marry me. Then the Moulvi gave me a cup of Sherbat saying that it was "thetsaye."

The Moulvi Ferozorali himself has been called. He says that he converted Ma Chit May but denies that Dawood and Ma Chit May were legally married He does not say what he means by saying that they were not legally married nor has he definitely denied that they formally agreed to the marriage in the presence of witnesses and it may be that by a ceremony of marriage he had in mind some special rite such as would ordinarily be followed in such cases. It is difficult to imagine a case in which the evidence of cohabitation and repute could be stronger than in this case. Ma Chit May came to the house, and was formally converted to Mahomedanism. She was accepted by her mother-in-law and has admittedly been treated by her mother-in-law as the legally married wife of Dawood ever since, she and Dawood lived together as husband and wife for nine years. It is admitted by the very relatives, who now challange the legitimacy of the marriage that she behaved in every way as a wife that she was looked on as a wife by them, that her children were treated as Dawood's children, and that they had no complaint whatsoever to make as to her conduct as a wife Her children are quite clearly treated as Dawood's children, and the evidence to rebut the presumption arising on the circumstances would have to be very strong indeed, before the Court could come to a conclusion "bastardizing" the issue.

It must be remembered that the marriage is alleged to have taken place some nine or ten years before the witnesses gave evidence and the production of oral evidence as to what took place would be a matter of great difficulty. In the circumstances I am not satisfied that it has been proved substantially that the requirements of the Mahomedan Law as to proposal and acceptance were not satisfied in the present case. I therefore hold that Ma Chit May was legally married to Dawood, and that her children are legitimate. It is suggested on behalf of the respondent that even if this be so, Ma Shwe Baw is nevertheless an heir under the Mahomedan Law That would appear to be correct, but in none of the cases has Ma Shwe Baw's claim ever been based on her right as one of the several heirs. In the first case, she has sued to have a deed of sale by Ma Chit May of property which belonged to Dawood, set aside. Her case as set forth in her plaint was that Ma Chit May was not married to Dawood, and had no right whatsoever to transfer the property. It may be that Ma Cit May had no power to transfer the rights of her minor children and it may also be that the transfer would be subject to the claims of Ma Shwe Baw as one of the heirs of the estate. But these were points which were not raised in the lower Courts. Ma Shwe Baw's suit was dismissed by the trial Court. Although there was appeal in the District Court, the appeal was not taken on those grounds. That Ma Shwe Baw was not entitled to a cancellation of the registered deed is clear. The suit was based on the claim that Ma Chit May was not entitled to deal with the property at all and that the deed was wholly void. I am not satisfied that there is sufficient reason for allowing Ma Shwe Baw to raise a fresh case in this appeal

As regards the other two cases, in one of them, Ma Shwe Baw sues for possession of certain jewellery. This claim of hers must obviously fail on the finding that Ma Chit May was the wife of Dawood The third case is a suit by Ma Chit May and her children against Ma Shwe Baw for recovery of household furniture and clothings. Those properties were apparently in the possession of Ma Chit May and her children after her husband's death, and have since reached the possession of Ma Shwe Baw because Ma Chit May went into her house to live and took the properties with her She and her children are merely suing for properties which they allege have been wrongfully taken from their possession by Ma Shwe Baw. In this case also it was never suggested in either of the lower Courts that even if Ma Chit May were the wife of Dawood, the suit must fail because Ma Shwe Baw was also an heir, and here too, I do not see sufficient reason for allowing a fresh case to be made in this Court. The result is I allow all those appeals and I set aside the decree of the District Court in each case, and restore that of the trial Court in each case. The respondent will pay the costs of the appellants in all three Courts

Ma Ngwe Sa and another — Respondents.

Special Second Appeal No. 265 of 1928, Decided on 1st May 1929.

Buddhist Law (Burmese) — Succession — Person marrying second wife on death of first—But divorcing second and marrying third—He had children by first and third wives only—He had also divorced third wife —Suit after person's death by children by third wife against children by first wife for share in first wife's inherited property —Children by first wife are entitled to 3/4th and children by third to 1/4th share.

If a person has more wives than one, property inherited by one of the wives during marriage, if still in existence at the death of the husband and wife, descends to the children by that wife and the children by the other wives can lay no claim to succeed to it. But this rule does not apply where a person marries wives in succession after death or divorce of his former wife.

On the death of his first wife a person married a second wife. He divorced his second wife and married third. He had children by his first and third wives and no children by his second wife. He divorced the third wife also but her children lived with him. After the person's death the children by third wife sued children by first wife for a share in the inherited property of the first wife.

Held . that the rule of partition to be applied was the ordinary rule applicable to partition between children of different wives and that the children by the first wife were entitled to 3/4th share and the children by third wife to 1/4th share : 1 I. R. 1921 U. B. 23, Ref. [P 344 C 2]

Chari—for Appellants.

K. C. Bose—for Respondents

Judgment —U Teik Lon, a Burman Buddhist, married three wives in succession. His first wife was Ma Pa and by her he had four children (present appellants). On her death he married Ma Kyaing but he divorced her and married Ma Paw U. He had no children by the second wife but he had two children (present respondents) by the third wife. He divorced Ma Paw U also but her children remained behind with their father. About 13 years afterwards he died leaving children by the first and third wives A piece of paddy land was acquired during the first marriage. Respondents claimed a half share in that property The Sub-Divisional Judge of Pyinmana gave them two-fifths and the District Judge of Pyinmana on appeal reduced it to one-third. Appellants now contend that respondents are not entitled to any share in that property as it was the property inherited by their mother during her converture with U Teik Lon. Both the lower Courts have referred to the property simply as the property acquired during the first marriage but they have not considered how it was acquired Appellants in their written statement clearly stated that it was the inherited property of their mother. I find that appellants also tendered evidence to that effect. That evidence has in no way been rebutted. I will, therefore, hold that it was the inherited property of the first wife who was the mother of the appellants.

In an Upper Burma case Ma Kin v Kin Kin (1), Mr. Brown as Judicial Commissioner held that where a Burman Buddhist husband has had more wives than one, property inherited by one of the wives during marriage if still in existence at the death of the husband and wife, descends to the children by that wife, and the children by other wives can lay no claim to succeed to it.

That rule of law applies to a case where a Burman Buddhist husband has more than one wife at the same time. An extract from the Manugye in S. 207, of Kinwun Mingyi's Digest reads :

"The rule of partition among several wives who live in the same house and eat out of the same dish with the husband shall apply, mutatis mutandis to partition among their sons. So says Rishi Manu."

As regards the rule of partition among such wives extract in S. 286 of the same Digest reads :

"Several wives live together in the same house and eat out of the same dish with the husband. Each of them shall retain the property brought by her to the marriage or the property acquired by inheritance from her parents subsequent to the marriage or the property given her by the husband as a marriage portion."

In the present case the second wife was married after the death of the first and the third was married after the divorce of the second. The deceased did not have the three wives at the same time. When the appellants' mother died, their father became her heir subject to the claim of an orasa daughter, if any. There appears to have been no such orasa daughter. On his remarriage the atet children became entitled to their mother's share It would be two-thirds. That right lapsed after 12 years. When the father died a fresh cause of action arose and the rule of partition to be applied is the ordinary rule applicable to partition between children of different marriages. S 7 Book 10 of Manugye says :

"If the father had property at the time of his marriage and the second wife none and if none has been acquired during their marriage, let the property be divided into four shares ; let the son of the first marriage have three, and the son of the second one share",

It follows that appellants should get three-fourths and respondents one-fourth. The decree of the District Court will be modified by reducing respondents' share to one-fourth. Each party to bear its own costs

 (a) Penal Code, S. 482—Test for determining infringement of trade-mark — No person shown to be misled—Prominent and substantial portion of both marks not same —Trade-marks called by same name by same only—No offence held to be committed.

The proper test in case of an infringement of a trade-mark is whether the "get up" of the defendant's goods is likely to deceive a purchaser who is acquainted with the plaintiff's "get up" but trusts to his memory. It is to be assumed that the purchaser will look fairly at the goods without distinguishing features being concealed and the Court must also have regard to the class of purchaser by whom the goods would normally be bought: 8 L. B. R 561, Rel. on. [P 351 C 1]

In a prosecution under S. 482, looking at the two marks together, it could be most emphatically said not only that no person seeing the two side by side would confuse the one with the other, but also that no person, who had seen one of the marks and retained the slightest recollection of what it looked like, could by any possibility mistake the other for it, nor was it suggested that there was anything in the appearance of the two marks to lead to confusion. There was no evidence to show that any person had in fact been deceived and had been led to purchase the goods of the accused believing them to be the merchandise of the complainant. Any prominent and substantial part of the complainant's trade-mark did not appear as a prominent and substantial part of the accused's trade-mark. The evidence though perhaps sufficient to show that some people may call the accused's trade-mark by the same name as that of the complainant, was not sufficient to show that every one would do so nor that the mark of accused must inevitably lead to the attribution to their goods the same name as that of the complainant's.

Held: that the complainants had not made out a good case for protection and the accused must be acquitted: (English Cases, Referred). [P 349 C 2]

(b) Penal Code, S. 482—Intent to defraud is necessary ingredient—Intention is presumed when trade-mark false—Burden of proving absence of intention is upon accused—Burden whether discharged depends upon consideration of whole evidence.

On the wording of S. 482 an intent to defraud is an ingredient of the offence, but, when it has been proved that a trade-mark is a false trade-mark, then, it is to be presumed that the accused person had that intent unless and until he rebuts the presumption when the accused person is entitled to an acquittal. The burden of proving the absence of such intent is upon the accused, but the question whether that burden has been discharged must be answered on a consideration of the whole of the evidence in the case: *A. Judgment.—The appellant has been convicted under S. 482, I. P. C. of using a false trade-mark, and has been fined Rs. 750. Before dealing with the facts of the present case, I think it is desirable to refer to an earlier case in which the Manager of R. E. Mohammad Kassim & Co., was convicted under the same section by the District Magistrate of Rangoon on the complaint of The Trading Co, (late Hegt & Co.). The conviction in that case was upheld by Otter, J., in Pakir Mahomed v. Emperor (1).

In that case the complainants had for many years been using a trade-mark on blankets, consisting of a crown enclosed in a double oval The accused had recently put on the market blankets of a somewhat similar kind bearing a trade-mark representing a Fez. The original trade-marks are not now to be found on the trial record of that case, but have been shown to me by Mr. McDonnell who appeared for the complainants both in that case and in this. There was to my mind a fair degree of similarity in the get up of the marks in that case. Both were in black in both cases the central device was enclosed in a double oval, and the only essential difference was in the device itself.

It was found, on the evidence in that case, that Hegt & Co 's mark, which was, in fact, a Crown, was known in the market in Hindustani as the 'topee" mark, and in Burmese as the "oktok" mark. The natural consequence of the introduction of the accused's mark would be that it would be called by its proper name, that is, in Hindustani "topee," and in Burmese "oktok." The trying Magistrate came to the conclusion that the result of this was that the accused's mark was reasonably calculated to cause it to be believed that the accused's blankets were, in fact, the merchandise of Hegt & Co.

(1) A. I. R. 1929 Rang. 322=1929 Cr. C. 498

Coming now to the present case, it is desirable to look first at the two marks in question. In this case the merchandise dealt in by both parties is cotton longyis of a cheap quality Those of the complainants are machine woven and those of the accused are hand woven. There are certain external similarities between the two marks now in question. Both are rectangular in shape both have a margin round the inner rectangle in which there is lettering, and both represent articles which are, or may be, worn on the head There, so far as I can see, the resemblance ceases

The complainant's mark is one of the class of highly coloured and glazed trademarks which are very common. It has an outer margin of pink The inner margin has decorations at the corners. The lettering in it is black At the top and bottom are the name of the firm. " Finlay, Fleming & Co.," and the word " Rangoon." On one side there is black lettering in Burmese and on other side there is black lettering in what I take to be Urdu and Chinese. The inner rectangle has floral decorations at the corners. Its ground work is dark red on which is represented a " fez " in gold. On the side of the " fez " are a star and crescent in white.

The appellant's mark is very dissimilar. It has no ground colour at all, The lettering in the margin between the inner and outer rectangles is in red and is all in English. It merely gives the name of the firm with the word " Rangoon " at the bottom. On the right-hand side is the address of the firm " 312-13 S.B. Bazaar;'. and on the left the words " best quality " In the centre is a neat representation of a Crown in gold, with straight lines radiating from the lower half of it. There are two stars in the body of the Crown, which is surmounted by a similar third star.

It has not throughout the case been suggested that the presence of a star or stars in each of the two marks gives any cause for complaint. I may add, although the " fez " in the one case and the " Crown " in the other are both represented in gold, yet, the gold in the two cases is very different in appearance, Looking at the two marks together, it can be most emphatically said not only that no person seeing the two side by side would confuse the one with the other, but also that no person, who had seen one of the marks and retained the slightest recollection of what it looked like, could by any possibility mistake the other one for it. It has not, in fact, been suggested that there is anything in the appearance of the two marks to lead to confusion.

The complainant's case is that his mark is known as the "topee" or "oktok" mark, and that the appellant's mark, although it does not, in fact, represent either a " topee " or an " oktok," is likely to be known by those names in the market, and has, in fact, become known by those marks The prosecution is, in fact, based on R E. Mahammad Kassim's case (1), which I have alread mentioned. Coming now to the evidence, I will first say what evidence there is not.

There is the evidence of Mr Forrester of the complainant firm that his firm has been using his mark not only on these quality longyis but on piecegoods generally for a long period of years He does not know, in fact, when the accused's mark was first introduced into the market He does not himself say nor does any other witness, that the complainant's longyis sold under this mark have attained any considerable reputation for quality, nor is there any evidence that the use of the appellant's mark on longyis has led to any decrease in the complainant's business There is no evidence, indeed, no attempt to produce evidence, to show that any person has, in fact, been deceived, and has been led to purchase the appellant's longyis believing them to be the merchandise of the complainant. The complainant examined altogether seventeen witnesses, the main effect of whose evidence is that, in the case of Hegt & Co.'s " Crown " mark on blankets and one or two other marks, the marks are, in fact, known by dealers in the bazaar as the " topee " or " oktok " mark

There is also a certain amount of evidence that the accused's mark is also known by those names. Perhaps witness 8, Maung Po Thaw, may be referred to in a little more detail. He says that once the witness, Moosa, came to him with the witness, Sultan Sahib, and asked if he had any longyis with the " oktok tazeik," He had some with the appellant's mark (Ex. 1), and showed these longyis to them. He is supported in this by Moosa but not by Sultan Sahib, who says nothing on this subject at all, and it is to be noted that Moosa is the Bazaar Clerk of the complainant firm and has admittedlly been seeking for evidence for them in this case. Maung Po Thaw himself says that, if people asked for "taraphu" (that is the correct Burmese word for "Crown"), he would show them Ex 1, but he adds that no one has asked for it. He says also that, if people asked for the "oktok" mark, he would show Ex 1, also. He does not now sell the complainant's goods, but formerly he used to do so and, if, when he was doing so, anyone had asked for the "oktok" mark, he would have shown them the complainant's longyis and not the appellant's. In other words, not stocking what is properly known as the "oktok" mark, he would show them longyis bearing the "Crown" mark, which he actually had in stock. That, I think, is what one would expect any shop-keeper to do. Not having what the customer asked for, he would naturally try to get the customer to buy what he had The witness, however, does not give any concrete case in which he showed the appellant's longyis to a customer except that of Moosa.

For the defence there are some fifteen witnesses, most of whom are dealers in different kinds of goods which are sold with a trade-mark depicting a Crown.

The first witness speaks of woollen goods, others of ready made shirts, of voile, of face powder, of aluminium goods, of nails and corrugated iron, of soap, of butter, of lace and of cloth, all sold with "Crown" trade marks. They say that these marks are known in Hindustani as "taj" and in Burmese as "taraphu," and in one or two cases that occasionally the marks might be referred to by the words "topee" or "oktok."

Defence witness 6 is a Chinese trader of Thaton. He says that he sells longyis with both the complainant's and the appellant's mark, and that the complainant's mark is known in Burmese as "oktok" and in Hindustani as "topee," while the appellant's mark is called "taraphu" by Burmese customers and "taj" by Indian customers. Witness 8, Ba O, is a trader at Moulmeingyun, who sells longyis with the appellant's marks. This witness perhaps is not very reliable.

Witness 9, Maung Ba Tin, is also a trader at Moulmeingyun. He says that he sells longyis with the mark Ex. 1, which is known as "taraphu" mark. The total effect of the evidence seems to me to be that, although the appellant's mark would properly be known in Hindustani as the "taj" mark and in Burmese as the "Taraphu," there are some people who would refer to it as, in Hindustani the "topee" mark and and in Burmese the "oktok" mark But I think that the defence does succeed in showing that there are very many "Crown" marks in use, which are generally called by their proper name.

The whole question is whether, on this evidence, it can be held that the use of the appellant's mark is reasonably calculated to cause it to be believed that his goods are, in fact, the merchandise of the complainant's: and, in view of the extreme difference between the two marks, as already described this question if it is to be answered in the affirmative, can be so answered only on the finding that purchasers are likely to be deceived by the mark being though quite incorrectly, referred to by the same name name as the complainant's mark. I have been referred to a very large number of reported cases, all of which I have examined, but I do not propose to refer to all of them. I think we can at once rule out of consideration all cases in which it was held that there was such similarity between the two marks that purchasers would reasonably be deceived.

The first case quoted, and the one on which the complainants mostly rely, is the case of Seixo v. Provezende (2). In view of the fact that such great reliance is placed on this case, I think it desirable to give somewhat lengthy extracts from it. In his judgment the Lord Chancellor, Lord Cranworth, said: (pp. 196-197).

"It is obvious that, in these cases, questions of considerable nicety may arise as to whether the mark adopted by one trader is or is not the same as that previously used by another trader complaining of its illegal use, and it is hardly necessary to say that in order to entitle a party to relief, it is by no means necessary that there should be absolute identity. What degree of resemblance is necessary from the nature of things is a matter incapable of definition a priori. All that Courts of Justice can do is to say that no trader can adopt a trade-mark so resembling that of a rival, as that ordinary purchasers, purchasing with ordinary caution are likely to be misled. It would be a mistake, however, to suppose that the resemblance must be such as would deceive persons who should see the two marks placed side by side. The rule so restricted would be of no practical use.

If a purchaser looking at the article offered to him would naturally be led, from the mark impressed on it, to suppose it to be the production of the rival manufacturer, and would purchase it in that belief, the Court considers the use of such a mark to be fraudulent. But I go further. I do not consider the actual physical resemblance of the two marks to be the sole question for consideration. If the goods of a manufacturer have from the mark or device he has used, become known in the market by a particular name I think that the adoption by a rival trader of any mark which will cause his goods to bear the same name in the market, may be as much a violation of the rights of that rival as the actual copy of his device. It is mainly on this ground that I have come to the conclusion that the decision of the Vice-Chancellor in the present case was correct.

Ever since the year 1848, the plaintiff Baron Seixo, had caused his casks to be stamped with his coronet and the word "seixo," and the evidence shows that his wines had thus acquired in the market the name of "Crown Seixo wine." When, therefore, the defendants, in the year 1862, adopted as their device a coronet, with the words "Seixo de Cima", meaning 'Upper Seixo,' below it, the consequence was almost inevitable that persons with only the ordinary knowledge of the usages of the wine trade from Oporto would suppose that, in purchasing a cask of wine so marked, they were purchasing what was generally known in the market as 'Crown Seixo wine.' The present case is thus brought distinctly within the principle on which all these cases rest. The plaintiff had adopted a device or trade-mark which had caused his wines to obtain celebrity under a name descriptive of that trade-mark The defendants have adopted a trade-mark which could not fail to lead purchasers to attribute to the wines so marked the same name as that under which the plaintiff's wines were known, and so to believe that in purchasing them they would be purchasing the wines of the plaintiff. Against the use of such a trade-mark the plaintiff has, I think, a right to have the injunction of this Court."

The parts of this judgment that are mainly relied upon are where the Lord Chancellor said :

"I do not consider the actual physical resemblance of the two marks to be the sole question for consideration," and where in the next following sentence he said :

" * * * that the adoption by a rival trader of any mark which will cause his goods to bear the same name in the market, may be as much a violation of the rights of that rival as the actual copy of his device * * *."

I wish to lay stress on these two sentences and on the words "sole" and "may be." It is quite obvious that the Lord Chancellor did not go so far as to lay down the proposition that the physical resemblance between the two marks was not to be taken into consideration at all, nor did he lay down the proposition that the fact that one mark might in the market be known under the same name as another necessarily was a violation of the rights of the owner of the first mark. It seems to me quite clear that there is a very great distinction between that case and the one now before me. The whole of that case, as reported in the judgment, really turned on the use of the word "seixo," which had been used by the plaintiff for many years as descriptive of his wines and apparently had not, in England at any rate, been used as descriptive of anyone else's wines until the defendant used it for his. That, of course, was not an English word and, therefore, not in common use, and I think that it would be an unwarrantable extension of the principle laid down in this judgment to apply it to the use of names of common articles, such as hats, or of articles which, in pictorial representation at any rate, are exceedingly common, such as "Crowns"

I wish also to quote the concluding portion of the Lord Chancellor's judgment (pp. 198-199) :

"The defendants rested their argument in part on the case of Leather Cloth Co. v. American Leather Cloth Co. (3), But the facts of that case bear no resemblance to the present. There, both parties, plaintiffs and defendants, were manufacturing and dealing in the same article, known in the market as American Leather Cloth , neither party had an exclusive right to that name, and the plaintiffs had not acquired any particular name for their American Cloth, unless indeed the name of Crockett & Co., the persons from whom they had purchased their business, could be so considered. But no one, looking at the defendants' trade-mark, could be led to suppose he was purchasing goods from what was originally Crockett's manufactory. Unless a purchaser could be deceived by the similarity of the trade-marks, he could not be deceived at all, and the House of Lords thought that the two trade-marks were so different that no one could suppose them the same. This case, therefore, affords no support to the defendants. In order to assimilate that case to the present we must suppose that the plaintiffs there had so marked their goods with the name of 'Crockett' as to have obtained for it in the market the name of 'Crockets' 'American Leather Cloth,' and then that the defendants had adopted a device which would lead purchasers to suppose that their cloth was not merely American Leather Cloth, which it was, but Crockett's American Leather Cloth, which it was not."

It seems to me that the case referred to in this extract is much more similar to the present case than is the case of Seixo v. Provezende (2) itself. The next case is that of Cope v. Evans (4). In that case it was found that the defendant's trade-mark was not such an imitation of the plaintiff's trade-mark as, in the opinion of the Court, made deception probable. It is evident from the report that the two marks in question were certainly much less different than those in question in the case before me.

In the following passage from the learned Vice-Chancellor's judgment it would seem that, if the two trade-marks in dispute are not so similar that the Court considers the difference unsubstantial, the plaintiff must prove to the satisfaction of the Court that its intervention is required to protect the plaintiff from the defendant's goods being taken for his (p. 141) :

"In cases where it appears that defendants have adopted a plaintiff's trade-mark, and it is proved that defendants' object in doing so was to pass off their own goods as those of the plaintiff, the Court will, without further inquiry, restrain the defendants, and it will also do so where there has been such adoption, although proof of the defendants' object be wanting, if it appear that any one has in fact been thereby induced to buy the defendants' goods as being the goods of the plaintiff. In the absence of proof of such object and of such deception, if the two trade-marks are not to the eye of the Court either altogether identical, or so similar that the Court considers the difference unsubstantial, the plaintiff must make out to the satisfaction of the Court that its intervention is required to protect the plaintiff from the defendants' goods being taken for his (plaintiff's). For the plaintiff to say that his name or mark is to be found on the defendants' goods is not sufficient Thus, in the case of Bradbury v. Evans, in which the proprietors of Punch sought unsuccessfully to restrain the sale of a weekly publication which had adopted the name of Punch and Judy, the Court, looking at the two publications, and considering that the later publication would not be taken by purchasers for the earlier one, refused to interfere. The two were so dissimilar in appearance, that, whether the two publications were seen side by side or were seen separately the one would not be taken for the other."

Applying that test to the present case, I find it exceedingly difficult to hold that the complainants in the present case have made out a good case for protection. The Vice-Chancellor in his judgment discussed the case of Seixo v. Provezende (2), and said p 150 :

"Lord Cranworth here says that if the rival trader adopts a mark which will cause his goods to bear the same name in the market, this may be a violation. He then proceeds to examine the case before him, and says that, the mark being adopted, the consequence was almost inevitable that persons would suppose that in purchasing a cask of the defendant's wine they were purchasing that of the plaintiff, that the defendant's mark could not fail to lead purchasers to attribute to the wines so marked the same name as that under which the plaintiff's wines were known. Have the plaintiffs in the present case shown that the defendant's user of their mark will cause their goods to be taken for the plaintiffs'? Will it be the inevitable consequence of the use by the defendants of their mark that purchasers in purchasing the defendants' cigars will believe that they are purchasing the plaintiffs' ? Is it true that the defendants' mark cannot fail to attribute to their goods the same name as is used by the plaintiffs' ? Upon the evidence in this case I answer all these questions in the negative."

Putting to oneself the questions which the Vice-Chancellor there set out, it seems to me that, on the facts of the present case, it is very difficult to answer either of them in the affirmative The evidence is perhaps sufficient to show that some people may call the appellant's trade-mark by the same name as that of the complainant, but I am certainly not satisfied that every one would do so, or that the use of the appellant's mark cannot fail to have this effect.

The next case quoted is that of R Johnston & Co. v. Archibald Orr Ewing & Co. (5). I do not think it is necessary to discuss this case, the facts of which are so entirely different from those of the case before me as to make it useless as an authority I would, however, quote the following extract from Lord Blackburn's judgment (pp 228 and 229) :

"I think the true guide is given by Lord Kingsdown in the Leather Cloth Co. Ltd. v. American Leather Cloth Co. (3), at 538 where he says: 'The fundamental rule is that one man has no right to put off his goods for sale as the goods of a rival trader; and he cannot therefore, in the language of Lord Langdale in the case of Perry v. Truefit (6), be allowed to use names, marks, letters or other indicia by which he may induce purchasers to believe that the goods which he is selling are the manufacture of another person. Then he proceeds to say what he thinks any person is at perfect liberty to do, and adds, speaking of the particular case Leather Cloth Co. Ltd. v. American Leather Cloth Co. Ltd. (3) at p. 539. On the other hand they had no right directly or indirectly to represent that the article which they sold was manufactured by Crocketts or by any person to whom Crocketts had assigned their business or their rights. They had no right to do this either by positive statement or by adopting the trade-mark of Crocketts & Co., or of the plaintiffs to whom Crocketts had assigned it, or by using a trade-mark so nearly resembling that of the plaintiffs as to be calculated to mislead incautious purchasers. These being, as I conceive, the rights of the defendants and the limit of those rights, what is it that they have actually done and in what respect have they infringed the rights of the plaintiffs? That depends upon the question how far the defendants' trade-mark bears such a resemblance to that of the plaintiffs' as to be calculated to mislead incautious purchasers. That, I apprehend, is precisely the question which is to be asked here. In the case from which I have been citing that question was answered in favour of the defendants, in the present case I think it must be answered in favour of the plaintiffs."

(4) [1874] 18 Eq. 139=22 W.R. 450=30 L.T. 292.

(5) [1881] 7 A. C. 219.

And the following from the judgment of Lord Watson (p. 231).

"When a prominent and a substantial part of a long and well known trade-mark, denoting the manufacture of a particular firm, appears as a prominent and substantial part of a rival, it seems reasonable to anticipate that the goods of the latter may be mistaken for, or sold as, the manufacture of the firm to which the older trade-mark belongs."

I give this latter extract because it is quoted by the Magistrate in his judgment in this case, but it seems to me that it is not relevant to the present case at all. It is impossible to say in this case that any prominent and substantial part of the complainant's trade-mark appears as a prominent and substantial part of the appellant's trade-mark.

The next case to which I wish to refer is that of Payton & Co. Ltd v. Snelling Lawpard & Co., Ltd. (7) and, in particular I wish to refer to the following passage in the judgment of Lord Justice Romer (p 57, Lines 19—29):

"It seems to be a sort of popular notion of some witnesses that in considering whether customers are likely to be deceived, you are to consider the case of an ignorant customer who knows nothing about, or very little about the subject of the action. That is a great mistake. The kind of customer that the Courts ought to think of in these cases is the customer who knows the distinguishing characteristics of the plaintiff's goods, those characteristics which distinguish his goods from other goods on the market so far as relates to general characteristics. The customer must be one knowing who, what is fairly common to the trade, knows of the plaintiff's goods by reason of these distinguishing characteristics. If he does not know that, he is not a customer whose views can properly, or will be, regarded by this Court."

This judgment of Romer, L J., was expressly approved by Lord Macnaghten in the House of Lords at p. 635 of the report of the appeal (in the same Volume of the R. P C), and it was also quoted with approval by Kekewich, J., in Alaska Packers' Association v. Crocke & Co (8).

In the case of Tatem & Co., Ltd. v. Gaumant Co., Ltd (9) it was held by the Court of Appeal that the defendant's trade-mark was not an infringement of that of the plaintiff, although both contained representations of a black cat and were applied to the same kind of goods. Obviously, there was a much greater resemblance between the trade-marks in that case than in the one now before me. In the case of Wilkinson v. Griffith (10), it is evident that there was considerable evidence of actual intent to defraud, and the similarity between the marks in question was at any rate sufficient to put it in a different class from the present case.

A number of Indian cases have also been cited, but I do not think that any of them is of any assistance, except perhaps Emperor v. Bakarullah Malik (11) which was a criminal case coming under the same section as the present case, and in which the Court held, on what seems to me a very much stronger case than the present one, that the conviction could not be upheld. I come now to certain Burma cases: Emperor v. Po Saing (12). That was a case in which the accused had been selling kerosine oil in tins of the Burma Oil Company, and it was held that it had been sufficiently indicated on the tins that the oil sold was the Burma Oil Company's oil, and, therefore, fell within the section. This case seems to me of very little help. The same remark applies to Abdul Majid v. Emperor (13), in which it is clear from the judgment that there was at any rate a certain degree of similarity between the two marks, and that both could properly be called in Burmese by the name "bawlon taseik" This case also does not seem to me to be any authority for the present conviction.

Byramjee Cowasjee v. Vera Somabhai (14), was a civil case relating to butter in tins. I am told that in fact it related to one of the marks produced in evidence by the defence in this case In this case the late Sir Charles Fox said (p. 65) :

"The proper test is whether the "get up" of the defendant's goods is likely to deceive a purchaser who is acquainted with the plaintiff's "get up" but trusts to his memory. It is to be assumed that the purchaser will look fairly at the goods without distinguishing features being concealed and the Court must also have regard to the class of purchaser by whom the goods would normally be bought. 27 Halsbury's Laws of England 766."

That seems to me to be a correct statement of the test and it is a test which, to my mind, is not satisfied by the facts of the present case.

I am left now only with the case of R E Mohammed Kassim & Co. (1), which I mentioned at the beginning of this judgment. It is urged for the complainants that that case is ample authority for the present conviction, and that, if I feel inclined to differ from the judgment of my learned brother, Otter, it is most desirable that I should make a reference to a Bench or Full Bench. In my opinion there is a considerable difference between the two cases sufficient to make it unnecessary for me to say either that I agree with my learned brother, or that I differ from him

As I said before, the complainants' mark in that case was a "Crown," but it was, in fact, known as the "topee" mark, and consequently the introduction of the accused's mark, which, in fact, represented what would properly be called a "topee," inevitably led to the result that the accused's blankets were described by the same mark name as those of the complainant, and, thus, there were certainly much stronger grounds for holding that his mark fell within the mischief of S 480, I. P. C., than there are in the present case.

I do, however, differ from my brother, Otter, but it is on a minor point of not very great importance. At the bottom of p. 11 of his judgment he remarked :

" * * * the present case is a criminal prosecution and intent to defraud is not an ingredient in the offence."

In my opinion on the wording of S. 482, an intent to defraud is an ingredient of the offence, but, when it has been proved that a trade-mark is a false trade-mark, then, it is to be presumed that the accused person had that intent unless and until he rebuts the presumption, when the accused person is entitled to an acquittal. When he is entitled to an acquittal if he can prove the absence of a certain intent, it seems to me obvious that that intent is an essential ingredient of the offence

On the two trade-marks in question themselves, and on the evidence in the case, the only conclusion that seems to me possible in the present case is that the appellant's use of his trade-mark is not reasonably calculated to cause it to be believed that his goods are, in fact, the merchandise of the complainants, and, on that ground, I think that the conviction cannot stand. But I would say further that, even if I am not correct in that view, I still think that the appellant is entitled to an acquittal on the ground that he had no intent to defraud. The burden of proving the absence of such intent is indeed up on him, but the question whether that burden has been discharged must be answered on a consideration of the whole of the evidence in the case, and, in my opinion, the facts of this case are such that it would be quite impossible to hold with any semblance of reason that the appellant in making use of the mark complained of, had any intent to defraud On this ground also I should acquit him. I allow this appeal, set aside the conviction and sentence passsd upon the appellant, and direct that the fine be refunded to him.

BROWN AND MAUNG BA, JJ.

G, a pleader, In the matter of.

Civil Misc. Appln No. 78 of 1929, Decided on 28th August 1929.

(a) Legal Practitioners Act, S. 12—Conviction under Gambling Act is not sufficient for disciplinary action.

The conviction of a pleader under the Gambling Act can hardly be looked upon by itself as sufficient reason for disciplinary action. [P 352 C 2]

(b) Legal Practitioners Act, Ss 12 and 13—Conviction of pleader for intimidating and assaulting woman does not by itself amount to defect in character and is not sufficient for suspending him from practice.

A pleader was convicted under Penal Code for intimidating and assaulting a woman in a most reprehensible manner. It was the first occasion on which disciplinary action was called against him

Held that the conviction was not by itself sufficient to show defect of character which unfits him to be a pleader within the meaning of S. 12,

Held further : that though the words " any other reasonable cause in S. 13 seem to be wide enough to include the case, still the conduct was not such as to justify suspending him from practice. [P 352 C 2]

A J Darwood—for Respondent.

Judgment.—G, a lower grade pleader at Einme in the Myaungmya District has been called on to answer certain charges framed against him, under the provisions of S. 14, Legal Practitioners Act. The third charge is with reference to Criminal Regular Trial No. 220 of 1928 of the Fourth Additional Magistrate, Myaungmya. In that case one Maung Ba Th was sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment for causing grevious hurt. The District Magistrate, who has reported the matter to this Court states :

"If the evidence of Maung Maung (P. W. 2) in this case be believed, Mr. Stanley might have been assaulted by Ba Tha at the instigation of the pleader.

The assault apparently was the outcome of a drunken brawl, and the Sessions Judge in his judgment on appeal remarked that the case reflected no credit whatsoever, on all the parties concerned. There is nothing, however, in the judgments implicating G. in the assault, nor can we read the evidence of U Maung Maung as implicating him. There does not seem to be anything in this charge, which we can consider against the respondent.

There remain for consideration the other two charges. The first of these charges is that he was convicted under S 11, Burma Gambling Act and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 25 and the second charge is of insulting the modesty of a woman. He was convicted under Ss. 506 and 509, I. P C, and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 50. The conviction under the Gambling Act could hardly be looked on by itself as sufficient reason for disciplinary action. The other case is more serious. According to the judgments in that case, the respondent and others intimidated a woman and assaulted her in a most reprehensible manner. Such conduct certainly reflects no credit on the persons concerned and is not conduct such as is to be expected from a pleader in the Courts. We are unable, however, to say that from this conviction by itself we can infer a defect of character which unfits the respondent to be a pleader within the meaning of S. 12, Legal Practitioners Act. Under S. 13 of the Act, disciplinary action can under Cl. (f) be taken for " any other reasonable cause." The words seem to be wide enough to cover the present case. We regard the conduct of the respondent as most reprehensible, but we are not satisfied that it is such as to justify us in suspending him from practice. The respondent has been a third grade pleader for about 22 years, and this appears to be the first occasion in which disciplinary action has been called for against him We direct that the respondent be warned and that we consider his conduct as disclosed in Criminal Regular Trial No. 99/28 was most reprehensible, and that a repetition of such conduct may make it necessary to take severe disciplinary action against him.

Civil Revn. No 187 of 1929, Decided on 17th September 1929, from order of Dist. Judge, Toungoo, D/- 23rd May 1929, in Civil Misc. No. 45 of 1929.

Burma Rural Self Government Act (4 of 1921), Rr. 34, 36 and 39—District Judge acting under R 34, or Assistant Judge nominated by him to hear petition challenging election is persona designata and no revision lies to High Court against their order.

The provisions of R 36 which enables the District Judge to delegate his power to an Assistant Judge and the direction that petition challenging an election shall be tried in open Court do not show that the District Court through the District Judge functions in the disposal of the application The words "in open Court" in R 34 mean only that the matter should not be disposed of in camera. Therefore the District Judge functioning under R. 34 is a persona designata and an Assistant Judge who is directed by him to dispose of the petition is also a persona designata and so no revision lies to the High Court against their order *A. Paget—for Applicant.

Judgment.—This is a revision application against the order of the District Judge of Toungoo in the following circumstances· One U San Hmway was elected a member of the District Council by the Tantabin Circle Board. U Ohn Pe filed an application in the District Court challenging the election on certain grounds The application of U Ohn Pe was not accompanied by a deposit of Rs. 100 according to the rules, but this sum was paid in later. The learned District Judge acting presumably under S 36 of the Rules made by the Local Government to which I shall refer later directed that the petition be tried by Assistant Judge, U Aung Tun Gyaw. Before the said Assistant Judge the respondent filed objections, and one of the objections filed by him was that, as there was no previous deposit of Rs. 100 as required by R. 35, the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the petition. The learned Assistant Judge U Aung Tha Gyaw, on 29th April disposed of this objection, and he in effect held that the deposit of Rs. 100 was not a condition precedent to the vesting of the jurisdiction in the Court; that that sum could be paid at any time within the limitation period; and that he had power to extend the time for payment. Against this order an application for review was made and disposed of by the District Judge himself and an appeal was also preferred against the order to the District Judge.

It is very doubtful if the application for review lies, but it is unnecessary to consider the point, as the District Judge agreed with the conclusion arrived at by the Assistant Judge and dismissed both the application and the appeal.

The application for revision to this Court is against these orders, and the first point for consideration is whether a revision lies to this Court. If the ruling in the Municipal Corporation of Rangoon v. M. A. Shakur (1) applies to this case, then the High Court is precluded frem entertaining the revision application In that case it was held by a Full Bench of this Court that the Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes in disposing of petitions regarding elections to the Corporation of Rangoon acts as a persona designata aad that, therefore, no revision lies to this Court It is urged by the learned advocate for the petitioner that that ruling does not apply to the facts of this case because the provisions of the rules show that the District Judge in these matters is acting not as a parsona designata but as the presiding officer of the District Court. It will be convenient to refer to the relevant provisions of the rules at this stage.

Rule 34 enacts that the validity of an election may be questioned by petition to the District Judge on certain grounds. R. 35 is to the following the effect:

"No petition shall be admitted without a deposit of Rs. 100 and after 15 clear days (excluding judicial holidays) have elapsed from the date on which the result of the election was published (under R. 23) or declared (under R. 31)"

Rule 36 onacts that if after such enquiry as may be necessary the District Judge considers that there are not sufficient grounds for trying the petition, he shall make an order dismissing it and that order shall be final. If he considers that the petition ought to be tried he is empowered to make an order directing its trial either by himself or by such Assistant Judge as he may appoint. R 37 provides for the trial of petitions in open Court and R. 39 gives a right of appeal against the finding or order of an Assistant Judge to the District Judge whose orders on the appeal shall be final. Reliance is placed by the learned advocate for the petitioner on the provisions which enable the District Judge to delegate his power to an Assistant Judge and to the direction that the petition shall be tried in open Court as indicating that the intention of the rule making power that the District Court through the District Judge functions in the disposal of these petitions. I cannot accept this contention.

The District Judge is undoubtedly a persona designata in respect of the functions exercised by him under R. 34 The power given to him as District Judge to delegate his jurisdiction to an Assistant Judge does not show that the District Judge is not a persona designata. The Assistant Judge to whom he delegates the power may be person entirely unconnected with his Court The use of the word "in open Court" in R. 37 in my opinion means nothing more than this that the matter is not to be disposed of in camera and are used for the purpose of ensuring an open trial in the Court house. The words "in open Court" are used in contradistinction to "in camera."

I am fortified in this opinion by a decision of the Madras High Court in O. A. O K. Lakshmanan Chetty v. J. S. Kannappar (2) where a somewhat similar argument was raised. In that case the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court of Madras was the person to whom a petition for revision was allowed in the case of an objection to the nomination of a councillor It was urged in argument that accordiag to the rules of the High Court the Chief Judge was empowered to direct that any petition should be heard by a Bench consisting of two or more Judges of his Court. The Madras High Court held that notwithstanding this rule the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court was a persona designata and that no revision application lay to it from his decision. I am, therefore, of opinion that the District Judge when functioning under R. 34 of the rules is a persona designata and that an Assistant Judge who is directed by him to dispose of the application is also a persona designata and that therefore this revision application against their order is incompetent. I, therefore, dismiss the application, but there will be no order as to costs as the respondent has not appeared.

Per Full Bench.—The definition of the word "laws" in its juridical sense is that "laws" are rules of civil conduct enforced by the State. From this it follows that the rules of conduct as laid in Vinaya for the guidance of Buddhist monks cannot be deemed to be "laws" unless they are enforced by the State. According to S. 13 (1), Burma Laws Act, they are not enforced by the State except in cases in which questions regarding any religious usage or institution arise. A sale being a pure matter of contract is not "a question regarding any religious usage or institution." A Buddhist monk, therefore, is not disqualified from contracting by law within the meaning of S. 11, Contract Act; (1915) 2 U. B. R. 61; 29 I. C. 613 and 5 Rang. 626=A. I. R. 1928 Rang. 3=106 I. ## Order of Reference

Carr, J.—U Shwe Gon before his death disposed of the bulk of his estate by deeds of gift in favour of his children, but reserved some 22·69 acres of paddy land for his maintenance until his death. One of the beneficiaries under the deed of gift was his eldest son U Pyinnya who was at that time, and still is, a Burmese Buddhist Monk. Another was another son, Maung Byaw, father of the plaintiff-respondents in the present appeal, in which U Pyinnya is the principal appellant After U Shwe Gon's death his children, including U Pyinnya, raised money by mortgaging the 22·69 acres of land, together with the land that had been given to U Pyinnya. Later the other children including Maung Byaw, sold the 22 69 acres and a piece of garden land to U Pyinnya by a registered deed for a nominal consideration of Rs. 2,000. The actual consideration was that U Pyinnya took over liability for the debts incurred and paid only Rs 50 cash.

Maung Byaw has since died and his children, the plaintiff-respondents have brought this suit to administer U Shwe Gon's estate, claiming among other things that the 22·69 acres of paddy land is a part of that estate.

A number of questions arise in the appeal, but the only one on which I feel any difficulty is the question whether the sale to U Pyinnya is valid or not. Both the lower Courts have found that it is not valid, under the authority of U Tilawka v Shwe Kan (1). There is also a decision of one Judge of this Court in U Teza v. Ma E Gywe (2), which supports their findings.

I feel considerable doubt of the correctness of both these decisions. In the first of them Mr MacColl, J. C, suggested that if the Contract Act had applied to the transaction before him that transaction would have been void under S 23 of that Act as defeating the personal law of the phongyi concerned In the second case Maung Ba, J. held that the transaction was immoral and therefore void. I am strongly inclined to doubt the correctness of both propositions. They are based on the proposition that a Buddhist monk is prohibited by the rule of his order, as contained in the Vinaya, from engaging in such pecuniary transactions. That proposition I do not contest, but it seems to me at least doubtful whether the rules of the Vinaya form a part of the personal law of a Buddhist monk so as to bring the case within S 23, Contract Act. And I doubt also whether on that ground it can be said that either the object or the consideration of the agreement can be said to be immoral. The object was to transfer ownership of land, the consideration was in part, payment of money, and in part, an undertaking to pay money; both are in themselves perfectly lawful and moral. The only immoral part of the transaction was U Pyinnya's disregard of the rules of the religious order to which he belongs, which seems to me a matter between himself and his conscience and the heads of his order and not within the scope of the Contract Act.

Again it seems to me doubtful whether there is any question of a religious usage or institution "within the meaning of the Burma Laws Act, S. 13."

Another question is whether on the facts set out the plaintiffs are not estopped from questioning the validity of the sale by their father whose successors in interest they are. In U Tilawkas' case (1), Mr MacColl remarked that even if the plaintiff had no title the defendant might be estopped from denying his title. But he did not go further into this question, saying that the question was "a broader one than a mere question of title or estoppel". I do not think that this was a sufficient reason for shutting out the question of estoppel.

In the present case, the plaintiffs can claim only as heirs of Maung Byaw and if Maung Byaw would have been estopped from questioning the title of his vendee U Pyinnya, on the ground of the latter's incapacity to contract, the plaintiffs also must be estopped.

I refer the two following questions for decision by a Full Bench:

(1) Is the sale of immovable property to a Burman Buddhist monk void on the ground that a mouk is prohibited by the rules of the Vinaya from entering into such pecuniary transactions ?

(1) [1915] 2 U. B. R. 61=29 I. C. 613.
(2) A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 3=5 Rang. 626.

(2) If such a sale is void is the vendor estopped from suing to recover possession of the property on the ground of the vendee's incapacity to contract?

Opinion of First Full Bench

Rutledge, C J.—I have had the advantage of reading the judgment of my brother Maung Ba, and I agree with the conclusions which he has reached in this case.

Section 11, Contract Act, 1872 says

"Every person is competent to contract who is of the age of majority according to the law to which he is subject and who is of sound mind, and is not disqualified from contracting by any law to which he is subject."

Then arise the following questions (a) Is the Vinaya a law within the meaning of this section? (b) Are Burmese Buddhist monks subject to the Vinaya? (c) Does observance of the provisions of the Vinaya render it impossible for Burmese Buddhist monks to enter into contracts for purely secular purposes?

Probably the most important of these questions is the first. The question is asked: in what way are the provisions of the Vinaya more in the position of the law of the land than the provisions of the great monastic orders of the Christendom such as the Benedictines or Dominicans The analogy at first seems plausible to minds formed under the Western modern systems of jurisprudence which do not recognise any personal laws as exceptions to the universal law of the land applying to all the inhabitants of a nation. But it was not always so in the West If the question had arisen in the Middle ages it would in all probability have come before an Ecclesiastical Court and the regulations of the particular order would have been given the force of law S. 11 clearly on the question of capacity to contract throws up back upon the personal laws governing the parties. The Court has to consider :is one of the parties disqualified from contracting under his personal law. As pointed out by a Full Bench of five Judges of the late Chief Court in Shwe Ton v. Tun Lin (3):

"The Vinaya and its commentaries form part of the Buddhist Law and where the devolution of the property of a phongyi is concerned, it seems right that this branch of the law should govern the decision."

There are many other cases where the Courts for a long series of years have treated the Vinaya as the part of Burmese Buddhist Law which governs the monkhood, but as this Full Bench ruling is so specific I do not think it necessary to refer to them.

I would consequently answer (a) and (b) in the affirmative. With regard to (c) from the quotations in the judgment of my brother Maung Ba and of the late Mr. McColl in U Tilawka v. Nga Shwe Kan(1),the Vinaya not only forbids monks from entering into contracts unconnected with the religious life, but contemplates that they are utterly incapable of so doing having died a civil death.

My brother Carr considers that the reference raises merely a question of contract and not a question regarding any religious usage or institution, and if it is not, S.13, Burma Laws Act 1898 abrogates all rules of Buddhist Law relating to contract, I am unable to agree with him on this point It will not be denied, I think, by any one that the fraternity of yellow robe is a religious institution Usage is as nearly as possible a synonym for custom. The provisions of the Vinaya are the religious usage governing the religious institution of the Buddhist monkhood The question then, whether the religious usages governing a monk render him incompetent to enter into a contract for secular purposes must in my opinion be considered by the Court by virtue of S. 13, Burma Laws Act. It is consequently a part of the Buddhist Law enforced by the State and these religious usages must be examined for the purpose of ascertaining whether the monk is "disqualified from contracting by any law to which he is subject. S. 11, Contract Act."

As I have already said in my opinion the Vinaya considers that a monk is utterly incapable of entering into contracts unconnected with the religious life and I accordingly answer (c) in the affirmative and in my opinion, he is equally disqualified whether he purports to be a transferrer or a transferee.

Throughout this judgment I have taken the reference to be limited to transactions for a secular or personal and not for a religious purpose. It has been pointed out to me that the question referred does not so limit the reference. In my opinion it ought to be so limited. The judgments of the late McColl and Mya Bu, J. from which Carr, J. dissents does not question that a monk was competent to contract for a purely religious object and so there is no controversy with regard to such contracts. If we turn to S. 23, Contract Act, we find that this deals with the lawfulness of the consideration or object of the agreement. While I think that the question naturally comes under the head of capacity to contract, it may be considered also as the offering of any consideration by a monk of a wordly nature not connected with the religious life or the object of which is to cause wordly gain of a personal and not a religious nature to accrue to a monk Thus stated it is forbidden by the Vinaya and is of such a nature that if permitted it would defeat the provisions of the Vinaya and a Court applying the principles by the Vinaya would be justified in regarding it as immoral.

I accordingly answer the first question in the affirmative. For the reasons given my brother Maung Ba, I answer the second question in the negative.

Maung Ba, J —Carr, J., has referred the two following questions for decision by a Full Bench :

(1) Is the sale of immovable property to a Burman Buddhist monk void on the ground that a monk is prohibited by the rules of the Vinaya from entering into such pecuniary transactions ?

(2) If such a sale is void, is the vendor estopped from suing to recover possession of the property on the ground of the vendee's incapacity to contract ?

He has made the reference because he doubted the correctness of the propositions laid down in the case of U Tilawka v. Shwe Kan (1) and in that of U Teza v. Ma E Gywe (2).

In U Tilawka's case (1), a Buddhist monk sought to redeem a mortgage effected by him. The question considered in that case was whether a Buddhist monk was capable of entering into a valid contract such as mortgage for his own personal profit. McColl, J C., answered the question in the negative.

In U Teza's case (2) another Buddhist monk sought to recover possession of a house bought by him with borrowed money. I held that the monk could not succeed in his suit.

Both the decisions were based upon the principle that the transactions in both cases offended the personal law of Buddhist monks viz., Vinaya, a code of disciplinary rules laid down by Lord Buddha for the Sangha.

Section 11, Contract Act, deals with competency to contract and it mentions three disqualifications, namely:(1) infancy, (2) insanity, (3) special disqualifications by personal law. S. 23 of the same Act deals with unlawful considerations. A consideration which the Court regards as immoral or opposed to public policy is unlawful. So also is a consideration which is forbidden by law and is of such a nature that if permitted would defeat the provisions of any law. Carr, J., has expressed doubt whether the rules of Vinaya form a part of the personal law of a Buddhist monk so as to bring a case within S. 23, Contract Act, and also whether on that ground it can be said that either the object or the consideration of an agreement is immoral. It cannot be disputed that an agreement that would defeat the provisions of Hindu Law or Mahomedan Law or Buddhist Law would be unlawful within the meaning of S. 23. A contract to give a son in adoption in consideration of an annual allowance to the natural parents would defeat the provisions of Hindu Law and a suit would not lie to recover any allowance on such a contract. Upon the same principle an agreement between a Mahomedan husband and his wife for a future separation is void. So also is a contract between a Buddhist husband and his first wife not to give the second wife of equal status any share in the lettetpwa property.

In the case of Shwe Tun v Tun Lin (3) the Thathanabaing has clearly stated that a matter concerning rahans which involves a dispute about property either between monks themselves or between monks on the one hand and laymen on the other would be decided according to the five books of Vinaya, and that the authority of the Dhammathats is not recognized. Of course the commentaries viz , Attakathas, Tikas, and Ganhandana are consulted for help in the interpretation of texts in the Vinaya.

The Vinaya contains rules promulgated by Lord Buddha from time to time as occasion arose. One of the rules prohibits a monk from having sexual intercourse. It follows that a monk cannot enter into a valid contract of marriage why, because it will defeat the provisions of his Vinaya. If a monk contracts with a woman that he will marry her as a rahan and live with her as man and wife without leaving the order and breaks his contract, can the woman sue him in damages for breach of contract? Certainly not, as the contract is unlawful It may be argued that the contract is unlawful because it is immoral, why immoral? It is immoral because Vinaya prohibits sexual intercourse in the case of a rahan Marriage in itself is not immoral for in some religions ministers of religion can marry.

Since Dhammathats are not applicable to rahans, and since Vinaya applies to them, it follows that the latter is their personal law. The rules of Vinaya may even be viewed in the light of customary law or customs having the force of law. Now what does the Vinaya say about buying and selling? In the first book of Vinaya namely Parajkam, there is a rule dealing with "Kayaweikkaya" (buying and selling). It is said that while Buddha was residing at the Zetawun monastery in Thawutti, a rahan and a parabaik exchanged robes This was reported to Buddha. He condemned the transaction and made this rule. "A rahan who does buying and selling is guilty of Nissagi pacittayam." The rahan can escape from the consequences of this sin only by confession and discarding the thing. Buddha applied this rule to all things from Kyaungs down to the most insignificant things such as soap powder, and tooth pick

A layman entering the order "dies a civil death" He severs himself from the world and is divested of all he possessed in the world. Can such a man who has taken the vows to lead a holy life in accordance with Vinaya employ himself as a layman while he is still a rahan and transact business for his personal benefit in violation of Vinaya, his personal law, and be permitted to enforce or to reap the benefits of contracts which would defeat that law? I would certainly say, No. Such conduct on the part of the rahans is immoral from the point of view of Buddhist, and morality is but a relative term. What appears to be moral according to one religion may not be so according to another. For the Buddhists, a rahan who violates his Vinaya is an "alijji" and his conduct in violation of Vinaya is immoral.

I hold that Vinaya is the personal law of a Buddhist monk within the meaning of S. 13, Burma Laws Act, so as to bring a case within S. 23, Contract Act, and that his buying and selling for his own benefit offends that law and is immoral. So I would, therefore, answer the first question in the negative. I wish to make it clear that this answer is to be restricted to transactions of a purely secular nature unconnected with religion. A monk may accept a religious gift in accordance with Vinaya. Of course the party dealing with him is protected by the provisions of S. 65, Contract Act. If the rahan received any advantage under such a contract, he is bound to restore it or to make compensation for it to the person from whom he received it.

As regards the second question about estoppel the answer depends upon whether the rahan is the buyer or whether he is the seller. If he is the buyer, as in the present case, he being the party under disability to buy there can hardly be any question of his being induced to buy by misrepresentation that he was under no such disability But if he is the seller and if he has induced the other party to buy under the belief that he was under no disability to sell he would certainly be estopped from denying his capacity to sell. I would, therefore, answer this question in the negative.

Carr, J —The first question referred is:

"Is the sale of immovable property to a Burman Buddhist monk void on the ground that a monk is prohibited by the rules of the Vinaya from entering into such pecuniary transactions?"

The question implies that the rules of the Vinaya do prohibit a monk from entering into such pecuniary transactions and it may further be admitted that a Burmese Buddhist monk is subject to those rules in that they are rules of conduct by which he, as a member of the Sangha should be guided. The real question in issue is whether those rules are "laws."

The best definition that I know of the word "laws" in its juridical sense is that "laws" are rules of civil conduct enforced by the "State."

Accepting that definition, a rule of conduct is not a "law" unless it is also enforced by the State, and the rules of conduct prescribed in the Vinaya are, therefore, laws only if they are enforced by the State. To determine whether they are so enforced one must turn to S. 13, Burma Laws Act (13 of 1898) which reads:

"(1) Where in any suit or other proceedings in Burma it is necessary for the Court to decide any question regarding succession, inheritance, marriage or caste, or any religious usage or institution :

(a) The Buddhist Law in cases where the parties are Buddhists, . . . . . shall form the rule of decision, except in so far as such law has by enactment been altered or abolished, or is opposed to any custom having the force of law.

(2) Subject to the provisions of sub-S. (1) and of any other enactment for the time being in force, all questions arising in civil cases instituted in the Courts of Rangoon shall be dealt with and determined according to the law for the time being administered by the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction.

(3) In cases not provided for by sub-S. (1) or sub S. (2) or by any other enactment for the time being in force the decision shall be according to justice, equity and good conscience."

My view of the effect of that section is that from the time of the enactment the rules of Buddhist Law regarding the subject specified in sub-S (1) were adopted by the State as the law which it would enforce as between Buddhists but all other rules of Buddhist Law were abrogated and ceased to be law in the proper juridical sense of the word, because the State by necessary implication from the terms of the section declared that it would not enforce them.

Turning now to S. 23, Contract Act, I am of opinion that it cannot be said that either the consideration or the object of the sale of the property in question in this case was immoral. The object was the sale of land, the consideration was the payment of money, both are in themselves perfectly moral. The disregard by U Pyinnya of the rules of the Vinaya by which as a member of the monastic order, he should be guided was no doubt in a sense immoral. But that had nothing to do with either the object or the consideration of the agreement. Admittedly a monk may hold property and may receive it as a gift. The object was to transfer land to him, and since he may hold land there was nothing in that object that was immoral. Nor can it be said that it is forbidden by law or if permitted would defeat the provisions of any law. In my opinion, therefore there is nothing to make the transfer void under this section.

In S. 11, Contract Act, we find that :

"Every person is competent to contract who is not disqualified from contracting by any law to which he is subject."

Under this section if a monk is disqualified by law from contracting, any contract entered into by him is void : see Mohori Bibi v. Dharmo Das Ghose (5).

If the rule of the Vinaya under discussion is law, I think it would have to be held that a monk is disqualified from contracting, but if it is not law there is no such disqualification

In order to find that the rule is law it would be necessary to find :

(1) that it was a rule of Buddhist law, that is, that it was a rule enforced by the State even before the enactment of the Burma Laws Act, and

(2) that it is one of the rules of the Buddhist Law which by S. 13 of that Act, the State has declared that it will enforce.

As regards the first point I am not altogether satisfied that this rule ever was law in the juridical sense, I do not, however, think it necessary to go into this question, which would involve a very long and difficult research.

In my opinion the rule is not law because it does not come within S. 13 of the Act. The question before us is whether a Buddhist monk is competent to contract or not, and in my view that it is not "a question regarding any religious usage or institution." It is a question regarding contract and the effect of S. 13, Burma Laws Act is, as I have said before, to abrogate all rules of Buddhist Law relating to contract.

In my opinion therefore a Buddhist monk is not incompetent to contract.

I would say further that even if he were held to be incompetent to contract, it would be necessary to find further that he is legally disqualified to be a transferee within the meaning of S. 6 (h) (3) T. P. Act.

The following cases : Ulfat Rai v. Gauri Shanker (5), Narain Das v. Mt. Dhania (6), Munni Konwer v. Madan

(4) [1903] 30 Cal. 539=30 I. A. 114=7 C. W. N. 441=8 Sar. 374 (P, C.).

(5) [1911] 33 All. 657=11 I. C. 20=8 A. L. J. 670.

(6) [1916] 38 All. 62=31 I. C. 792=13 A.L.J. 1084.

Gopal (7), Munia Konan v. Perumal Konan (8), Raghava Chariar v. Srinivasa Raghava Chariar (9), furnish ample authority for the proposition that a competent sale to a minor is valid in spite of his incompetence to contract.

The sale would therefore be void only if we could find that a monk is legally disqualified to be a transferee. Now it is admitted that a monk may hold property such as paddy land and that he may be transferee of such property ; it cannot therefore be held that the rule in question even if it be law, disqualifies him from being a transferee.

I would therefore answer the first question referred in the negative.

On that answer the second question does not arise, but I am satisfied that if the first question were answered in the affirmative there would be no estoppel.

Brown, J.—I concur with the judgment of my brother Carr. (On equal division between the four Judges the case was referred to another Full Bench of five Judges who gave the following opinion.)

Opinion.

Heald, Offg. C.J.—The relevant facts of this case are shortly as follows :

Shwe Gon had several children and before his death he executed certain deeds of gift by which he distributed his estate among his children reserving only 22·69 acres of paddy land for his own maintenance during life and for the expenses of his funeral when he died. This area of 22·69 acres was part of a holding of 46·69 the other part of which had been given by registered deed of gift to his eldest son U Pyinnya, a Buddhist monk. When Shwe Gon died his children including U Pyinnya mortgaged the whole of that holding in order to raise money for the funeral and not long afterwards the rest of the children sold to U Pyinnya by registered deed whatsoever interest they still had in the 22·69 acres.

Now the children of one of Shwe Gon's sons Mg Byaw who has since died, claim administration of Shwe Gon's estate by the Court and this suit raises questions of the validity of the gift of 24 acres to U Pyinnya and of the validity of U Pyinnya's purchase of the rights of the other heirs in the 22·69 acres.

The learned Judge of this Court who dealt with the case on appeal came to the conclusion that the gift to U Pyinna was valid, and with his decision on that point we are not now concerned.

On the question of the validity of U Pyinnaya's purchase of the rights of the other children the learned Judge said that he felt some difficulty. Both the lower Courts had found that the purchase was invalid on the authority of the cases of U. Tilawka v. Shwe Kan (1) and U. Teza v. Ma E Gywe (2) but the learned Judge said that he felt considerable doubt of the correctness of those decisions. He accordingly referred the following two questions for decision by a Full Bench.

(1) Is the sale of immovable property to a Burmese Buddhist monk void on the ground that a monk is prohibited by the rules of the Vinaya from entering into such pecuniary transactions ?

(2) If such a sale is void is the vendor estopped from suing to recover possession of the property on the ground of the vendee's incapacity to contract,

The reference came before a Bench of four Judges, including the learned Judge who had decided U Teza's case (2) and the Bench was equally divided in opinion.

The reference has therefore been heard before a Full Bench of five other Judges.

The provisions of law, which seem to be necessary to consider in connexion with the first of the second questions referred are S. 11, Contract Act, which says that every person is competent to contract who is of the age of majority according to the law to which he is subject and who is of sound mind and is not disqualified from contracting by any law to which he is subject. S. 23, Contract Act, which says that the consideration or object of an agreement is lawful unless it is forbidden by any law or is of such a nature that if permitted it would defeat the provisions of any law or . . . . the Court regards it as immoral or opposed to public policy, that in these cases the consideration or object of an agreement is said to be unlawful and that every agreement of which the object or consideration is unlawful is void : S. 13, Burma Laws Act, which says that where any suit or other proceeding in Burma it is necessary for the Court to decide any question regarding succession, inheritance, marriage or caste or any religious usage or institution the Buddhist Law in case where the parties are Buddhists shall form the rule of decision except in so far as such law has by enactment been altered or abolished or is opposed to any custom having the force of law.

The cases to which it is necessary to refer in addition to those already mentioned are the following, namely Ma Pwe v. Myat Tha (10) and Shwe Ton v. Tun Lin (3).

The earlier of these two cases is important because it introduced for the first time in Burmese Buddhist law the idea that a Buddhist monk is civiliter mortuus, and that idea which I consider to be mistaken has in my opinion been the cause of much of the subsequent misunderstanding The question for decision in that case was whether a Buddhist monk has power to make a gift of property which he owned before he became a monk and it was held that when a monk enters the order he divests himself of all his property except of course the "Arhites" which a monk is permitted to possess and that therefore the monk in that case was no longer owner of the property of which he purported to make a gift. The latter case is important because it has been relied on for the position that the Vinaya and its commentaries form part of the Buddhist Law and that where the devolution of the property of a monk is concerned it seems right that this branch of the law should govern the decision. All that need be said about that case is that it was a case of succession or inheritance in respect of which under S 13, Burma Laws Act, Burmese Buddhist Law is the law which is to be applied and that it had no connexion with contract.

In the case of U Tilawka (1), a Buddhist monk sued to redeem certain property which he had joined in mortgaging and the defence was raised that being a monk he could not be owner of the land. The Court said that the question raised was a broader one than a mere question of title or estoppel and was whether a Buddhist monk is capable of entering into a valid contract such as a mortgage for his personal profit. The mortgage in that case was made at a time when the Indian Contract Act was not in force in Upper Burma, but the learned Judicial Commissioner said that if the Contract Act had been in force at the time, the alleged mortgage would have been void so far as the monk was concerned under S. 23 as defeating his personal law and that although Contract Act could not be applied, as the question for decision was one regarding religious usages, the Buddhist Law must form the rule for decision and it must be held that a Buddhist monk could not contract a valid marriage or sue for restitution of conjugal rights so long as he remained in the priesthood. The propositions in that judgment which seem to me to be open to doubt are the statements that the making or redemption of a mortgage by a monk is a matter of religious usage, and the suggestion that such a transaction would defeat the provisions of law.

In U Teza's case (2), a Buddhist monk sued to recover immovable property which had been conveyed to him by way of sale and a defence was raised that, being a monk, he could not own secular property. The learned Judge who decided the case said :

> "It is needless to say that it has generally been accepted that a Buddhist layman embracing religious life dies a civil death," and in support of that statement he cited the case of Ma Pwe v. Myat Tha (10). As I have already said I do not accept that view. He also cited with approval the decision in U Tilawka's case (1), which I have dealt with above, and he held that because by the rules of his order a Buddhist monk is prohibited from engaging in wordly transactions the monk's purchase of the house which was the subject of that suit was void by reason of the provisions of S. 23, Contract Act, relating to agreements the consideration or object of which is forbidden by law or is of such a nature that if permitted it would defeat the provisions of any law or is regarded by the Court as immoral or opposed to public policy.

The learned Judge adhered to that view in dealing with the present reference, and said that he held that the Vinaya is the personal law of a Buddhist monk within the meaning of S. 13, Burma Laws Act, so as to bring the case within S. 23, Contract Act, and that his buying and selling for his own benefit is immoral.

The contrary view was taken by Carr, J., and I accept his view and have little to add to it It seems to me that matters of contract cannot be regarded as matters of religious usage, and that therefore Burmese Buddhist Law does not apply to them by reason of the provisions of S. 13, Burma Laws Act. I do not think that the rules of conduct applicable to Burmese Buddhist monks are "law" to which a monk is subject in respect of matters of contract because they are not the law which is to be enforced by the Courts. For similar reasons, I do not think that the object or consideration of such an agreement as that with which the present reference is concerned is forbidden by law or is of such a nature that if permitted it would defeat the provisions of any law or ought to be regarded by the Courts as immoral or opposed to public policy. To put the matter shortly I would say that I do not regard the Vinaya or its commentaries as "law" except to the extent that they are recognized as law by S. 13, Burma Laws Act, that is, in cases where the Court has to decide any question of any religious usage or institution and that because I hold that in a suit regarding the validity of a sale to a monk the Court has not to decide any question of religious usage or institution I do not regard the Vinaya or its commentaries as the "law" applicable in such a suit.

I would therefore answer the 1st question in the negative and on that answer the second question does not arise.

I would direct the respondents Mg. Law and Mg Myaing to pay the costs of this reference. Advocate's fee to be 10 gold mohurs.

Chari, J.—I concur in the reasoning of Carr, J and the answers given by him and have nothing to add to what he has said in his judgment. I agree to the proposed order for costs.

Das, J.—I agree with the judgment delivered by Carr, J. and have nothing further to add, I also agree with the proposed order for costs.

Mya Bu, J.—The idea of the Buddhist monk entering into pecuniary transactions such as buying and selling for secular purposes is opposed to rules of conduct, promulgated by Buddha by which Buddhist monks profess to be governed, and which are contained in the Buddhist sacred literature called the Vinaya, and the first question in this reference recognize that such rules prohibit Buddhist monks from entering into such transactions

The rules in question are contained in Ss. 18, 19 and 20 of Patimokkha Nissaggiya Pakittiya, and run as follows:

"(1) Whatsoever Bhikku shall receive gold or silver or get some one to receive it for him or allow it to be kept in deposit for him that is Pakittiya offence involving forfeiture.

(2) Whatsoever Bhikku shall engage in any one of the various transactions in which silver is used that is a Pakittiya offence involving forfeiture.

(3) Whatsoever Bhikku shall engage in any one of the various kinds of buying and selling that is a Pakittya offence involving forfeiture.

A monk who infringes any of these rules is guilty of Nissaggiya Apat, and he may be pardoned for it, if he confesses to it and discards the property acquired by the transaction

The first point for consideration is whether in view of the provisions of S 13 (1), Burma Laws Act, the Vinaya forms the rule of decision of the first question in this reference, and resolves itself into whether the question as to the validity of a sale of immovable property to a Buddhist monk for secular purposes is a question regarding a religious usage or institution

If the question for decision be as to the effect of a sale to a Buddhist monk or his membership of the order as to the penalties to which he is liable as such member or as to whether the property acquired by him is capable of being held by him for his personal enjoyment or for the benefit of the religious order, it may then be said to be a question regarding a religious usage or institution No such analogous question is raised by this reference

A sale is a pure matter of contract, and I fail to see that this reference gives rise to a question regarding a religious usage or institution.

The provisions of law with reference to which the question is to be decided are contained in Ss. 11 and 23, Contract Act, 1872. In my opinion the correctness of the definition of the term "laws" adopted by Carr, J. is not open to question. From this it follows that the rules of conduct in question cannot be deemed to be "laws" unless they are enforced by the State. According to S 13 (1), Burma Laws Act, they are not enforced by the State except in cases in which questions regarding any religious usage or institution arise A sale being a pure matter of contract, the rules in question cannot be said to be enforced by the State since the enactment of S 13, Burma Laws Act, and it appears from the fact that the Dhammathats collected in S 409 of the Kin Wun Mingyi's Digest lay down certain rules regarding the disposal of property acquired, by a monk by agriculture, or trade or by usury that these rules were not enforced by the State except in cases of a purely ecclesiastical nature, even before the passing of the Burma Laws Act. For these reasons, I hold that a Buddhist monk is not disqualified from contracting by law within the meaning of S. 11, Contract Act.

The questions which arise with reference to S. 23 are whether the consideration or object of the sale under consideration is forbidden by law, or is of such a nature that, if permitted, it would defeat the provisions of any law, or is immoral.

The foregoing remarks show that neither the consideration nor the object of the sale can be deemed to be forbidden by law or is of such a nature that it would defeat the provisions of any law.

It remains to consider whether it is immoral. The mere fact that an act is sinful does not show that it is immoral. The offences falling within the class of Nissaggiya Pakittiya are not the heaviest of the offences under the Vinaya. The heaviest offences are the Paragika, consisting of 4 offences by the commission of which a monk becomes ipso facto excluded from the order. They are:

(1) Murder, (2) Theft, (3) Sexual intercourse, (4) False profession of attainment of Arahatship.

The direct result of the commission of any of these four offences is that the offender ceases to be a monk and is no longer eligible for ordination. It is true that a Buddhist monk who has taken the vows of poverty and who professes to have abandoned the pleasures of the world taking part in wordly transactions such as buying and selling is not an edifying spectacle. On the other hand it is equally true that for very many years the Burmese Buddhist monk's vows of poverty sit lightly on him. Nissaggiya Apat is not an unpardonable sin.

I agree with the following remarks of Twomey, J in U Shwe Ton v. Tun Lin (3):

"We find individual monks infringing the Vinaya rules by holding paddy lands and the Burmese Buddhist law books recognize the practice."

The Full Bench in that case very pertinetly remarked:

"that the rigid monastic rule contemplated in the canonical text has long since become only a pious memory and a counsel of perfection."

In all these circumstances I see no good ground for holding that either the object or the consideration of a sale to a Buddhist monk is immoral within the meaning of S. 23, Contract Act.

For the above reasons, I would answer the first question in the negative. As a Burmese Buddhist I would loath to see Buddhist monks indulge in wordly transactions and would have liked to preserve the rulings in U Tilauka v. Nga Shwe Kan (1) and U Teza v. Ma E Gywe (2). If individual monks take advantage of the non-interference by the civil laws of the state in their practice of taking part in wordly transactions they will lose not only the veneration of the laymen, but also the brotherly regard of their puritan brothers, and also lower the tone of purity and reverence of the Buddhist monkhood in the estimation of the public. However since this Court has to administer the law as it stands, I am constrained to dissent from the rulings in these cases, and to give the first question in this reference the answer which I have proposed.

As pointed out by the Full Bench of the late Chief Court in U Shue Ton's case (3) at p 244:

"If reform is desirable it must come from within the order itself and must be brought about by pressure of lay Buddhist opinion."

Since my answer to the first question in this reference is in the negative, the second question does not call for an answer.

I agree with the proposed order in respect of the costs of this reference.

Ormiston, J.—Two questions were referred by Carr, J, for decision by Full Bench:

(1) Is the sale of immovable property to a Burman Buddhist monk void on the ground that a monk is prohibited by the rules of the Vinaya from entering into such pecuniary transactions?

(2) If such a sale is void in the vendor estopped from suing to recover possession of the property on the ground of the vendee's incapacity to contract ?

Carr, J., with whom Brown, J., concurring answered the first question in the negative, and if necessary would have been prepared to hold that there was no estoppel. Maung Ba, J., with whom Rutledge, C. J., agreed in a separate concurring judgment, answered the first question in the affirmative, but agreed with Carr and Brown, JJ., in holding that the answer to the second question should be in the negative. The Court being equally divided on the first question, the reference was further heard by a Full Bench differently constituted

The facts so far as material are set out with sufficient particularity in the order of reference of Carr, J., whose reasoning in the answer to the first question is so cogent that I have little to add to what he has said. As pointed out by the learned Chief Justice, it is not questioned that a monk has capacity to contract for a purely religious object, and the reference should be taken as limited to transactions for a secular or personal and not for a religious purpose.

The answer to the first question appears to depend on the construction to be placed on S 13(1), Burma Laws Act (13 of 1898) which provides that in regard to any question regarding succession, inheritance, marriage or caste or religious usage or institution

" the Buddhist Law in cases where the parties are Buddhists shall form the rule of decision "

The section clearly contemplates that unless the question does fall within the category, the Buddhist Law is not to form the rule of decision. It is immaterial, therefore, whether by the rules of the Vinaya, a monk is prohibited from entering into the transactions or whether prior to the passing of the Act, those rules would, in such a case, have been enforced as laid by a civil Court. They may be binding on a monk, in foro conscientiae, but unless they fall within the ambit of the subsection, they are not to be enforced as law by a civil Court. The only ground on which it can be suggested that a sale of immovable property to a Buddhist monk is covered by the subsection is that it is a question relating to a religious usage or institution. I agree with my brother Carr in holding that the reference involves merely a question of contract and does not involve a question relating to a religious institution or usage It is to my mind immaterial that a monk is a member of a religious institution, whose rules forbid him to enter into a particular contract The question before us is not in regard to institution itself, but whether a member of it may contract. To describe a rule whereby he is forbidden to enter into a particular class of contracts as a religious usage is to give a strained and unnatural meaning to that expression

Section 11, Contract Act, ommitting immaterial portions, enacts that every person is competent to contract who is not disqualified from contracting by any law to which he is subject. If it be the case, as I have held that by the rule of the Vinaya under which a monk may not enter into a contract for a secular purpose is not a rule to be enforced by a civil Court, it is not a law to which he is subject. So far as this section is concerned, therefore, a monk is not disqualified from entering into a contract, and a sale of land to him is not void.

The application of S. 23, Contract Act, rendering void an agreement of which the consideration and object is unlawful remains to be considered. It follows from what I have said that a contract entered into for a secular purpose by a monk is not in itself forbidden by law or of such a nature, that, if permitted, it would defeat the provisions of any law It is suggested that it is immoral or opposed to public policy. In my view it is neither. It can only be immoral on the ground that the monk in entering into it violates an obligation which is binding on his conscience. If this be so, every contract entered into by a man against the dictates of his conscience would be immoral To so hold would be to reduce the law to an absurdity. On the question of public policy, I would say that it is the policy of the law to promote rather than to restrict freedom of contract.

I would answer the first question in the negative. The second question does not arise, and in my opinion, should not be answered.

The decision of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner in U Tilawka v. Nga Shwe Kan (1), that a Buddhist monk is prohibited by his personal law from engaging in any monetary transactions and of this Court in U Teza v. Ma E Gywe (2), that a purchase of property by a Buddhist monk is contrary to his personal law and is immoral within the meaning of S 23, Contract Act, should in my view be overruled.

The respondents will pay the costs of the reference, advocate's fees 10 gold mohurs.

First Appeal No 249 of 1928, Decided on 13th June 1929, from judgment of Dist. Judge, Amherst, in Civil Regular No 11 of 1928.

Buddhist Law (Burmese)—Eldest born daughter dying in infancy—Second child son dying at 40—He living separately from his parents with their consent and never failing them in any family crisis—He is entitled to status of orasa even though he does not live with his parents and does not actively assist them in their business.

Where an eldest born daughter dies in infancy and the second child who is a son dies at the age of 40 and where he lives separately from his parents in accordance with their wishes and never fails them in any way in any family crisis, the mere fact of his not living with his parents and not having actively assisted in their business is no sufficient reason for depriving him of the status of orasa *A. Anklesaria—for Appellants.

Htoon Aung Gyaw—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The property in dispute in this case is the estate of one U Aung Min deceased. U Aung Min married one Daw Ma Ma and they had in all 10 children. The eldest child was a girl Ma May, who died at the age of four. The second child was Maung Kin Maung, the father of the respondents in this case. Maung Kin Maung predeceased U Aung Min. The appellants are the five surviving children of U Aung Min. The respondents brought a suit for the administration of the estate claiming that Maung Kin Maung was the orasa child, and that they were, therefore, entitled to share equally with the surviving sons and daughters They claimed, therefore, an one-sixth share in the estate. It is admitted that, if Maung Kin Maung had the status of orasa, they are entitled to this one-sixth share, and that if he had not, they are entitled only to a 1/24th share. The trial Judge has found the plaintiffs established the orasa status of their father, and has passed a decree, declaring them entitled to a one-sixth share in his estate. Against this decree the defendants have appealed.

The appellants claim that Maung Kin Maung could not be the orasa child, because he was not the first born child, even if he did acquire the status of orasa his children have forfeited the right to base their claim on that status by reason of the fact that he did not live with his parents or helped in the acquisition of the family estate The question of the rights of an orasa was dealt with at very great length by a Full Bench of the late Chief Court of Lower Burma and subsequently by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Kirkwood v. Maung Sin (1) It is pointed out in that case that the rights of an orasa have to be considered in two different aspects. There are first of all the rights of a son claiming a quarter share of the estate on his mother's death or of a daughter claiming a similar share on the death of the father There are secondly the rights of the children of an orasa, who predeceased the parents, claiming a share in the inheritance equal to that of the younger brothers and sisters. Kirkwood's case (1) dealt with the claims of an orasa in the latter aspect. The finding was that the orasa must be the eldest born child capable of undertaking the responsibilities of the deceased parents, and that that status should be attained during the lifetime of both parents by a son, if he was the eldest born child, and by a daughter, if she was the eldest born. Once the status has been attained either by the son or the daughter, no one else can claim that status

It was suggested in argument before us in the present case that, as U Aung Min was predeceased by his wife, it would be a daughter, and not a son, who could claim as orasa. This contention was in our opinion disposed of in Kirkwood's case (1). Maung Kin Maung attained the age of majority during the lifetime of both his parents, and was capable, therefore, of attaining the status of an orasa, If he did attain that status, then it makes no difference to his status that it was his mother, and not his father, who died first. On his mother's death he would not be entitled to claim a quarter share of the estate, but his status so far as the claims of the children are concerned would not be affected It is further contended, however, that Maung Kin Maung never did attain the status of orasa, and that he could not do so, as he was not the eldest born child. In the case of Tun Myaing v. Ba Tun (2), at p. 294 the following principles were enunciated :

" The eldest born son is the orasa by right; but he does not attain the complete status as such till he attains his majority, and becomes fit to assume his father's duties and responsibilities and to assist in the acquisition or management of the family estate. If he dies before he attains his majority, or if he is incompetent to fulfil the above conditions, then his next younger brother, subject to the same conditions, succeeds to his position as orasa. If, however, the eldest son attains his majority and fulfils the prescribed conditions, and then dies before his parents, his position as orasa remains unfilled and the next brother does not succeed to it."

If this enunciation of the law is correct, then it is clear that for the status of orasa to be attained it is not in all cases necessary for the child, for whom that status is claimed, to have been the eldest born if the eldest born died in infancy.

It is contended, however, that this decision and any other decision of a like nature were overruled by the the decision of the Privy Council in Kirkwood's case (1). In their discussion of the relevant passages from the Dhammathats in their judgment in that case their Lordships pointed out the insistence on the orasa child being the eldest born child of the wedded pair Thus at p. 783 (of 2 Rang.) they remark :

" The Vilasa declares that on the death of the father the rule of partition between mother and son is as follows. It specifically states . " If the son is the eldest born," and " if he helped the parents in the acquisition of the family property, he shall get his father's elephant, etc. The remainder of the estate shall be divided into four shares the mother shall get three shares and the son one share" and to the question. "Why should the eldest born child get a fourth share?" The answer is ; "The parents obtained the child at the commencement of their wedded life by their earnest prayer and acquired the property with his or her assistance," What can all this mean, except that " the eldest son " referred to in all this Dhammathats is the eldest born child of the wedded pair,"

In the case before them their Lordships had not for consideration a case in which the eldest born child had died in infancy, and we do not think that their decision directly or impliedly involved a finding that, if the eldest born child died in infancy, no other child could ever attain the status of an orasa It is true that in summing up the decision, their Lordships remark at p. 786 (of 2 Rang.) :

" The status does not depend on the decease of the father, where the child is a son, or of the mother, where it is a daughter, it comes into existence on the fulfilment of three conditions, viz. : (1) that he or she is the first-born child; (2) that it attains majority, and (3) helps either in the acquisition of the family property and the discharge of the father's responsibilities; or, if a daughter, helps the mother in the care of the property and the control and management of the household, which lie particularly within the mother's duties."

But as we have said there is no question in that case of the first born child having died in infancy, nor did their Lordships in any part of their judgment deal with such a case. In their final conclusion their Lordships expressed general assent with the observations of the Judges of the Chief Court, and on this point Heald, J., expressed his opinion clearly in the course of his judgment. At p. 746 he remarks :

" The question then arises whether if the eldest child dies in infancy, the next child succeeds as auratha. The Dhammathats, so far as I know, give no answer to this question though as I have said the Attasankhepa considers the possibility of a case in which there is no auratha but only younger children. I think from my experience of cases under Burmese Buddhist Law for more than 20 years, that there can be no doubt that children who do not grow up are always disregarded and that the eldest child who reaches an age at which he or she would be able to take the place of the father or mother in case of death would always be regarded as auratha."

Again at p. 759 (of 2 Rang.) of his judgment he remarks:

"The case of Ma Em Thu v. Maung Hla Dun (3), was one in which the question of the rights of grandchildren arose and it was held that where the eldest child was a son who died in infancy, the son of the next eldest child, who was a daughter and who grew up, was entitled to share equally with his mother's younger sister. That decision was in my opinion correct, but the judgment seems to suggest that if there had been a son surviving instead of two daughters, the son might possibly have been auratha to the exclusion of the elder sister, and that view, I think, would be mistaken. The ruling was not, however, officially reported."

(2) [1906] 2 L. B. R. 292.

(3) [1912] 5 Bur. L. T. 73=15 I. C. 360.

He then proceeded to quote the case of Ma Su v. Ma Tin (4), in which the same view as to the effect of the eldest born child dying in infancy was considered. Certain remarks of Duckworth, J., suggest that he might have taken a contrary view. He states at pp. 770 and 771 (of 2 Rang.) :

"The point is that, if a son is not the first born child, he can never be auratha, unless the eldest child dies before reaching majority or competency, and then only when the eldest child is a male. It is very doubtful whether, according to the Dhammathats, another can become auratha in place of the deceased eldest daughter."

But he cites no authority in support of his view. The tendency of judicial decisions of recent years has been to place the sexes on a status of absolute equality with regard to their claims of inheritance in the estate of their deceased parents, and we know of no authority in the Dhammathats for the view that, if the eldest born child is a daughter and dies in infancy, no other child can attain the status of an orasa. The views of Heald, J., on this point are generally in accord with previous decisions in Burma and we agree in those views. The result is that Maung Kin Maung, who did not die apparently till he was over 40 years of age,did attain the status of orasa, and that he retained that status until his death unless it be held that he failed to fulfil certain other requisite conditions besides that of being the eldest child. We have already referred to the passage in their judgment in Kirkwood's case (1), where their Lordships set forth the three conditions necessary for the coming into existence of the status of orasa by a son or daughter : (1) that he or she is the first born child; (2) that it attains majority; and (3) helps in the acquisition of the family property and the discharge of the father's responsibilities if a son. In our view of the reasons we have already given, the first two requisities are satisfied in this case, and in stating the third requisite we do not think that their Lordships intended to lay down a definite rule which must be rigorously followed in every case

In deciding on the applicability of these remarks to the present case, it must be remembered that in the case before their Lordships there was no question of the orasa not having helped in the acquisition of the family property, and on this point the remarks of their Lordships amount to little more than that these requisites are set forth in the Kyetyo Dhammathat. The remarks on the point are a summary of the result of extracts from the Dhammathats and cannot in our opinion be interpreted as intended to lay down any definite law on this point. There are certain passages in the Dhammathats which suggest that a child loses its rights of inheritance on failure to live with its parents, and it is contended that this rule has still greater force when the rights claimed are the special rights of the orasa. In the case of Ma Hla U v Maung Shwe Yin (5), the eldest daughter on the death of the mother claimed a quarter share in the joint estate. It was held that the mere fact that she had lived separately from her father and that she had never assumed the duties of her deceased mother in the family was not sufficient reason for denying her rights.

In the present case U Aung Min was a goldsmith. He sent his son Kin Maung to an English school and after leaving the school Kin Maung first became a clerk in a lawyer's office Subsequently he became a teacher and then a clerk in the Deputy Commissioner's office,Thaton. He was subsequently transferred to Pa-an as Sub-Accountant and later joined the establishment of the Divisional and Sessions Judge, Moulmein. He was then appointed a Myook. It is quite clear from his training and his subsequent occupation that he could not well assist his father in his business as a goldsmith, and indeed that his father never expected him to do so. There is no evidence that his relations with his parents were other than normal In the course of his work he had been transferred away from Moulmein where his parents lived. But he never ceased to maintain filial relations with them, and there is evidence to the effect that he did at times help them with presents of money. Certain remarks by Heald, J., in Kirkwood's case (1), on this point at pp. 746 and 747 (of 2 Rang.), have been cited by the trial Judge:

"There can, I think be no doubt that the Dhammathats which give a special share to the oldest child who is competent to take the place of father or mother contemplate a family in which the auratha is living in the family house and does actually take the place of the parent. Indeed I doubt whether the Dhammathats contemplated the auratha's taking away the special share unless he or she was ousted from the position of head of the family by the surviving parents marrying again. Some of the Dhammathats would deprive a son or daughter, who does not live with the family and take the father's or mother's place of the auratha child's share, vide the texts cited in Ss. 36, 37, 40, 41 and 62 of the Digest, but I think that in this case, as in certain other cases, e. g., the cases of adopted and stepchildren, the necessity for joint living may now be considered as archaic and obsolete and may be disregarded."

With these remarks we agree. There is nothing to show that Kin Maung's special help was ever asked for by his father or refused by him. His working first as a clerk in a lawyer's office and later on as a clerk in the Government service was apparently in accordance with the wishes of his parents. There is nothing to show that he ever failed his parents in any way in any family crisis and that being so, we do not consider that the mere fact of his not living with his parents and not having actively assisted in their business is sufficient reason for depriving him of the status of orasa. We are, therefore, of opinion that the case has been rightly decided by the trial Court, and that the respondents collectively are entitled to share equally in the estate of U Aung Min with the five appellants. We accordingly dismiss this appeal. The trial Court directed the costs in that Court to come out of the estate, and we think that, in the circumstances, a similar order might fairly be passed here. We, therefore, direct that the costs of this appeal be awarded out of the estate.

BROWN, J.

Maung Ba Oh—Appellant.

v.

Motor House Co Ltd.—Respondent.

Special First Appeal No. 128 of 1928, Decided on 26th March 1929, from judgment of Small Cause Court, Judge, Rangoon, in Civil Regular No. 6659 of 1927.

Contract Act, S. 74—Contract by M for purchase of Motor truck from D—Truck delivered to M—Part of purchase money paid and with regard to balance M entering into hire purchase agreement about truck in which M was described as hirer and D as owner—Under agreement balance was to be paid in instalments and on payment of whole sum M had option to purchase truck by paying one rupee—Agreement containing clause that on failure by M of any instalment as it became due D could seize car and credit its value as against amount due by M but M was not to be credited with more sum than then due—Agreement though in form of hire, object of parties in drawing it up was to enter into contract for sale—Stipulation that M was not to be credited with more sum than then due was by way of penalty which Court can and ought to relieve against under S. 74.

M entered into a contract with D for purchase of a motor truck for a certain sum. The truck was delivered to M. M paid only part of the sum and entered into a hire purchase agreement about truck in which M was described as hirer and D was described as owner for the sum still due. Under the agreement M was to pay the balance by instalments and on payment of the whole sum had the option of purchasing the truck for one rupee. The agreement contained a clause to the effect that on failure by M of any instalment as it became due D was entitled to seize the car and credit its value as against the amount due but subject to a condition that in no case should he credit M with more than the amount still due on the contract.

Held that though the agreement was in form one of hire, the object of the parties in drawing up the agreement was to enter into a contract for sale providing at the same time security to the seller for due payment of the purchase money. [P 371 C 1]

Held further that the stipulation in the agreement that D could seize the car and keep it without making any payment to M even though the value of the car might be greatly in excess of the amount due under the agreement was a stipulation by way of penalty which the Court could and ought to relieve against under S. 74: 5 *L. Judgment.—In April 1926 the appellant Maung Ba Oh entered into a contract with the defendant company for the purchase by him of a Graham Brothers' Motor Truck for the sum of Rs 3,850. The truck was delivered to the appellant on 30th April on his paying Rs. 1 000 as a first instalment towards the price. At the same time he wrote a letter to the defendant company agreeing to pay the balance within three months by instalments. On 7th June 1926, Maung Ba Oh paid the defendant-company a further sum of Rs 800. He claims that he made another payment of Rs 165 at the close of June but this payment is not admitted. No other payment was made before October. On 12th October the respondent company wrote to the appellant pointing out that payments were overdue and saying that unless payments were made by 20th, legal action for the recovery of what was due would have to be taken. On 28th October the appellant went to the Motor House Company and talked to them about the matter. He had Rs. 127 with him and he paid that sum towards the amount due. The next day he again visited the office of the company and on that day he signed a hire purchase agreement with reference to the truck. The document is filed as Ex. K It is an ordinary hire purchase agreement in which the Motor House Company are described as the owners of the truck and the appellant is described as the hirer. A total sum of Rs. 2,143 was to be paid in nine months in instalments of Rs. 238 on 29th day of each month beginning on 29th November. On failure on the part of Maung Ba Oh to pay any instalment as it became due, the respondents were entitled to seize the car and credit its value as against the amount due but subject to a condition that in no case should they credit the appellant with more than the amount still due on the contract.

Since that date the appellant has paid one instalment of Rs. 238 only and in the month of February 1927 the defendant company seized the truck. They subsequently sold it to one Binjraj for Rs. 2,750. The appellant filed a suit against the Motor House Company in which he claimed that they had no right to seize the car. He stated that the value of the car when seized was Rs. 3,500 and that at that time there was a sum of Rs. 1,520 only due from him towards the purchase money. He asked for a decree for the difference between these two sums, Rs. 1,980. The defendant company denied that they were in any way liable to the plaintiff. They pleaded that under the agreement Ex. K they were entitled to seize the car and that the plaintiff was not entitled to claim anything from them. The trial Judge dismissed the plaintiff's suit and the plaintiff has now appealed.

The document Ex. K, as I have said, is an ordinary one of hire purchase agreement. The plaintiff, however, pleads that when he signed it he did not understand what he was signing. It was represented to him by the defendant company that he was merely signing an agreement to pay the balance of the purchase money due on the car by monthly instalments of Rs 200. It is admitted that the appellant made two visits to the office of the Motor House Company, one on 28th October and, one on 29th. The plaintiff says that his visit on 29th was not made in order to come to terms about the car but merely in order to have something done to the carburettor. Whilst he was there the document (Ex. K) was given to him without the blanks being filled in and at the defendant's request he signed it.

He has called two witnesses to support his version of what occurred, Maung Than Sein and his motor driver Maung Tha Byaw. Than Sein says that at the time he was reading a document which was blank, and whilst he was doing so the plaintiff came in. He gave the document up to a "bo," presumably the Manager of the Company or one of the Assistants, and the "bo" gave it to the plaintiff who thereupon signed it. Tha Byaw says he saw the "bo" hand a paper to the plaintiff and the plaintiff write on it. But he admits that he was some distance off The trial Judge has not accepted this evidence and it does not seem to me to be very convincing. It is extremely unlikely that the appellant, a business man, would blindly sign a document of this sort Mr. Bertie, the Manager of the Motor House Company and Mr. Morley, his Assistant, both say that the terms of the document were explained to the appellant before he signed it, and that the blanks in it were filled up. I agree with the learned trial Judge that it is extremely unlikely that the Motor House Company would in the circumstances have agreed not to take any further action for the recovery of what was due on the car in return for the plaintiff's merely signing an agreement to pay what he was already bound to pay. It is prima facie unlikely that the appellant would have signed a blank document and I think that the evidence of Mr. Bertie and Mr. Morley that the document was not blank when it was signed may be accepted

Two alterations have been made in the document. In the first clause the period of hire was first of all written down as 12 months; this was subsequently altered to nine, and the date for the payment of instalment was first of all entered as the 15th of each month, but this figure was subsequently altered to the 29th. Mr. Morley says that both these alterations were made before the agreement was accepted by Mr. Bertie. Mr. Bertie says the alterations from 12 to 9 were not then made. The trial Judge has accepted Mr. Morley's statement on this point. The total sum due on the document was shown as Rs. 2,143 and the monthly instalment shown as Rs. 238. These figures were clearly entered in the first instance. Nine times Rs. 238 amounts to Rs. 2,142 and it is clear therefore that the document originally contemplated a period of nine months, and, whenever the alteration to nine months was made, it clearly represents the original intention of the parties. I am of opinion that the document (Ex K) was signed by the plaintiff of his own free will, that he must be presumed to have understood what he was signing and that it does represent the terms of the contract agreed on between the parties.

As regards the amounts which have been already paid towards the price of the car, I also agree with the finding of the trial Judge The plaintiff claims to have paid the sum of Rs. 165. The defendant says that this payment was made not towards the price of the car but towards the insurance premium thereon. The plaintiff admits that Rs. 165 was paid towards insurance and he has failed to prove that he made more than one payment of that amount. The amount that was due therefore under the original contract at the time of the execution of Ex. K was the sum of Rs. 3,850 less the three instalments of Rs. 1,000, 800 and 127, or a total of Rs. 1,927. The defendant says that the Rs 220 was by consent added to this sum to represent interest. The interest would work out at a somewhat high rate but not at a rate unusually high for such agreements. Between the purchase and the Ex. K the plaintiff claims that he spent Rs. 557 in having a body made for the car That he did spend some money for this has been proved, but I agree with the trial Judge that he has not proved that the value of the truck was increased by the whole amount of the money he spent on this body. If the terms of the contract, Ex. K, are to be enforced in their entirety, then it seems to me that the suit was rightly dismissed. But the question remains whether the terms of the contract should be enforced in full. Exhibit K is headed :

" Memorandum of Agreement between Messrs. The Motor House Co. Ltd., called the owners and Maung Ba Oh, called the Hirer, "

Clause 1 of the agreement reads :

" The owners agree to let, and the hirer agrees to hire a truck and accessories as described on the back hereof for the term of nine months, for the sum of Rs. 2,143 payable down and the balance in monthly instalments of Rs. 238 on 29th day of each month at Rangoon, the first instalment to be paid on 29th November next 1926. "

Clause 2, amongst other things, recites that " it is agreed that the truck shall remain the property of the owners until and unless the hirer exercises the option. contained in Cl. 9"

Clause 3 reads

"Should the hirer make default in any monthly payment as agreed, or commit any breach of any provision of this agreement or should he die or have a receiver order made against him or make any arrengement or composition with his creditors, or should the said truck be seized under execution or legal process, the whole sum then remaining unpaid of the full amount of Rs. 2,143 shall become due and payable forthwith, and the owners shall have the right at any time to retake possession of the said truck and accessories, and to credit the account of the hirer (as against the balance of the said full amount) with an amount representing the fair market value of the machine and accessories in their then condition but such amount shall not be greater than the whole sum then owing by the hirer to the owner."

Clause 6 says :

"The hirer shall be at liberty at any time during the continuance of the agreement to return the said truck and accessories to the owners, carriage paid, and upon the same being safely received by the owners, they shall be credited to the hirer's account in the same manner and with the same effect as is provided in para 3 hereof, provided that the owners shall not be compelled to allow for the said truck and accessories a greater sum than the balance of the whole sum owing by the hirer to the owners. It is the intention of this agreement that on the determination of the hiring under this clause the hirer shall at once pay the balance of the full amount named in Cl. 1, less an allowance for the fair market value as aforesaid.

And the agreement concludes with Cl. 9 :

"It is further agreed that if and when the full amount firstly above named shall have been paid to the owners, the hirer shall have the option of purchasing the said truck and accessories for the sum of one rupee, but no such option shall arise in case of termination of hiring under Cls. 3 or 6 hereof.

The construction of a hire purchase agreement with reference to a sewing machine was discussed in the case of Musa Mia v Dorabjee (1), and also in the Upper Burma case of Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Elahi Khan (2). In each of those two cases the claim made was for hire long after the period when if the amount payable had been paid on the dates due, the machine would have become the property of the hirer. The two cases are not, therefore, analogous to the present case But in the Upper Burma case, it was held that the circumstances of the case appeared to bring it within the intended application of S. 74, Contract Act, and I think the same view may be taken as regards the present case.

Section 74, Contract Act provides :

"When a contract has been broken, if a sum is named in the contract as the amount to be paid in case of such breach, or if the contract contains any other stipulation by way of penalty, the party complaining of the breach is entitled, whether or not actual damage or loss is proved to have been caused thereby, to receive from the party who has broken the contract reasonable compensation not exceeding the amount so named, or, as the case may be, the penalty stipulated for."

Now the agreement in the present case is on the face of it an agreement to hire with an option of purchase, but, as pointed out in the Upper Burma case of Singer Manufacturing Company (2) at p. 294 :

"In construing a contract it is, of course, the duty of the Courts to look not merely at the surface and form, but also into the heart of the matter and to ascertain its true meaning and the actual intention of the parties."

Although the agreement is in form one of hire the object of the parties in drawing up the agreement was to enter into a contract for sale providing at the same time security to the seller for due payment of the purchase price

Clause 9 provides that on the whole Rs 2,142 being paid the hirer shall be entitled to purchase it on paying another one rupee ; that is to say, he would become the purchaser for 2,143 In Cl. 1 the hirer undertakes to pay the instalments of Rs. 238 a month on the 29th of each month, Cl. 3, under which the defendant-company has acted in this case, contains the penalty for failure to carry out this promise of paying the instalments as they fall due. Under that clause the owners can seize the car and keep it without making any payment to the plaintiff even though the value of the car may be very greatly in excess of the amount due under the agreement. It seems to me that this is clearly a stipulation by way of penalty, and, further, that it is a stipulation which if strictly enforced might have the most inequitable results.

Mr. Bertie, the Manager of the Motor House Company admits that if a party had to pay Rs 4,000 under a hire purchase agreement and only Rs. 5 was left unpaid, strictly speaking, they could seize the car and make any profit they like over it, that is to say, in such circumstances the would-be purchaser who had paid practically the whole of the car would merely have had the use of it as a hirer for a period of months. If both parties to the agreement. Ex. K, performed their part of the contract, the agreement would be fair enough. But the penalty provided in case of default by the purchaser is clearly in the highest degree inequitable. In my opinion, the provisions of Cl. 3 amount to a stipulation by way of penalty which the Courts can and ought to relieve against under the provisions of S. 74, Contract Act

The sum of Rs. 2,143 shown in Ex K is not the amount actually due at the time the agreement was drawn up, but in view of the failure of the plaintiff to make payment under the original contract the defendant company could fairly claim interest on their money, and I am not satisfied that in the amount fixed, Rs. 2,143, the rate of interest allowed is so unreasonably high as to be exorbitant. But having allowed this sum it is not necessary to allow anything further for interest as in calculating this amount interest was clearly allowed for up to the expiry of the nine months. Of this sum of Rs. 2,143, Rs 238 has been paid leaving a balance of Rs. 1905. The respondent-company has sold the truck for Rs. 2,750 so that they have obtained Rs 845 more than was due to them for the truck. The sale took place on 5th March, several months before the instalments under agreement were due. As far as interest is concerned, the defendant company was therefore amply compensated by fixing the value of the car in the agreement at Rs 2,143 I think, they might reasonably claim something above this for costs incurred in getting the car back and selling it But Rs. 45 should be a sufficient allowance for this, I am of opinion that the part of Cl. 3 of the agreement which says that .

(1) [1910] 5 L. B. R. 201=8 I. C. 969.
(2) [1892-96] 2 U. B. R. 291.

"the amount to the credit of the hirer shall not be greater than the whole sum then owing by the hirer."

should not be enforced and that the defendant company may be reasonably compensated for the breach by the plaintiff of his agreement, by allowing them the money they have received for the truck, less the sum of Rs. 800 On points of fact the defendant company have been successful in both Courts and the greater part of the cost of litigation should be borne by the plaintiff. I set aside the decree of the trial Court and pass a decree for the payment by the defendants to the plaintiff of Rs. 800, The plaintiff will pay the defendants half their costs in both Courts.

V. Dipa—Defendant—Respondent

First Appeal No. 176 of 1928, Decided on 19th March 1929, from judgment of High Court on original side in Civil Regular Suit No 225 of 1927.

(a) Buddhist Law (Burmese)—Thinghika property dedicated to rahans of Kyaungdaik is vested in head of monastery as trustees.

Where thinghika property is dedicated to the rahans of kyaungdaik and, not to the whole monkhood throughout the world, the property is vested in the head or heads of the monastery as trustees. [P 373 C 1]

(b) Buddhist Law (Burmese)—Scheme giving power to trustees to settle or decide disputes relating to possession of kyaung — Power to appoint successor to head of kyaung vests in trustees.

Where a scheme regarding land granted by Government for religious purposes is settled, giving to the trustees all powers of control to settle disputes relating to the possession of kyaungs and to decide who should be in possession of the same, then on the death of a monk holding the kyaungs, the trustees and trustees alone have the power to appoint his successor and that though ordinarily in making such appointment, they should consider whether the deceased occupant has nominated a successor who was his senior pupil and well qualified to teach the Buddhist scriptures, the trustees' choice is not narrowed down to such an individual, and they are justified in asking him to acknowledge the scheme settled for the management of the kyaungdaik and on his refusal to acknowledge it, are justified in appointing other monks to take possession of kyaung: (1912 1836) 2 *U. Maung Kun—for Appellants.

Maung Mya Gaing—for Respondent.

Rutledge, C. J. — This is an appeal from the Original Side of this Court dismissing the plaintiff-appellants' suit for possession of a kyaung in the Thayettaw Kyaungdaik, Rangoon, of which the defendant-respondent is at present in possession. Disputes from time to time had arisen in connexion with this kyaungdaik and at the suggestion of the Court application was made to the late Chief Court for the settlement of a scheme for the management of the kyaungdaik in 1912. An appeal, First Civil Appeal No. 129 of 1913, was preferred against the scheme settled by the Original Side and the appellate Court, consisting of the late Sir Charles Fox, Chief Judge, and Sir Henry Hartnoll, gave the scheme their very careful consideration and referred it to the Mahasangharaja the Thathanabaing, who gave his opinion after consultation with the Sayadaws present at the Soodima Convocation.

We may mention that the several parties in the kyaungdaik profess to belong to the body of monks who acknowledge the Thathanabaing as their religious head. The scheme was accordingly settled by the appellate Bench of the Chief Court in accordance with the advice of the highest ecclesiastical authority acknowledged by the several monks of the kyaungdaik. This, however, did not prevent a considerable number of monks in the kyaungdaik refusing to acknowledge the scheme and in particular the appellants, who in pursuance of the scheme were elected as trustees of the kyaungdaik with a council of five. U Kethaya, the monk in charge of the Hmangin kyaung was one of those who refused to acknowledge the scheme, and it is on record that the appellants, the present trustees, sued U Kethaya for ejectment in the late Chief Court in Civil Regular No. 218 of 1918, alleging disobedience and harbouring a considerable number of monks hostile to the trustees. In those proceedings, it was not disputed that U Kethaya was in lawful possession of the kyaung In such circumstances, a strong case would have to be made out to justify ejectment by the trustees, and the suit was dismissed by consent as not disclosing sufficient cause of action. U Kethaya died early in 1926 and the defendant, who seems to have been his senior disciple, claims to be in lawful possession of the kyaung as his successor. The learned trial Judge has held that the defendant is in lawful possession of the kyaung and after a full discussion of the breaches of the bye-laws alleged by the plaintiffs has held that they are insufficient to justify eviction and so has dismissed the suit.

If we were able to share the learned Judge's finding that defendant was in lawful possession of the kyaung as successor to the late U Kethaya, we would not be disposed to differ with his findings as regards the sufficiency of the alleged breaches to justify eviction, but, for reasons which we hereafter set out, we are not satisfied. If it had been established that the kyaung was poggalika property, the learned Judge's findings might well be correct, but it is common ground that the kyaung in fact is thinghika property. No doubt thinghika property varies in character according to its original dedication. It may be dedicated to the rahans of the four quarters of the earth, i. e., to the whole monkhood throughout the world, or, as is more usually the case to the rahans of the particular kyaungdaik in which the kyaung is situated. There is no evidence on the record as to the particular form of the dedication, but we consider ourselves justified in presuming that the more usual form was followed in this case and that the dedication was to the rahans of the kyaungdaik. In such cases, the property is vested in the head or heads of the monastery, no doubt as trustees : see the Manugye Dhammathat : Book 8 (Richardson), para 3, 236 :

"Of these six, as regards the gift having reference to a future state of existence, they are of two kinds, poggalika and thinghaika. In poggalika gifts, the person to whom the offering is made has a right to keep it. In thinghaika gifts, it becomes the property of the chief of the assembly of priests : see Maung Talok v. Mo Kun (1)."

The land on which the kyaungdaik is situated was granted by Government for religious purposes to trustees and the present trustees' names have been inserted in this grant, which is in their possession This fact is mentioned by the first plaintiff in his evidence. The scheme does not vest the land in the trustees, but by its terms seems to take for granted that this has already been done. Had it been otherwise, it would be difficult to explain the very extensive powers given to the trustees by S. 8, Cls. (a) to (f) By Cl. (a) they are given all the powers of control which the head of a monastery has by Burmese Ecclesiastical Law—to settle disputes relating to the possession of kyaungs, rayats or religious buildings and to decide who should be in possession (of kyaungs). As I read this clause, they have not merely the power to decide disputes between lawful claimants to a kyaung, but they are given expressly the power to decide who should be in possession of any thinghika kyaung. This power is probably given to them as heads of the kyaungdaik by Burmese Ecclesiastical Law, but it is expressly given to them by the scheme as settled by the Chief Court on the advice of the Thathanabaing.

The position taken up by the defendant throughout was that he was not bound by the scheme and would not obey its provisions. The learned trial Judge has held that the defendant, as well as all other monks in the kyaungdaik are bound by this scheme. I am in full agreement with this finding, but I do not think that the learned Judge correctly appreciated the consequences of this finding and he seems to have been led away from the main issue by other matters raised by the pleadings such as breaches of bye-laws and the committing of dupassa. From the evidence it seems clear that the trustees had no objection to the defendant if he acknoweledged himself bound by the scheme and recognized the trustees as the heads of the kyaungdaik, and it is perfectly clear that the defendant refused to acknowledge the scheme or the trustees as the heads of the kyaungdaik.

It has been contended that the trustees and council had no option but to recognize the defendant as the lawful successor of the late U Kethaya as custodian of the Hmangin kyaung as he was his senior disciple, was well qualified to teach the Buddhist scriptures and had been nominated by U Kethaya. No doubt these are qualifications which in ordinary circumstances would lead the heads of the kyaungdaik to appoint a candidate so well qualified, but I cannot read them as taking away the discretion of the trustees. The very object of the scheme was to promote harmony in the kyaungdaik and not to continue indefinitely the strife and bickerings of one faction with another, which is most inimical to the Buddhist religion, and the requirements of the trustees that the defendant should ackowledge the scheme as a condition precedent to their entrusting him with the charge of the Hmangin kyaung seems to me to be perfectly reasonable. It is clear from the record that the trustees asked him for such acknowledgment and it is clear that the defendant declined to give it. Instead of acknowledging the trustees, the defendant called in D. W. No. 1, U Kothanla, referred to as the Aletawya Sayadaw. The learned advocates agree that his kyaungdaik is on boundary road in a different part of the city, and he himself was forced to admit that he had no connexion whatever with Thayettaw kyaungdaik. The defendant states that he entrusted the arrangements for U Kethaya's pongyibyan to this monk, but it is also clear that he presided at the meeting, the Hmangin kyaung, which the defendant alleges appointed him the lawful custodian of the kyaung. The record does not show how many of the rahans present at that meeting were strangers to the kyaungdaik like the presiding monk, nor does it really matter. The scheme did not entrust U Kothanla or a gathering of defendant's sympathisers with the power to decide who should be in possession of the Hmangin kyaung. This power was given to the trustees by S. 8, Cl. (d) of the scheme. The learned trial Judge seems to have been much impressed by the demeanour of U Kothanla. We have not had the advantage of the learned Judge on this point, but the impression seems to have been so favourable that he does not seem to have noticed that this monk was actively mixing himself up in the concerns of a kyaungdaik with which he was not connected, and not as a peacemaker but as a partisan, and that he was backing up the defendant in his disregard for the scheme which the learned Judge himself has found to be binding upon him, the defendants, as well as the other monks of the kyaungdaik

To put the matter shortly, I am satisfied that on the death of U Kethaya the trustees and the trustees alone had the power to appoint his successor and that though ordinarily in making such appointment, they should consider whether the deceased occupant had nominated a successor who was his senior pupil and well qualified to teach the Buddhist scriptures, the trustees' choice was not narrowed down to such an individual, and they were justified in asking him to acknowledge the scheme settled for the management of the kyaungdaik and on his refusal to acknowledge it were justified in appointing other monks to take possession of the kyaung

I have very little further to add in connexion with the case. The trustees appointed two disciples of the late U Kethaya : namely U Zatila and U Tezeniya to take charge of the kyaung as they agreed to acknowledge the scheme. This was done about May 1926. These monks ran away from the kyaung some time later and neither of them gave evidence at the trial. The defendant, however, filed a copy of U Zatila's evidence in Criminal Regular Trial No. 336 of 1926 before the Eastern Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Rangoon, relying on the admission in cross-examination that the defendant was senior to him and had a right to take the deceased U Kethaya's place. In the earlier part of U Zatila's evidence, he states that on the day that they were given the custody of the kyaung, four Zerbadis abused them and attempted to stab another monk, while the defendant and his twenty disciples refused to leave the kyaung. From these circumstances, the reasons for the flight of U Zatila and his companion are not far to seek. The learned Judge has decided that certain of the bye-laws made under the scheme are ultra vires. As I do not base my judgment on any question arising on these bye-laws, it is not necessary for me to express any opinion

For these reasons, I would allow the appeal and set aside the judgment and decree appealed from, and would grant a decree that the defendant yield up possession of the Hmangin kyaung and premises to the plaintiffs within fourteen days, failing which he will be evicted therefrom. As there is no layman associated with the defendant-respondent on the record in this appeal, I would make no order as to costs.

Brown, J.—I agree that the decision in this case must depend on the answer to the question whether under a reasonable construction of the scheme for the management of the kyaungdaik as framed the trustees have the right to fill any vacancy occurring in the headship of the kyaung by death of the previous head. On this point the learned trial Judge remarked :

"In the present case, it is not alleged that the defendant has set up such a claim, and the trustees and the council appear to take up the position that they are invested in all cases with the right of nominating the successor of a deceased head pongyi. Such a right appears to be opposed to the well recognised methods of appointing such a successor and, therefore, to be opposed to the rules of Vinaya with which the scheme is intended to be consistent."

He then goes on to cite a passage from the deposition of the plaintiff U Pyinnya himself. U Pyinnya stated in the course of his cross-examination :

"usually the head of a gaing in consultation with the members of the gaing selects as to who should succeed to a deceased presiding monk."

But when further questioned by the Court on the point he added :

"We the sanghas being in charge of the kyaung will be the proper persons to select a successor."

The learned Judge also relies on the evidence of the Aletawya Sayadaw, U Kothanla, for the defence. This witness states in one part of the examination :

"On the death of presiding monk of a sanghika kyaung and if the deceased monk had confidence in his disciple that he could take charge of the kyaung and that he would be able to control the other disciples, and if he (the junior) monk is replete with aforesaid qualification he becomes the successor of the deceased presiding monk. If he has not been so enstrusted, a successor is elected by the sanghas of the kyaung who have been associating with one another, i. e, the sanghas who are of the same mind and who had associated with the deceased presiding monk."

But later on in his cross-examination he states :

"It is true that in the case of a kyaung (Tinghika kyaung) like the Hmangin kyaung the trustees of the kyaungdaik could nominate a successor if the said kyaung is situated within the compound of the said kyaungdaik and if situated outside the kyaungdaik solitarily by itself the deceased presiding monk could nominate a successor. The first answer is true provided there is no monk in the kyaung competent to succeed the deceased."

This answer is somewhat confused, but I do not think it can be held to be established that the general recognised custom is that only the rahans of a particular kyaung in a kyaungdaik have the power of selecting a successor.

In Manugye, Vol. 8, S. 3, it is laid down that in poggalika gifts, the person to whom the offering is made has a right to keep it. In sanghika gifts, it becomes the property of the chief of the assembly of priests. The property here is sanghika property and, therefore, may be held to be the property of the chief of the assembly of priests. This by itself does not carry us very far, as it leaves open the question of what exactly is meant by "assembly of priests". In the case of U Te Zeinda v U Teze (2), it was held that in Upper Burma a monk or rahan with the knowledge and authority of the Thathanabaing ecclesiastical authorities under him or a Taikok had the power to evict the resident rahan from a kyaung. The following passage occurs in the judgment on p 75.

"But, besides this, they claim to be the ecclesiastical heads of a sort of al bey or priory called a kyaungdaik, in which the defendant is one of the monks. There are separate buildings, but all are within the same precincts and constitute a monastery of which the plaintiffs are Taikok and Taikkyat."

It was held that the plaintiffs had the power of eviction. This ruling has of course no direct bearing in the present case, dealing with a kyaungdaik in Rangoon where there are no Taikoks and other ecclesiastical members of the Buddhist hierarchy subordinate to the Thathanabaing. But it does suggest that in accordance with the ordinary rules of the Buddhist Ecclesiastical Law the head of a kyaung laik would have the power claimed on behalf of the trustees in the present case.

Rule 8 (a) of the scheme lays down that the trustees shall control the behaviour of all persons in the kyaungdaik and shall have all the powers, for enforcing such control, as are allowed to the head of a monastery by the Buddhist Ecclesiastical Law; and sub-Cl. (d) lays down that they shall settle disputes relating to the possession of kyaungs or zayats or religious buildings and decide who should be in possession. This sub-clause appears to suggest that before they can exercise their power under it there must be a dispute relating to possession. In the scheme as framed in the decree of the late Chief Court it might be posible to construe the words "decide who should be in possession" as referring to any case in which a vacancy occurred. But from the Burmese version of the scheme it would appear that the sub-clause refers entirely to the question of disputes. The intention of the scheme under R. 8, sub-Cl. (a), appears to be that the trustees should have the general powers that would vest in the Taikok, and if the decision in U Te Zeinda's case (7) is correct, that would appear to include the power to decide as to the possession of the kyaung.

It is quite clear in this case that a vacancy did occur in the headship of this particular kyaung on the death of U Kethaya and that very shortly after his death the trustees named two pongyis to succeed him. The kyaung is a sanghika property and it is therefore for the sanghas to decide as to possession. The difficulty is as to who is to represent the sangha. No doubt in many cases the rahan chosen by the deceased takes his place without any opposition. There does not seem to be any established rule of law by which the deceased has any power to elect his successor, and it appears clear that that is not really claimed by either party in this case. It is clear, however, that a vacancy has occurred in the management of the kyaung, and it is not clear that the defendant has the right to fill the vacancy. That being so, we are of opinion that in accordance with the general principles of the Ecclesiastical Law and of the scheme as framed, the provisions of R. 8, sub-Cl. (d) must apply and that the trustees must decide who is to fill the vacancy. That being so, they were clearly justified in evicting the defendant from the kyaung, the defendant having refused to acknowledge their authority in the matter. The plaintiffs ask in their plaint that the defendant may be evicted from the whole kyaungdaik, but it does not seem to me that they have established any good case for such an order. I, therefore, agree with the order proposed and that a decree should be passed evicting the defendant from the kyaung in dispute. I also agree that no order should be passed as to costs in this appeal.

Valabdas Vishandas and others—Defendants.

Original Civil Suit No. 843 of 1926, Decided on 30th April 1928.

 Civil P. C., S. 9—Member of panchayat, breaking its rule not to marry second wife during lifetime of first—Dispute referred to arbitration and award made—Member consenting to award—Dispute involves purely caste question and no suit would lie—Award cannot be enforced as it relates to questions for which no suit lies—Consent of parties not to challenge award cannot enable Court to enforce it if otherwise unenforceable—Civil P. C., Sch. 2, para. 20 (1).

A certain panchayat had passed a resolution to the effect that no member of the panchayat should marry a second wife in the lifetime of his first wife, and whosoever would do so disregarding the resolution of the panchayat, shall not be considered as a member of the brotherhood. A member married a second time when his first wife was living, and at a meeting of the panchayat an arbitrator was appointed to settle the dispute, who decided that the member should pay a certain sum as fine. The decision was accepted by the member as binding on him. When he refused to pay, a suit was brought to enforce the award.

Held : that a suit of this nature would clearly relate to matters affecting the internal autonomy of the caste and its social relations and it will not be open to the Court to go into the question of the validity or otherwise of a rule laid down by the Panchayat that a person marrying a second wife during the lifetime of a first wife would cease to be a member of the panchayat or with the adequacy or propriety of a fine imposed on a person breaking that rule as an alternative punishment. Although the delinquent here agreed to pay the fine, yet the agreement involved a caste question and, therefore, no suit would lie to enforce it : 20 Bom. 190, Foll. [P 3 C 2]

Held further: that as the disputes referred to arbitration related to caste questions which could not be made the subject of a suit, they could not also be the subject of an award enforceable in a Court of law, and even if the parties affected by such an award would agree not to challenge it, their consent cannot confer jurisdiction on a Court, where it has none, to enforce the award. [P 3 C 2 ; P 4 C 1, 2]

Judgment.—This is a dispute between two influential members of the Hindu Lahona community of Tatta over certain caste matters which have caused a serious split in the community. Plaintiff 1 and defendant 1 who are the real parties to the suit are both men of means. Both of them carry on business in Bombay.

Defendant 1 has married a second wife during the lifetime of his first wife. It is alleged on behalf of the plaintiff that this second marriage was contrary to the resolution of the panchayat passed on 4th June 1921, which reads as follows :

"If any one makes a second marriage during the lifetime of his first wife without the consent (permission) of the panchayat whether in his town or in any other community he shall not be considered as a member of the brotherhood."

It is said that as defendant 1 had by his second marriage violated the above resolution notwithstanding an express warning given to him in that behalf a panchayat meeting was held on 15th February 1925, when twenty-eight members of the panchayat including defendant 1 were present, that at that meeting one Tikamdas Satramdas was appointed as sole arbitrator to settle the dispute, that Tikamdas decided that defendant 1 should contribute Rs. 5,001 to the poor fund of the panchayat which decision defendant 1 accepted as binding on him and promised to keep the money in deposit with himself and pay interest every year and that when the demand was made on him for payment of interest he denied his liability either for the principal or interest It is further said that in consequence of his refusal to pay the money the panchayat at a meeting convened on 24th Vesakh, 1982/18th May 1925, at which thirty persons attended, the four plaintiffs and one Laloomal the mukhi of the community were empowered to enforce payment of the amount and it is on the strength of that resolution that the plaintiffs have now come to Court

Several defences have been raised on behalf of defendant 1 and certain other members of the community who have been made co-defendants on their own application and who dispute the right of the plaintiffs to institute this suit as representatives of the panchayat and also dispute the right of the plaintiffs to spend panchayat funds on this litigation On the pleadings of the parties the following issues have been raised·

1. Did the panchayat validly pass the resolution referred to in para 1 of the plaint, and if so, is it binding on defendant 1?
2. Was the alleged resolution cancelled as alleged in para 7 of the written statement ?
3. Is the panchayat estopped from contending that the second marriage was in contravention of its resolution or permission for reasons stated in para 8 of the written statement ?
4. Was Tikamdas validly appointed as an arbitrator and if so what was his decision ?
5. Did defendant 1 accept the decision of Tikamdas and agree to keep the money in deposit with himself and to pay the interest every year ?
6. Was such acceptance agreed to by the panchayat at any time and if so what is its effect ?
7. Is the decision of Tikamdas, if any, by itself, or by virtue of the acceptance, if any, enforceable as against defendant 1 in a Court of law ?
8. Were the plaintiffs and mukhi Laloomal validly appointed by the panchayat to enforce payment of the amount allowed to be due to the panchayat by defendant 1 ?
9. Were the plaintiffs justified in drawing a hundi for Rs. 300 as interest due by defendant 1 for the first year and was his refusal unjustified ?
10. Have the plaintiffs any cause of action against defendant, and if so, is such cause of action for recovery of the whole amount or for interest which has accrued due up to the date of suit ?
11. Has this Court jurisdiction to decide all or any of the issues raised on the ground that they relate to caste questions ?
12. General.

Attempts made in Court to bring about a settlement have failed and from the attitude taken by the parties it was clear that each party had its partisans who were prepared to step into the witness-box to support the version given by such party unmindful of the consequences As, however, I am of opinion that this case can be disposed of on certain legal issues, I have stopped further evidence in the case and propose to give my findings on such legal issues

Now the record of what happened at the meeting of 15th February 1925, has been reduced to writing and is Ex 10 in the case It reads as follows

" A panchayat meeting was held in the Mahajan Haveli on Sunday dated 21st Magh, 1981, at 9 p. m. to consider over the matter of the second marriage by Bhai Valabdas Bhai Vishendas and the complaint filed by Bhai Valabdas Vidhani against three persons, viz., (1) Bhai Dewanmal Dhadhumal, (2) Bhai Dharamdas Mulchandani and (3) Bhai Jamnadas Bhai Pahlajdasani. Bhai Tikamdas Bhai Satramdas was appointed arbitrator by the majority of votes in the panchayat meeting to decide all the matters. He shall give his decision after hearing all the things and considering over all the written documentary evidence. . . . . "

Then follow signatures of twenty-eight persons One of the signatures is not that of defendant 1 but of Goverdhandas Valabdas, i e , the signature of the firm which consists of defendant 1 and his elder brother Goverdhandas, defendant 1's name being Valabdas. There is likewise no signature of Jamnadas one of the three persons complained of by defendant 1 but the signature purports to be that of his deceased ancestor " Puj Oodhawdas Puj Lakhmichand " in whose name the panchayat bhaji was given to him and the descendants of Oodhawdas jointly At the foot of the signatures the following notes have been made by the arbitrator Tikamdas and bear his signature.

" Bhai Valabdas should pay Rs. 5,001 to the poor fund of Puj Mahajan (panchayat).

" Bhai Dewanmal should be warned not to do so in future.

" Bhai Dhamumal is also warned not to behave in such harsh manner in future.

"Bhai Jamimal should pay Re. 1-4-0 to the poor fund of Mahajan panchayat.

" The following arrangement is made for the above amount. Bhai Valabdas should pay Rs. 5,001 towards the marriage rejoicings. Bhai Valabadas should again credit the amount with himself in the name of Puj Lohana Mahajan Poor Fund and pay interest thereon every year. He shall supply with copy of the account every year.

(Sd.) Tikam Puj Satramdas. "

This writing has been exhibited by the plaintiffs as an award on payment of Rs 220 as stamp-fee and penalty

It is contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that Ex. 10 forms a valid reference and a valid award which are enforceable in a Court of law and that even if the award is held to be invalid defendant 1 having agreed to pay the amount he is bound to make good his promise

Now, whatever may have transpired at that meeting on which each party offers his own version there can be no doubt that the award if any as also the subsequent variation of it are unenforceable in a Court of law

The questions in issue at that meeting were purely caste questions

Assuming for the purpose of this case that the panchayat resolution of 1921, Ex 8 had not been superseded or cancelled by a subsequent resolution Ex 16 which also finds place in the panchayat book though it bears no signature the question before the panchayat on that day was whether defendant 1 had ceased to be a bember of the panchayat by marrying in defiance of the " Ukase " of the panchayat and if so whether he should not be penalized for it His one complaint against the three persons referred to was that they had misbehaved in not treating him as a member of the panchayat

Now, there can be no doubt that if the members of the panchayat who met on that day had without the intervention of an arbitrator passed a resolution that defendant 1 should continue as a member of the panchayat but that he should pay a fine of Rs 5,001 and without anything more being said or done an attempt was made to enforce the payment of the fine in this Court, it would fail in limine by virtue of S 9, Civil P C. read with S 21 (1) of Bombay Regn 2 of 1827 That clause reads as follows :

" First—The jurisdiction of the civil Court shall extend to the cognizance of all original suits and complaints between natives and others not British born subjects, respecting the right to moveable or immovable property, rents, Government revenues, debts, contracts, marriage, succession, damages for injuries, and generally of all suits and complaints of civil nature , it being understood that no interference on the part of the Court in caste questions is hereby warranted beyond the admission and trial of any suit instituted for the recovery of damages on account of an alleged injury to the caste and character of the plaintiff, arising from some illegal act or unjustifiable conduct of the other party. "

The portion in brackets has been repealed but the rest of it still remains on the Statute Book and is applicable to this Province

A suit of this nature would clearly relate to matters affecting the internal autonomy of the caste and its social relations and it will not be open to the Court to go into the question of the validity or otherwise of a rule laid down by the panchayat that a person marrying a second wife during the lifetime of his first wife without the consent of the panchayat would cease to be a member of the panchayat or with the adequacy and propriety of a fine of Rs 5,001 imposed on a person breaking that rule as an alternative punishment.

The only and the appropriate remedy of a panchayat to enforce its rules which are always wanting in a vinculum juris is by depriving the delinquent of his rights and privileges as a member of the panchayat, e g , receiving the panchayat bhaji, inviting and being invited on festive and other occasions helping and being helped on occasions of marriages and deaths and the like.

It has been argued that if the delinquent is a consenting party to a resolution of the panchayat requiring him to pay a certain sum of money there should be no objection to a suit being filed against him on the strength of his own agreement

A somewhat similar argument was raised in Abdul Kadir v Dharma (1) where the members of the jamait concerned had agreed to make certain contributions to the caste funds on certain ceremonial occasions for the avowed object of paying off out of such funds the debts due by the jamait and the defendant who was a consenting party to that agreement was sued on the strength of his agreement for recovery of his contribution the Court held that as the agreement referred to in the plaint simply embodied the arrangement come to between the members of the jamait for the purpose of paying off its debts out of contributions to its funds, it involved a caste question and the suit had, therefore, been rightly dismissed by the Court below

It has been argued that in the present case the parties had referred their disputes to arbitration, that it is the award which is being enforced and that there is nothing in the Civil Procedure Code or in the Indian Arbitration Act to prevent the Court from filing and enforcing such an award

(1) [1896] 20 Bom. 190.

There is no substance in this argument

An arbitrator is a tribunal of the parties' own choice and before the Court gives effect to his award the Court must be satisfied that (a) the disputes referred to arbitration were such as could be made the subject of a suit ; (b) that the parties concerned were competent to refer the said disputes and (c) that they had agreed to do so

In the present case the disputes related to caste questions which could not be made the subject of a suit and could not, therefore, be the subject of an award enforceable in a Court of law The whole foundation of the award, therefore, goes and the suit must fail.

Apart from this there is no allegation and no possibility of proof that all the parties concerned were or could have been parties to the submission It is common ground that all the members of the panchayat were not present on that day There is no allegation much less proof that the absentees had notice that the disputes would be referred to arbitration or that they would be referred to a named arbitrator It is, therefore, difficult to see how much of them who were present on that day could purport to act as the authorized agents of the absentees or bind the panchayat as a whole with any award that might be passed by their nominee The position of the plaintiffs becomes much more absurd when it is realized that the panchayat consists of not only adult male members but of infants and females The head male member of each family alone attends the panchayat meeting but if any family has no adult male member living or if any family is not living at Tatta but elsewhere such family does not cease to be a member of the panchayat but continues to receive and give the customary bhaji or thalhi According to Dewanmal's evidence and the note Ex 14 prepared by him the membership of the panchayat consists of seventy-three families of which thirty-one have their adult male members living at Tatta, thirty-four families live outside Tatta and eight families have no adult male members living.

The persons who had congregated together on that day were only twenty-eight, Ex 10 shows that the arbitrator Tikamdas "was appointed by a majority of votes" of the persons present. Dewanmal states that this is a mistake and that all present had agreed to the appointment Had these twenty-eight persons power to refer so as to bind the panchayat ? Had each head of the family who attended power to refer to arbitration the dispute on behalf of the other members of his household including infants, on behalf of the families which consisted only of infants and also on behalf of the other absentee heads of families and their dependents Mr. Kimatrai has argued that in a panchayat the minority are bound by the will of the majority But did the twenty-eight persons assembled there form a majority and could they, therefore, bind the minority

I am not prepared to hold that twenty-eight adult persons who were present had authority to appoint an arbitrator so as to bind the panchayat

As there was no valid reference in favour of Tikamdas he could not act in the matter

Lastly, it has been argued that defendant 1 having consented to the award cannot now be permitted to challenge it

One of the obvious answers to that argument is that there is no allegation that defendant 1 consented not to challenge the award in the event of the panchayat attempting to enforce it in a Court of law

It would further appear that if the Court has no jurisdiction to enforce the award any consent by defendant 1 not to challenge it cannot confer jurisdiction on the Court for the purpose of enforcing it

But a reference to the minutes of the meeting, Ex 10, makes it abundantly clear that defendant 1 not only gave no consent to the award but vehemently objected to it and that if he at all consented to pay anything it was not as a fine imposed by the arbitrator for violating the resolution of the panchayat but as a voluntary donation in honour of his second marriage which carried with it the suggestion that he had done nothing of which he and the panchayat had reason to be ashamed of That he offered to pay money as a voluntary donation is clear not only from the express recitals in Ex 10 but also from the half-hearted admissions of Dewanmal He states as follows :

"Tikamdas made his award. He held that Valabdas should pay Rs. 5,001 to the poor fund of the community. Valabdas said that the amount was too much and he took with himself Tolaram and Narumal outside the hall. They then sent for Tikamdas outside. Afterwards Tikamdas came in Then others came inside. Valabdas then said that it should be written that he was giving this amount in honour (khushali) of his marriage and that he would keep the money with himself on interest and will pay interest every year."

If this evidence is true it is open to the argument that the award was treated as null and void by mutual consent and in lieu thereof a gratuitous offer to pay this money by way of rejoicing was made by defendant 1 and accepted by the panchayat If that be so there is again an end to the award of Tikamdas which was thereby superseded by mutual consent of parties

This suit is not for the recovery of the alleged voluntary donation promised by defendant 1 in honour of his second marriage but is for the recovery of a penalty imposed on him by the award Defendant 1 has not been called upon to answer to the claim on a promise for a voluntary donation and on account of the split in the panchayat no application has been made to me for amendment of the plaint. It is not, therefore, necessary for me to go into the question whether such a promise was a mere nudum pactum and not being in writing and registered as provided by S 25, Contract Act, it could not be enforced

I am decidedly of the opinion that the suit as based on the award must fail

I now proceed to record my findings on issues 4 and 7 which go to the very root of the case For the reasons already given I hold on issue 4 that the appointment of Tikamdas as an arbitrator was not valid and on issue 7 that the award passed by him is invalid and is even otherwise not enforceable in a Court of law as it relates to a caste question, that defendant 1 did not accept the award and that even if he did it does not matter

The result is that the suit is dismissed. The plaintiffs should bear the costs of defendant 1 and that the other defendants who have been joined as parties to the suit on their application should bear their own costs.

Criminal Revn Appln No 306 of 1927, Decided on 23rd February 1928, from judgment of First Addl Sess Judge, D/- 17th October 1927

 (a) Criminal P. C., S 342—Omission to examine accused after additional evidence called by Court after defence witnesses—Additional evidence not disclosing fresh facts—Omission is not fatal.

Where after the defence evidence is concluded additional witnesses are called by Court and examined, and the accused is not examined on this evidence but the additional evidence did not disclose any fresh facts or affect the decision of the case, the omission to examine accused is not fatal. A. I. R. 1924 Pat 764, Foll [P 6 C 1]

(b) Criminal P C , S 342—No difference between prosecution witnesses and witnesses called by Court.

Under S. 342, the accused is to be examined for the purpose of enabling him to explain the evidence against him whether such evidence be tendered by the prosecution witnesses or by witnesses called by the Court. [P 5 C 2, P 6 C 1]

C M Lobo—for the Crown

Aston, A. J C—This is an application for the revision of an order of the learned Additional Sessions Judge, Hyderabad, confirming the conviction and sentence of the applicant by the Resident Magistrate, Nawabshah It appears that the applicant and a juvenile adult named Sidik were convicted of house-breaking by night and theft in a building and sentenced respectively to eight months' rigorous imprisonment and twelve months' rigorous imprisonment in the Dharwar Jail The application was admitted for consideration of the question of sentence and for consideration of the point whether accused had been examined by the Court after additional evidence was recorded by the Court

With regard to the second question, it appears that after the defence evidence had been concluded, the Court called and examined two witnesses and omitted to examine the accused on the additional evidence recorded. S 342, Criminal Procedure Code, does not refer specifically to such cases, it merely provides that an accused person must be examined generally on the case for the purpose of enabling him to explain circumstances appearing in evidence against him after the witnesses for the prosecution have been ex.

amined and before he is called on for his defence This provision appears to be based on the well-known principle that no man should be condemned unheard It seems to me that it makes no difference whether the additional evidence is introduced by a prosecutor or whether it is brought on the record by the Court itself and the general principle is the same that before the accused is condemned he should have an opportunity of making an explanation he wishes to make with regard to the circumstances appearing in evidence against him This, however, is open to the exception that where the additional evidence does not really disclose any fresh facts or does not affect the decision of the case, the accused is in no way prejudiced in not having had an opportunity to render a further explanation In the present case the facts deposed to by the additional witnesses had been referred to by a number of other persons and the accused at a prior stage had an ample opportunity of giving what explanation he wished to give with regard to the facts deposed to. The omission to examine the accused after the witnesses were examined by the Court has in no way prejudiced him and the case seems to me to be on all fours with the Patna case Prayag Gope v. Emperor (1) I, therefore, see no reason for interfering in the matter

As regards the question of sentence, the offence was the first offence of both these accused, the property stolen was worth only Rs 100 Speaking for myself I think the sentence has erred a little on the side of severity and I think the juvenile adult might well have been given the benefit of S 562, Criminal P C He has, however, not appealed and Allahdito who is sentenced to eight months has now undergone his sentence I do not think that this is a case in which any action is required in revision The application is, accordingly dismissed.

De Souza, A J C—I entirely agree.

With regard to the question whether S 342 imperatively requires that an accused person should be examined so as to explain any circumstances against him in the evidence given after the close of the case for the prosecution if the witness is a witness examined on behalf of the Court, I do not see any reason to discriminate between a witness examined on behalf of the prosecution and a witness examined on behalf of the Court If in the evidence given by a witness examined on behalf of the Court there are material statements incriminating the accused person which he has had so far no opportunity to explain, I think he should be given an opportunity to explain them The ruling in the case of Prayag Gope v Emperor (1) is generally quoted to support the opposite view It seems to me that the head note in that case is too broadly stated The head note is to the following effect :

"Where an accused person has been examined under S 342, Criminal P. C., after the close of the prosecution case, and subsequently the Court examines a person under S 540 (whether such person be one of the prosecution witnesses or another person), it is not necessary to re-examine the accused person under S 342

In the body of the judgment, however, the learned Judges are careful to explain that in the present instance the accused persons seemed to be in no way prejudiced partly because the questions put by the Court related not to the occurrence which was the subject-matter of the charge but to some matter in relation to the title of the lands and partly because the accused persons had a chance of cross-examining the witness but refrained from doing so The learned Judges added that if the accused were unwilling to cross-examine the witnesses as a Court witness it would be unlikely that they would have been anxious to make any statement to explain away any evidence given by the complainant as a Court witness

The general principle of Criminal Law that no person is to be condemned without having an opportunity of explaining the evidence against him, as pointed out by my learned brother, applies not only with regard to witnesses examined on behalf of the prosecution but also with regard to witnesses examined by the Court under S 540, Criminal P C But, as in the present case the applicant does not seem to have been prejudiced by the failure of the Magistrate to examine him after witnesses on behalf of the Court, were taken, I see no reason to interfere and concur in the order proposed by my learned brother

First Appeal No 62 of 1925, Decided on 26th July 1928, from decision of 1st Class Sub-Judge, Sukkur

(a) Evidence Act, S 65—What evidence is sufficient to prove loss of document is discretionary with trial Court — Discretion should not be disturbed unless there is miscarriage of justice.

Whether or not sufficient proof of search for or loss of, an original document to lay a ground for the admission of secondary evidence has been given, is a point proper to be decided by the Judge of first instance, and is treated as depending very much on his discretion. His conclusion should not be overruled, except in a clear case of miscarriage of justice. 19 Cal. 498, (P C), Foll [P 8 C 1]

(b) Civil P. C., O 8, R 5—Suit for partnership accounts — Defendants saying that shares are different but not specifying them —Evasive denial is admission of terms in plaint,

In a suit for partnership accounts, if the defendants allege that the shares of the partners were different from those stated in the plaint, it is incumbent on the defendants to specify what were the shares and on their failure to do so it is open to the Court to treat their evasive denial, as to the terms of the agreement, as an admission that its terms as stated in the plaint are correct. [P 8 C 2]

(c) Practice—Witness—Party personally knowing circumstances of the case—His not going into witness-box—His case should be discredited.

It is the bounden duty of a party personally knowing the whole circumstances of the case to give evidence on his own behalf and to submit to cross-examination His non-appearance as a witness would be the strongest possible circumstance going to discredit the truth of his case. *A. Dipchand Chandumal — for Respondents

Wild, J. C.—This is an appeal from the decision of the 1st Class Sub-Judge of Sukkur in a suit filed by the plaintiff for accounts of a partnership between himself and defendants 1 to 7.

The plaintiff in his plaint alleged that the deed of partnership was lost and the principal point which arises in this appeal is whether the learned Sub-Judge was right in allowing the plaintiff to give a secondary evidence of the contents of this partnership-deed

On this point, I find that not only did the plaintiff in his plaint and deposition state that the document was lost but he also swore an affidavit on this point On the other hand, none of the defendants went into the witness-box to swear that they had either seen the document or that it was not lost. I am, therefore, unable to say that the First Class Sub-Judge was wrong in allowing the plaintiff to give secondary evidence as to the contents of the document The defendants, when the plaintiff went into the witness-box, did not even cross-examine him as to the loss of the document.

As regards the terms of the partnership, the evidence as to that no doubt rests merely on the evidence of the plaintiff and his allegations in the plaint. But it must be remembered that most of these allegations are not categorically denied by the defendants in their written statements Nor have they ventured to go into the witness-box to deny them or to give evidence to contradict them

The chief question was as to the shares of the partnership As to that, the evidence of the plaintiff was in favour of the defendants

One more point is raised that all the partners in the firm of Kishinchand Metharam, defendant 7, should have been brought on the record But it appears that the firm is sufficiently represented by Kishinchand Metharam himself.

This question has also been discussed in the judgment in suit No 458 of 1920 of this Court, Lakhmichand Ghandamal v. Gokuldas Ranchordas (1).

I am of opinion that the conduct of the defendants showed that they had no real defence to the suit

The appeal is, therefore dismissed with costs, as also the cross-objections of defendant 6

Rupchand Bilaram, A. J. C—I concur It is no doubt true that the plaintiff has not produced the partnership deed which is alleged to have contained the terms on which the plaintiff and the defendants agreed to be partners and the plaint does not specifically refer to the different contracts in which the parties had agreed to be partners.

Para 2 of the plaint reads as follows :

"That the parties by a written deed entered into a partnership on or about September 1919 with respect to one brick kiln and other works subsequently taken up which are mentioned in the books. The shares of the partners were as under."

Now at the time of the institution of the suit the plaintiff was in a difficult position. He was the capitalist partner and according to him some of the working partners had committed frauds for which he had prosecuted them in the Baroda Court His books were in that Court and with regard to the partnership deed his explanation was that it was lying with other documents at his place of business from where it had miraculously disappeared He suspected that one of his working partners had surreptitiously removed it from the bundle. He could not make a definite charge against any one of them and stated that it had been lost At that time he was also not in a position to specify in detail all the contracts taken up by the partnership unless he spent a considerable amount of money and time to have the accounts audited The working partners knew more about the contracts than the plaintiff. It has been contended that the plaintiff has failed to give evidence that he had made a proper search for the documents and has failed to prove that it was lost.

Now in the case of Harripria Debi v Rukmani Debi (2), their Lordships of the Privy Council have observed that the question :

"whether or not sufficient proof of search for or loss of, an original document, to lay a ground for the admission of secondary evidence, has been given, is a point proper to be decided by the Judge of first instance, and is treated as depending very much on his discretion. His conclusion should not be overruled, except in a clear case of miscarriage."

We are not prepared to hold that in the present case the learned Judge below has not exercised his discretion properly or that the admission of secondary evidence has resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

The partnership was admitted and only two contentions were raised by the defendants in their pleadings. In the first place a vague statement was made by some of them that they did not admit the quantum of shares as stated in the plaint and in the next place some of them asserted that it was agreed that the working partners would be paid a certain commission in respect of the works managed by them in addition to their shares in the partnership

Now with regard to the first point it is sufficient to observe that if the shares of the partners were different from those stated in the plaint it was incumbent on the defendants to specify what were the shares Having failed to do so it was open to the Court to treat their evasive denial, as to the terms of the agreement, which was admittedly made, as an admission that its terms as stated in the plaint were correct cf O 8, R 5, Civil P C, O 19, R 13, 49 R S C Ruther v Tregant (3) Furthermore the plaintiff swore that the shares, as stated by him in the plaint were correct, and there was no cross-examination on that point

With regard to the commission claimed by the defendants again, they offered no evidence to prove it None of the defendants have ventured into the witness-box to contradict the evidence of the plaintiff. In Gurbaksh Singh v. Gurdial Singh (4) it is said :

"It is the bounden duty of a party personally knowing the whole circumstances of the case, to give evidence on his own behalf and to submit to cross-examination. His non-appearance as a witness would be the strongest possible circumstances going to discredit the truth of his case."

The failure of the defendants to go into the witness-box without any explanation whatsoever at once puts them out of Court

Mr Tahilram has contended that the findings of the learned Judge on issues 1 to 3 are vague These issues were as follows :

1 What were the shares of the partners and on what terms was the partnership entered and who were the partners ?

2 When did the partnership dissolve ?

3 What were the partnership works ?

The learned Judge has given his finding on each of these issues by stating as follows :

"As shown in the plaint".

Now no doubt at first sight these finding appear to be somewhat vague. But when they are read along with the plaint they become very specific The shares of the partners are shown in para 2 of the plaint. The date of the dissolution of the partnership is shown therein as 20th December 1920 and the partnership transactions are shown as those contained in the partnership books which were at that time in the criminal Court of Baroda. Reading the findings along with the plaint I do not find that there is any such ambiguity as to call for our interference

Another point raised by the learned pleader is that the learned Judge has given no direction to the commissioner how to proceed in the matter

With regard to that point again, we find all that the learned Judge has said in the judgment appealed against is that the commissioner should be nominated by both the parties on 24th October 1924 What directions were asked for by the parties after the commissioner was appointed or what instructions were given to the commissioner is not the subject-matter of the judgment appealed against We understand that there is an appeal against the final decree, we, therefore, refrain from saying anything on that point which might prejudice either party The plea that all the parties in the firm of Kishinchand Metharam were necessary parties to the suit is on the very face of it misconceived. A firm as such has no legal existence and the suit against the firm of Kishinchand Metharam was a suit against the individual partners comprising that firm They were parties to the suit. All of them as forming one entity were given a joint share in the partnership in suit and the only material ground on which possibly the defendants might have succeeded in nonsuiting the plaintiff was by showing that the total number of partners in the partnership in suit exceeded 20 rendering the partnership illegal in view of the provisions of the Indian Companies Act. That was, however, not their contention. Their object in raising this plea was to cause delay in the disposal of the suit In Lakhmichand Ghandamal v. Gokaldas Ranchordas (1), I have held that a suit for dissolution of a partnership existing between an individual on the one hand and a different partnership on the other, may be instituted against such partnership without disclosing in the plaint the names of its individual partners and nothing has been said at the Bar to make me alter that view.

For these reasons I agree that this appeal as also the cross-objections filed by defendant 6 in support of the appeal fail and that both the appeal and cross objections should be dismissed with costs

Criminal Revn. Appln No 37 of 1928, Decided on 28th March 1928, from an order of Percival, J C , D/- 20th January 1928

(a) Penal Code, S. 107—Mere knowledge or standing while an offence under S 379 is being committed cannot be covered by the definition of abetment

Mere knowledge or standing while an offence under S 379 is being committed by others cannot be covered by the definition of abetment. It may well be that there is neither conspiracy nor instigation nor intentional aid by some act or illegal omission. [P 10 C 2]

(b) Penal Code, S. 379—Presumption from possession—Evidence Act (1 of 1872), S. 114, ill. (a)

In order to raise legitimately the presumption of theft, the possession of stolen property should be exclusive as well as recent. [P 10 C 1, 2]

(c) Penal Code, S. 379—Accused not in actual possession—Actual possession of his wife or servant or place of custody under his control must be proved.

If the accused is not in manual possession of the stolen article, there must be evidence to prove that the stolen property was found either in the manual possession of the wife, clerk or servant of the accused, or that it was found in a place and under circumstances so as to justify the inference that the accused knew of its existence at that place and that the same was under his effective control. [P 11 C 1]

(d) Penal Code, S. 379—Conviction against more persons than one on the ground of joint possession of stolen property can be secured only on proving actual possession of each or constructive possession with intention of joint exclusive use

To secure conviction against more persons than one on the ground that all such persons were in joint possession of the stolen property, it must be proved that the stolen property was either in the physical possession of each one of the accused or else that it was in the possession, physical or constructive, of one or more of them on behalf of and to the knowledge of the other accused persons and that each one of them intended to possess it for their joint use and to the exclusion of persons other than themselves. [P 11 C 1, 2]

Applicants with two other porters and a constable were travelling in a train. At the station, the van wss searched, A jar containing ghee was found covered with bedding and clothing said to belong to applicants and other porters. On this evidence, the applicants were convicted of theft

Held that possession of the jar could not be attributed to any of the applicants, individually or jointly The conviction was, therefore, bad [P 12 C 1]

T C Elphinston—for the Crown

De Souza, A J C—This is an application to revise an order passed by the learned Judicial Commissioner dismissing the appeal filed by the four applicants who were convicted by the learned Additional City Magistrate, Karachi, of an offence under S 379, I P C, and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for a period of two months

The proved facts are that the applicants along with two other porters and a constable were travelling in an I. G Van train and when the train arrived at the Cantonment Station, Karachi, the van was searched by the Head Constable Sher Zaman in the presence of a mashir when an earthen jar containing 22½ seers of ghee valued at Rs 40 was found in the van covered over with the bedding and clothing said to belong to the applicants and other porters Both the trial Court as well as the Court of appeal has found that the ghee was stolen from certain tins which were loaded in the train at the Station of Jungshahi it being found that eight out of 58 tins were tampered with and the ghee measuring exactly 22½ seers removed from these tins

The only question in the case upon which this application was admitted was the question whether in the circumstances, the possession of stolen ghee in the earthen jar could be imputed to the applicants

It is pointed out by the learned pleader for the applicants that the earthen jar was found in the van to which all the porters as well as policemen had access, that there is nothing to show to whom the bedding belonged under which the jar is said to have been concealed or that the accused were aware of the presence of the jar or that the jar contained stolen ghee

No doubt possession of stolen ghee immediately after the theft raises the presumption of theft against the person in whose possession stolen ghee is found. But the law is clear that in order to raise this presumption legitimately, the possession of stolen property should be exclusive as well as recent. Possession implies not only the physical act of detention but also an intention to possess which is known to civil lawyers as the animus possidendi In the present case would the fact that the earthen jar was found in the van covered with the bedding belonging to some of the applicants, be sufficient to impute exclusive possession to the individual accused persons? The learned pleader for the applicants contends that it is possible that the theft of the ghee and the concealment of the jar might well have taken place without one or the other of the applicants being aware of it. It is equally plausible to argue that the theft and concealment might have been effected by one or more of the porters or the constable who had accompanied them without the other participating in it It seems to me impossible to impute possession merely because the applicants had knowledge

The learned Public Prosecutor while admitting that on this aspect of the case, exclusive possession may not perhaps be brought home to each of the applicants, yet, it would be impossible to exonerate them from abetment But it seems to me that mere knowledge or standing while an offence of this kind was being committed either by the constable or the other porters cannot be covered by the definition of abetment under the Indian Penal Code It may well have been that there was neither conspiracy nor instigation nor intentional aid by some act or illegal omission.

I am, therefore, not satisfied that exclusive possession which as the authorities show is necessary to attract the presumption of theft under S 114, Evidence Act can be imputed to the applicants in the present case,

The result is, that the conviction and sentence under S 379, I P C, recorded against them must be set aside and this application allowed.

Their bail-bonds to be cancelled

Rupchand Bilaram, A. J. C—I concur with my learned brother that the convictions of the appellants cannot possibly stand.

It is, no doubt, true that if all the appellants were in joint possession of the stolen property a presumption would arise that all of them were either thieves or receivers of stolen property: cf. Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 9, para. 1359: R.

v Thomas Smith (1), R. v. Payne (2) and R v Cook (3).

But before such a presumption could be raised it was incumbent on the Crown to prove (a) that each one of the appellants had either physical or constructive possession of the stolen property or any part of it or (b) that one or more of the appellants had possession of the stolen property or any part of it either physical or constructive on behalf of themselves and the other appellants and to the knowledge of the other appellants

Now possession qua the Criminal Law has been defined as under.

"A moveable thing is said to be in the possession of a person when he is so situated with respect to it that he has the power to deal with it as owner to the exclusion of all other persons, and when the circumstances are such that he may be presumed to intend to do so in case of need" Steph. Cr 210, 211 referred to in Stroud's Judicial Dictionary, p. 1516.

Where a person is in physical or manual possession of any stolen property immediately after its theft no difficulty whatsoever arises In such a case it goes without saying that in the absence of anything to the contrary he has the physical power of dealing with it as his own and, therefore, it is open to the Crown to rely upon the presumption that he intends to deal with it as his own to the exclusion of others if need be But if he is not in manual possession of the stolen article the case of the Crown is not so simple There must be evidence to prove that the stolen property was found either in the manual possession of the wife, clerk or servant of the accused see S. 27 of the Code, or that it was found in a place and under circumstances so as to justify the inference that the accused knew of its existence at that place and that the same was under his effective control It is only then that a legitimate presumption may be raised that the accused retained constructive possession of the property with the requisite intention of dealing with it as his own

If the Crown wishes to secure a conviction against more persons than one on the ground that all such persons were in joint possession of the stolen property its task is still more difficult It must further be proved that the stolen property was either in the physical possession of each one of the accused or else that it was in the possession, physical or constructive, of one or more of them on behalf of and to the knowledge of the other accused persons and that each one of them intended to possess it for their joint use and to the exclusion of persons other than themselves By way of simple illustration of the circumstances under which a presumption of guilt may or may not be raised it has been said that where stolen articles are found on the person of an accused person or in a locked up house or room or in a box of which he kept the key there would be fair ground for calling upon him for his defence, but if they are found lying in a house or room in which he lived jointly with others equally capable with himself of having committed the theft or in an open box to which others had access, this would, in the absence of further evidence, raise no definite presumption of his guilt. Best on Evidence, para 212, and more so it would raise no definite presumption of the guilt of each of the other co-occupants or joint users of the house room or box either individually or collectively as being thieves or receivers of stolen property

Now in the present case there was no legal evidence to prove that the stolen ghee was in the possession of any one of the appellants and much less to prove that such possession as any of them might be presumed to have was on the joint account of himself and the other appellants or to their knowledge

The stolen ghee was found in a railway waggon where each of the appellants had an equal right to travel No one of them could exclude the others from getting into or getting out of the waggon or bringing any thing therein. If any person had effective control over the waggon or its contents it was the police constable whose duty it was to keep a watch over the train and he is not before us

At the railway stations where goods had to be loaded or unloaded the appellants were liable to be sent off to different waggons for work and when there was no work to be done they were at liberty to loiter about anywhere on the platform Without any further evidence it is difficult to raise a presumption that all or any one of them knew that the stolen ghee was brought into the waggon, and even if they knew of it, that the moment it was brought into the waggon all of them came to possess it jointly or that they intended to deal with it jointly for their benefit so as to raise the further presumption that they were either thieves or receivers of the stolen ghee

With all respect I am constrained to hold that though a lot of suspicion might exist against all the appellants this was not a case in which they should have been put upon their defence For these reasons I agree that the convictions and sentences against all the accused should be quashed

Civil Revn. Appln No 16 of 1928, Decided on 26th July 1928, from order of 1st Asst. Judge, Hyderabad (Sind), in Civil Appeal No. 77 of 1925

Civil P. C., O. 23, R. 3—Petition of compromise accepted by parties—Judge ordering decree to be passed in terms of compromise, but omitting to order compromise to be recorded—Provisions of O. 23 are sufficiently complied with—Defect if any is cured by provisions of S. 99—Appellate Court cannot go behind compromise and order retrial on merits

Where the petition stating that the parties had arrived at a compromise was read out to both the parties who accepted its terms and the Judge made a note at the back of the petition as follows "Parties present. After hearing it they consent to its terms. Order that the decree be passed in terms of the compromise."

Held: that the order passed by the Sub-Judge was a sufficient compliance with the provisions of that order and even otherwise the defect if any was sufficiently cured by the provisions of S. 99, and that the failure of the Sub-Judge to add in his order the words "the compromise be recorded" gave no jurisdiction to the Judge of the appellate Court to go behind the compromise which had been validly made and to order that the suit be tried on the merits. [P 12 C 2]

Dipchand Chandumal—for Appellant.

Tahilram Manram—for Respondent

Judgment.—The facts giving rise to this application are simple.

The plaintiff-respondent instituted a suit against the defendant-appellant for recovery of Rs 2,700 for work done on the defendant's building His claim was disputed After one witness was examined both parties requested the presiding Judge to inspect the building. They took with themselves a written petition wherein it was stated that the parties had arrived at a compromise by which there was to be a decree in favour of the plaintiff for a sum of money which was left blank and that the defendant was to pay that sum within three months of the date of the decree At the premises there was a discussion between the parties as to the amount which the defendant should pay and the Judge suggested the figure of Rs 1,900 which was accepted by both parties That figure was inserted by the pleader of one of the parties in the petition which was handed over to the Judge The petition was then read out to both the parties who accepted its terms and the learned Judge made a note at the back of the petition which is as follows :

"Parties present After hearing it they consent to its terms. Order—that the decree be passed in terms of the compromise."

It appears that a few days later, the plaintiff felt that he should have received more than the figure given by the Judge and filed an appeal to the District Court purporting to be an appeal under O 43, R. 1, Cl (m), Civil P. C, denying that he had agreed to accept the figure of Rs 1,900 The learned Assistant Judge who heard the appeal sent for a report from the Sub-Judge and held that the story of the plaintiff was false, but set aside the compromise on the ground that the learned Sub-Judge had passed no formal order recording the compromise before passing the decree in favour of the plaintiff and that this omission was fatal to the decree which followed He accordingly, set aside the decree passed by the learned Sub-Judge and sent the case back to him for trial on the merits

In our opinion the order passed by the learned Sub-Judge was a sufficient compliance with the provisions of that order and even otherwise the defect if any was sufficiently cured by the provisions of S 99, Civil P C. The sections provides :

"No decree shall be reversed or substantially varied, nor shall any case be remanded, in appeal on account of any misjoinder of parties or causes of action or any error, defect or irregularity in any proceedings in the suit, not affecting the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court."

It would also appear that the failure of the learned Sub-Judge to add in his order the words "the compromise be recorded" gave no jurisdiction to the learned Judge of the appellate Court to go behind the compromise which had been validly made and to order that the suit be tried on the merits

We accordingly allow this revision application and maintain the judgment and decree passed by that Court The defendant to bear the costs of the first appellate Court and this Court

Pahlajsing B Advani—for Plaintiff.

E V Castellino—for Defendant

Judgment—This is a suit for ejectment of the defendant who is in occupation of a tenement which falls within the definition of small premises within the meaning of the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act of 1918 It is based on two grounds: first, that the defendant had made default in payment of rent for three months prior to the notice of ejectment on which the present suit is based, and secondly, that the defendant had been very irregular in payment of rent even before that notice and was troublesome in several respects, and that his conduct in general afforded the plaintiff a satisfactory cause within the meaning of Cl (2), S. 9 of the principal Act 2 of 1918 to ask for his ejectment The evidence in this case is mostly documentary From the account produced by the plaintiff's mehta it is abundantly clear that prior to 1st November 1926, the defendant very often paid his rent at the end of two months and sometimes at the end of three months The rent from November 1926, to February 1928, was overdue On 7th March 1927, the plaintiff gave the first notice of ejectment, Ex. 4, wherein he complained of the non-payment of rent for the preceding four months and asked for Rs 38-8-0 being paid to him as overdue rent This amount was slightly in excess of the standard rent From November 1926, the plaintiff was entitled to charge ten per cent more than the rent payable before that date which was Rs. 7-14-9 The rent due to him for four months was, therefore, Rs 36-11-0 and not Rs 38-8-0 Apparently, there was a mistake made by the plaintiff's mehta in calculating the overdue rent There is no allegation much less proof that the plaintiff intended to claim more than the authorized rent Instead of pointing out the mistake to the plaintiff, or paying such amount as the defendant admitted to be due, he applied to the Rent Controller to fix the standard rent: vide his application Ex 19-A dated 19th March 1927, and pending the decision of the Rent Controller withheld payment of rent

On 30th April 1927, the pleaders sent a letter in Ex 5 intimating to the plaintiff that the standard rent had been fixed at Rs 9-7-0 and that they were enclosing a cheque for Rs 56-10-0 being the rent for six months which was due up to that date. The cheque was not honoured by the bank on which it was drawn on the ground that the alterations and figures in the cheque required full signatures of the drawer. The cheque was returned to the defendant and a demand made on him on 25th May, to pay up the overdue rent in cash, vide Ex 7 He made payment on or about 7th June but allowed the rent of the month of May to remain again in arrears On 9th June, he and certain other tenants sent a petition to the Rent Controller complaining against the conduct of the plaintiff in closing the door leading up to the roof of the building with the object of preventing the tenants from sleeping on the roof This was a serious allegation to be made against the landlord as it exposed him to a penalty under S. 8 of the Act for disturbing the convenience of the tenants of small premises and the plaintiff was ordered to remove the lock : vide the application Ex. 12-A and the order Ex. 19 There is no doubt whatsoever that this application was engineered by the defendant. The plaintiff appealed to the Rent Controller against that order denying that the tenants had any right to the use of the roof and asked for an inquiry into the matter and for inspection of the premises by the Rent Controller The result of the inquiry and the visit was that the complaint of the defendant was found to be absolutely unjustified and the previous order was cancelled: vide the endorsement in Ex. 12-A, dated 17th July 1927.

During the pendency of this inquiry and subsequently thereafter up to 15th September, the defendant failed to pay rent, when a second notice of ejectment, Ex. 9, on which the present suit is based, was sent to the defendant In answer to that notice the defendant's pleader sent a reply, Ex 10, dated 22nd September. (After reproducing the contents of the reply the judgment proceeded). The plaintiff refused to accept the overdue rent and instituted this suit.

With regard to the first ground on which this suit is based, it is abundantly clear from the documents and the admission of the defendant that he did not pay rent for four months ending with 31st August 1927. But his plea is that no demand was made on him during these months and that in the absence of a demand there was no obligation on him to pay rent

Now S. 108, Cl (i), T. P. Act, makes it obligatory on the tenant to pay or tender at the proper time and place the rent due to the lessor or his agent There is no question here that the proper time for payment of rent for each month was at the expiry of the month It is said that this obligation does not arise until a demand is made There is nothing in the section to require the lessor to make a demand. The English rule which requires the lessor to give a notice of demand before exercising his right of reentry has no application here And again so far as this country is concerned, in the absence of any controlling agreement the customary place for payment of the rent is the landlord's residence or other usual place of his business : Fakir Lal v W. C. Bonnerji (1). It is admitted that no tender was made at the plaintiff's place of business, but it is contended that as it was usual and customary for the plaintiff's mehta to demand payment of rent from the defendant on the leased land and as no such demand was made during these four months there was no default. Assuming for the moment that that is so, I hold on the evidence that the plaintiff's mehta did make a demand every month for payment of rent from the defendant on the premises and that the defendant failed to pay the same. On this point there is the word of the plaintiff's mehta a banya 60 years old, as against the word of the defendant himself. It is clear from the evidence of the mehta that his sole duty is to recover rents of the building a portion of which is in the occupation of the defendant and of other buildings owned by the plaintiff, and that he made several demands on the defendant for payment of rent but with no success. In his cross-examination an attempt was made to show that during these four months he had left Karachi. But he denied that he had left Karachi even for a day. As a matter of fact he had recovered rents from other tenants, and that if he had been out, it would not have been difficult for the defendant to prove it to the hilt by calling the other tenants as his witnesses. Whatever reason he may have had to delay payment of rent as it became due, the defendant appeared to me to be cantankerous and his demeanour in the witness-box impressed me very unfavourably It appears that having made a complaint to the Rent Controller that his access to the roof to which he claimed a right had been stopped he intentionally declined to pay rent and it was only when he received the second notice of ejectment that he realized that his default would be availed of in ejecting him. It is not unlikely that in order to forestall this suit he instructed his pleaders to state in Ex 10 that no demand had been made to him for payment of rent There has been, in my opinion, a clear failure on the part of the defendant to pay rent for four months notwithstanding a demand made by the mehta in each of the months Assuming, therefore, that there was no obligation on the defendant to pay rent unless it was demanded, the defendant has committed a breach of one of the essential obligations imposed on him under S 9 (1) of the principal Act and has, therefore, lost his right to continue in possession as a statutory tenant. The subsequent tender by him of the overdue rent or its payment into Court is of no avail, and it is not competent for the Court to condone such failure either under S. 114, T P Act, or any other Act · Mathuradas Maganlal v. Nathubai Vithaldas (2) and Brewer v. Jacobs (3), where likewise the somewhat similar provisions of S 212, Common Law Procedure Act of 1852, were held not to apply to the case of a statutory tenant who had broken the conditions of his tenancy.

I hold, therefore, that the first ground has been fully made out.

It is equally clear from the correspondence and the conduct of the defendant that he is bent upon harassing the plaintiff. He has not only filed two applications before the Rent Controller but in his last reply, Ex. 10, he has raised further contentious points. He has complained that no repairs have been done to his tenement for years past, that the plaintiff is not bearing the cost of supplying water, and that he has prevented the defendant from sleeping on the roof In respect of the last complaint of his though the Rent Controller has decided against him once he threatens to move him again. What is satisfactory cause within the meaning of S. 9, Cl. (2) of the principal Act must necessarily depend on the facts of each particular case, and taking the facts of this case as a whole, I am of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to succeed on the second ground as well, and I hold accordingly.

There will, therefore, be a decree for ejectment for arrears of rent and mesne profits as claimed and costs, the amount deposited in Court should be paid to the plaintiff in part satisfaction of the money-decree.

E C D. Wheeler—Accused

Original Criminal Sessions Case No 35 of 1927, Decided on 16th February 1928

Evidence Act, Ss. 17 and 21—Evidence by accused, on his own behalf, in extradition proceedings is admissible as admission unless barred by proviso to Evidence Act S. 132.

Evidence given by an accused on his own behalf in extradition proceedings is an admission by an accused person and is, therefore, prima facie admissible in evidence under S. 21; and it is, therefore, for the accused to show why it should not be so admitted. No particular formality is required to enable an admission by an accused person to go in as an admission. A previous deposition is admissible against the witness on his subsequent trial, unless he has brought himself within the protection of the proviso to S. 132. 39 Cal. 164 and 45 Cal. 720, Rel. on. [P 16 C 1, 2]

T. G. Elphinston—for the Crown

Osborne—for Accused.

Order.—In this case, accused 6 Wheeler, as an accused in the extradition proceedings in London, which led to his being sent here for trial, gave evidence on his own behalf When the Public Prosecutor proposed to put in that evidence as evidence here, the learned counsel for accused 6 stated that he did not object to its going in. That evidence was accordingly exhibited and read out to the jury. On the following day, the learned counsel for accused 6 stated that he had not previously seen the evidence, and that on hastily looking through it in Court he had not seen the evidence recorded after the first part of that evidence; and that on going through it at his leisure, he wished to take objection to the part of the evidence which was given under cross-examination. He also contended that the accused is not bound by a statement made by the learned counsel himself on the spur of the moment ; and that it is for the Court to decide whether in fact such evidence is legally admissible against the accused or not. On behalf of the Crown it is contended that :—1. The evidence is admissible in evidence and 2. It is too late to reject evidence which has already been exhibited and read to the jury.

I think on consideration that it is desirable to examine the question of the admissibility of the evidence, apart from the fact that the evidence has already been placed on the record ; because it would still be open to the Court while addressing the jury, to ask the jury to disregard the evidence in question on the ground that it was admitted by some oversight or mistake As to the admissibility of the evidence there the learned Public Prosecutor relies on S 21, Evidence Act and S 1, English Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, and on certain cases, namely, In re Rudolph Stallman (1) Emperor v. Banarsi (2), Akhoy Kumar Mukerjee v Emperor (3) and Emperor v. Noni Gopal Gupta (4) On behalf of accused 6, the main contention is that, as an accused person cannot be examined on oath and cross-examined in India, his evidence given under cross-examination in England as an accused person in connexion with the same offence cannot be admitted in evidence here

A reference, however, to S. 17 and S. 21, Evidence Act, shows that the wording is very wide The evidence in question is an admission by an accused person and is, therefore, prima facie admissible in evidence under S. 21 ; and it is, therefore, for the accused to show why it should not be so admitted In regard to confessions (which are a form of admission) to police officers, and in certain other cases such admissions are specifically excluded by the Evidence Act, and, therefore, in respect of them, the general provisions of S 21 are superseded ; but there is no such special provision superseding S. 21 in this case.

(1) [1912] 39 Cal. 164 = 15 C. W. N. 1053 = 12 I. C. 273 = 14 C. L. J. 375.
(2) A. I. R. 1924 All. 381 = 46 All. 254.
(3) [1918] 45 Cal. 720 = 27 C. L. J. 91 = 45 I. C. 999 = 22 C. W. N. 405.
(4) [1911] 38 Cal. 559 = 10 I. C. 582 = 15 C. W. N. 593.

The cases cited by the learned Public Prosecutor do not refer to the exact point now under consideration The case reported as In re Rudolph Stallman (1), however, shows that the evidence recorded in the extradition proceedings is admissible; and, therefore, it is for the defence to show affirmatively why a particular admission included in evidence which is legally admissible here should be excluded It may be noted that no particular formality under the Indian Law is required to enable an admission by an accused person to go in as an admission; for instance in this very case a letter by accused 6 has been put in by the prosecution

If it is contended that evidence on oath by an accused person cannot be used against him in connexion which the same offence, there are plenty of cases to show that that can be done, for instance Akhoy Kumar Mukarjee v. Emperor (3) cited above. It is there laid down that

> " a previous deposition is admissible against the witness on his subsequent trial, unless he has brought himself within the protection of the proviso to S, 132, Evidence Act"

(this exception has not been contended in the case). If, therefore, A gives evidence against B in connexion with an offence committed by A and B together that admission of A can be used against A himself if he is put on his trial There is, therefore, no inherent reason why an admission given in evidence by an accused person should not be used against him in respect of the same offence The only difference between the two cases is that in that case A has given evidence against B. In this case A has given evidence on his own behalf in certain judicial proceedings connected with his own case

I have already held that the evidence of Anstey in the extradition proceeding cannot be used against the present accused 6. But in respect of Anstey, certain other sections are to be considered, namely, S 33 and to some extent S. 21, Evidence Act. Here S 21, Evidence Act applies ; and the provisions of that section are not superseded by any other section applicable in this case. I hold therefore, that the evidence in question which has already been exhibited and read to the jury, is admissible in evidence in this case as against accused only.

Criminal Revn Appln No 201 of 1928, Decided on 19th November 1928, from order of Resident Mag., Rohri.

Criminal P. C., S. 190 (1) (b)—Proceedings for murder started against A — Some witnesses stating the murderer to be M and not A—Magistrate suspending proceedings against A and directing proceedings against M — Procedure is not illegal but not suitable — A should be discharged or acquitted before proceeding against M — Criminal P. C., S. 209

One A was challaned by the police for murder. In the course of committal proceedings the Magistrate found that there were some witnesses who said that the murderer was not A but M. The Magistrate therefore proposed to suspend further proceedings against A and directed that proceedings on the charge of murder should be started against M with the intention of committing one or the other to the Sessions Court.

Held that the procedure, though not illegal, was not suitable. The Magistrate should either commit A to the Sessions Court or, if he is not satisfied that there are sufficient grounds for committing him to the Sessions Court, should discharge him, and that further proceedings should not be taken against M until A is either convicted, acquitted, or discharged. [P 17 C 2]

Nihchaldas T. Vazirani — for Applicant

C. M Lobo—for the Crown.

Judgment — The facts which give rise to this revision application are as follows :

A murder was committed on 22nd March of this year and one Sadar was challaned by the police The case against him was heard but in the course of it, the learned Resident Magistrate, Rohri, found that there were three witnesses who said that the murderer was not Sadar but the present applicant Sher Mahomed The learned Magistrate thinks that these three witnesses are entitled to as much credence as the prosecution witnesses against Sadar He is therefore proposing to suspend further proceedings against Sadar and is directing that proceedings on the charge of murder should be started against the applicant Sher Mahomed The intention of the learned Magistrate is that after recording the evidence against Sher Mahomed, he will be in a position either to commit one or the other to the Sessions Court.

It is argued that this procedure is not legal. But we are not prepared to hold that this procedure is not allowed under S. 190 (1) (b), Criminal P. C At the same time, it seems to us that the procedure proposed is not suitable The evidence against Sadar has been fully recorded and it is improper that there should be any further delay The evidence which the learned Magistrate may record in the proceedings against Sher Mahomed would not be strictly speaking relevant and he therefore ought to make up his mind without having recourse to them.

We therefore direct that the learned Magistrate should either commit Sadar to the Sessions Court or if he is not satisfied that there are sufficient grounds for committing him to the Sessions Court should discharge him, and that further proceedings should not be taken aguinst Sher Mahomed until Sadar is either convicted, acquitted or discharged

Criminal Appeal No. 237 of 1927, Decided on 29th March 1928, from judgment of Sess Judge, Sukkur, D/- 21st November 1927

(a) Penal Code, Ss. 380 and 442—"Building includes structure whether covered or not and made of any material.

A building within the meaning of Ss. 380 and 442, includes a structure whether covered or not and made of any materials whatsoever. The limitations imposed by the legislature on buildings referred to in Ss. 380 and 442 are not as to the nature of their structures or the materials of which they are made but to the use to which such structures are intended to be put. [P 18 C 2]

A court-yard attached to the living rooms walled in on all sides and provided by a door leading to the street comes within the purview of the section : Moir v. Williams, (1892) 1 Q. B. 264, Ref.; 35 P. R. 1879 Cr; A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 28, 6 N. W. P. R. 307 and A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 117, Foll. 57 P. R 1897 Cr; 28 P. R. 1905 Cr, 24 P. R. 1914 Cr. and 11 P. W. R. 1919 Cr., Dist. [P 19 C 1]

(b) Penal Code, S. 442—Intention as to use of particular structure depends upon particular facts.

Whether any particular structure or any part of it was intended as a human dwelling or as a place of worship or for custody of property must necessarily depend on the facts of each case. [P 18 C 2]

C. M Lobo—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The facts of this case are simple and have been proved beyond doubt.

It appears that the complainant was aroused by a sound in his court-yard and on going out found the accused there Thereupon the accused threw at him an iron bar which struck the complainant on the right side under his arm pit In spite of it he grappled with the accused and after a struggle overpowered him Two of the tenants who lived in the same part of the building came up on his cries and helped him to tie up the accused who was thereafter handed over to the police

On these facts the accused has been convicted and sentenced to ten years' rigorous imprisonment under S 458, I P C, as he had certain previous convictions.

The accused has appealed to us from jail and his appeal has been admitted for consideration of the following two points :

(1) Whether the court-yard was a building within the definition of S. 442, I. P. C, and

(2) Whether there was preparation by him, to cause hurt within the meaning of S 458, I P C, when he committed house-breaking ?

Now S 442 defines house-trespass as criminal trespass in any building, tent, or vessel used .

(a) as a human dwelling, or

(b) as a place of worship, or

(c) as a place for the custody of property.

The expression " building" is used in several other sections of the Code, e. g , S. 288 negligence in pulling down or repairing a building, S 380 theft in a building and S 436 mischief intending to cause destruction of a building.

But it has not been defined anywhere in the Code and has been the subject of divergent judicial decisions.

A few of the decided cases appear to have proceeded on the assumption that " a building" must necessarily be an enclosure made of bricks or stones and covered over by a roof. That was the definition given by Lord Esher, M. R , in Moir v. Williams (1) in a civil suit where the question before the Court was whether the plaintiff in that case was entitled to one fee or to separate fees for supervising a building consisting of separate chambers, and the answer to that question depended on whether or not each of those separate chambers was a separate building within the meaning of the Metropolitan Building Act, 1855

The expression "building" has received a much more comprehensive meaning in statutes both English and Indian relating to the powers and duties of public and local bodies such as the municipalities and is said to include a structure whether covered or not and made of any materials whatsoever.

A bare reading of the different sections of the Code makes it abundantly clear that this expression has been used in the Code in its more comprehensive sense

In S 288, I P C, a building would include a bare wall negligently pulled down.

In Ss 380 and 442, I P C, a building, a tent and a vessel have all been put on the same level If an offence committed in or with respect to a tent made of unsubstantial and inflammable materials and that committed on the deck of a vessel though open to the sky require a severe punishment, there is no reason why a similar offence committed in a building which is made of matting or is open to the sky should not receive the same punishment.

The limitations which appear to have been imposed by the legislature on buildings referred to in Ss 380 and 442 are not as to the nature of their structures or the materials of which they are made but to the use to which such structures are intended to be put Whether any particular structure or any part of it was intended as a human dwelling or as a place of worship or for custody of property must necessarily depend on the facts of each case

Viewed from this light several of the divergent rulings are easily reconcilable.

A small court-yard consisting of a walled enclosure with four kothis or chambers opening into it and an outer gate leading into a side street as in Shera v. Empress (2) or an unroofed 'warah' adjoining the living room of the complainant as in Ismail v Emperor (3) were pre-eminently intended as part of a human dwelling or for custody of household property and were rightly held to come within the sections.

(3) A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 28=6 Lah. 463.

Similarly a cattle yard enclosed by walls on all four sides with a gap in the wall which has been caused by disrepair and was stopped by thorn brushes as in Queen v Dullee (4) or a warah or a cattle shed surrounded by walls as in Niamat v. Emperor (5) were constructions pre-eminently intended for custody of property. On the other hand, a cattle enclosure made of thorn hedges on all sides as in Sucha Singh v Empress (6) or in Emperor v Ramzan (7) or a cattle enclosure not attached to any house, but made of one single wall on one side and of thorn hedges on the remaining three sides as in Kohmi v Emperor (8) or a Court-yard partly surrounded by a mud wall and partly open with one door or gate-way, separating it from the street as in Sunder v Emperor (9) are all cases where it may fairly be presumed that such semi-enclosed places were not intended to be used as human dwelling or as places for custody of property

In the present case the court-yard scaled over by the accused was attached to the living rooms walled in on all sides and was provided by a door leading to the street which was secured and there can be no doubt that it came within the purview of the section

With regard to the second point, it would appear that the proper section to be applied to the circumstances of this case was S 457, I P C, as the iron bar with which the accused hit the complainant was evidently brought in by the accused for the purpose of house-breaking and not for the purpose of causing hurt in the course of his depredations. It is, however, immaterial whether the accused is convicted under S. 457 or S. 458, I. P. C, as it would have made no difference in the sentence which has been awarded to him. It is, therefore, not necessary that the charge should be amended

For. these reasons, we confirm the conviction and sentence and dismiss this appeal

Papurbai—Appellant

v.

Chuhermal Mulchand and others—Respondents

First Appeal No 18 of 1927, Decided on 19th November 1928.

Will—Construction—Hindu disposing by will both ancestral and self-acquired property—Legacies in favour of widow and daughters—Residue to be divided between two sons—Elder son a stepson of the widow—Condition in the will that elder son should continue to manage property and will need not be enforced if he would look after his brother, sisters and stepmother properly—Younger son dying subsequently—Sons will come in only if there would be residue of property over which testator had disposing power—Vesting of legacies was not intended to be prevented—Only distribution was postponed—Though legacies not assented to by executors, mother is entitled to her son's half share in the residue

One M, a Hindu, died on 24th October 1919 leaving behind him two sons C and B, a widow P and three daughters. C was the stepson of P M disposed of by will all property including some ancestral property. He bequeathed Rs 10,000 to each daughter and his widow. The residue was to be divided between the two sons equally. Two executors were appointed to enforce the will. There was also a provision that if C would continue to look after his stepmother, brother and sisters properly it was not necessary to enforce the will and C should continue to manage the property. If P appeared dissatisfied the will was to be enforced at once. B died without issue on 10th May 1920. P sued for her Rs 10,000 and Rs. 30,000 on behalf of her daughters and half of the residue as the mother of B.

Held further: was nothing in the will to suggest that the sons of the testator were a special object of his bounty or that he wished to leave to them a substantial part of his self-acquired property in addition to their shares in the ancestral property which devolved on them by right of survivorship. [P 21 C 2]

Held further: there was also no question of any uncertainty about the intentions of the testator as expressed by him in his will. In unambiguous and express terms the testator bequeathed to C and B only the residue of his estate and they can only come in if there is such residue of the property over which the testator had a disposing power and in respect of which he had not made any other testamentary disposition which was capable of taking effect. [P 21 C 2]

Held further : that the clause permitting C to deal with the property so long as he behaved well towards the other beneficiaries was capable of the construction that it merely postponed the distribution of the legacies and did not in any way intend to prevent or aim at preventing the vesting of the legacies. [P 22, C 1]

Held further : that though the executors had not assented to the residuary bequest in favour of B before his death, such bequest was transmissible to P as B's heir. [P 22, C 2]

(b) Will—Construction—Court should lean against intestacy.

One of the cardinal canons of construction applicable to wills is that the Court will lean against intestacy and will not presume that the testator meant to die intestate if on a fair construction there is no reason for saying the contrary. Kark Smith v. Parnell, (1903) 1 Ch 483 and Re Harrison, (1885) 3 Ch. D. 390, Rel. on. [P 21, C 2]

(c) Succession Act (1925), S. 332—Legatee dying before executors' assent—His heirs are entitled to his legacy.

No doubt as a protection to the executor the law ordains that every legatee whether general or specific, and whether of chattels real or personal, must obtain the executor's assent to the legacy before his title as legatee can be complete and perfect; before such assent, however, the legatee has an inchoate right to the legacy such as is transmissible to his own personal representatives in case of his death before it is paid or delivered. A. I. R. 1923 Cal 21, Foll. [P 22, C 2]

(d) Succession Act (1925), S. 59—Legatees' assent does not give testator power to dispose property over which he has no disposing power.

Any assent by the legatee to abide by the will would not clothe the testator with authority to deal with property over which he had no disposing power. [P 22, C 2]

(e) Succession Act (1925), Ss. 303 and 304—Ss. 303 and 304 apply to Hindus.

A legatee who is in possession of the property of the deceased or at any rate a major portion of it and is holding it adversely to the widow and the other legatees is liable to be sued as an executor de son tort. Ss. 303 and 304 now apply to Hindus as well. A. I. R. 1922 Mad. 457, Foll. [P 22, C 1]

Gopal Das Jhamatmal—for Appellant.

Tojumal Hassomal, Javhermal Vilaitrai and Tolasing Khushalsing—for Respondents

Rupchand Bilaram, A. J. C.—The plaintiff-appellant is the widow of one Mulchand a Hindu resident of Hyderabad who died there on 24th October 1919. The chief contesting defendant-respondent Chuhermal is her stepson. The other defendants-respondents Gopibai, Mathribai and Kalawantibai are her minor daughters.

Mulchand made a will dated 22nd September 1919, in the Sindhi language, which has been translated as follows :

" I maintain and give effect to this will as follows .—That out of whatever property is my own, Rs. 30,000 (thirty thousand) be set apart and utilized for the marriage expenses of my three daughters, namely Gopi. Mathri and Kalawanti, and Rs. 10,000 (ten thousand) should be given in cash to my wife, because according to the custom of Hyderabad City, a mother of daughters requires money in order to please the relations of her daughters' husbands. The remaining property shall all be divided into two equal shares, one of which should be given to my eldest son, Chuhermal, and other to my youngest son Bhagwani. To enforce the above will, I have appointed Mr. Rewachand Idanmal Mansughani and Bhai Lokumal Satramdas Mahtani. If Chuhermal continues to look after his stepmother Papurbai and his stepsisters, Gopi Mathri and Kalawanti, and his stepbrother, Bhagwani, properly, just as full and true brothers, sisters and mothers are looked after, then it is not necessary to enforce the will. But an inquiry about this should be made from Papurbai. If she appears dissatisfied, the above will should be enforced at once.

My property is approximately worth as under

Rs. 1,33,000-0-0 "

" Besides the above the ornaments which are with Devibai and Papurbai will be worth about ten thousand rupees. The same shall remain in their possession. The furniture is worth about Rs. 3000 which shall be considered as joint property.

Sd. Mulchand A. 22-9-19."

The plaintiff's son Bhagwani referred to in the will died a minor and without issue on 21st May 1920. Three years later the plaintiff instituted this suit alleging that Chuhermal had mismanaged the property of the deceased, and had improperly stopped supplying her with funds. She prayed (a) for payment to her of the sum of Rs. 10,000 bequeathed to her under the will; (b) for payment to her of Rs. 10,997-9-4 with interest due thereon said to have been deposited by her with her husband; (c) for the sum of Rs. 30,000, reserved for the marriages of her three daughters being set apart, and (d) for the residue of the estate being divided into two equal shares, and the share which would have been given to Bhagwani, if he were alive being handed over to her as his heir.

With her plaint she filed two schedules of the property of the deceased The first schedule referred to three immovable properties which were admitted by her to be ancestral properties of the deceased, but which were treated by him in the will as his own. These properties are (a) the shop in the main bazar, (b) the shop in Khatuband Lane, and (c) the residential house. Chuhermal denied the validity of the will and resisted the claim on that and several other grounds. The learned Judge below has dealt with only some of the issues in the case and has dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The following issues arise for our consideration : (1) Is the will bad in form or otherwise ineffective on the ground of uncertainty? (2) Have Bhagwani's rights under the will devolved on the plaintiff? (3) Did Chuhermal assent to the will, and if so, what is its effect? (4) Is the suit bad in form, and if so, what order should be made in that behalf?

Issue 1 :—The learned Judge declined to give effect to the will on two grounds. He was of the opinion that as the testator dealt with the property a part of which was admittedly ancestral, it it was not certain what he might or might not have done had he known that he had no disposing power over such part of it as was ancestral. He has observed that the testator

" would surely have made a different will at least so far as the extent of the lagacies go" and " he might probably not have made the defendant 1 and Bhagwani as more residuary legatees knowing that there might be left no residue for them to enjoy."

He has further held that as there was no evidence to show that it was certain that there would be some residue for the residuary legatees, the will was void for uncertainty.

We are unable to appreciate this line of reasoning. It appears to us to be fallacious and contrary to the fundamental canons of construction applicable to wills. It is too much to assume that the testator did not know that some of the property dealt with by him in his will was his ancestral property He may have had motives of his own to deal with it as his own property. But assuming that he was under a mistaken belief that he could deal with the whole property as his own, it is not within the province of the Court to speculate what the testator might or might not have done, had he known of his alleged mistake In the Earl of Scarborough v. Doe D Savile (1), at p. 962, Tindal, C. J. has said :

" Whilst the intention of the testator ought to be our only guide to the interpretation of his will, it must be his intention to be collected from the words employed by himself in his will. No surmise of conjecture of any object which the testator may be supposed to have had in view can be allowed to have any weight in the construction of his will unless such object can be collected from the plain language of the will itself.

" We hold it to be a necessary rule in the investigation of the intention of a testator, not only that we ought to look to the words of the will alone, to determine the operation and effect of the desire, but that we ought to disregard altogether the legal consequences which may follow from the nature and qualities of the estate when such estate is once collected from the will itself."

There is nothing in the will, in this case to suggest that the sons of the testator were a special object of his bounty, or that he wished to leave to them a substantial part of his self-acquired property in addition to their shares in the ancestral property which devolved on them by right of survivorship, so as to justify the observation of the learned Judge that the testator probably might not have made his sons mere residuary legatees. There is also no question of any uncertainty about the intentions of the testator as expressed by him in his will. In unambiguous and express terms the testator has bequeathed to them only the residue of his estate and they can only come in if there is such residue of the property over which the testator had a disposing power and in respect of which he has not made any other testamentary disposition which is capable of taking effect. cf. S 103, Indian Succession Act

The finding of the learned Judge that there is no evidence to prove that there would be some residue for the residuary legatees, though that finding is of no consequence whatsoever is not supported by the record. The very schedule filed by Chuhermal himself shows that the stock in trade in his possession is valued by him at Rs 50,000 The second ground on which the learned Judge has proceeded is equally unsustainable. According to the interpretation put upon the will by him, it would appear that he considered that its terms prevented the vesting of the property of the testator in any person whatsoever "until and unless the testator's widow had decided to give effect to the will," and that in so far as it created a vacuum or intestacy pending such decision the will was bad in law Now one of the cardinal canons of construction applicable to wills is that the Court will lean against intestacy and will not presume that the testator meant to die intestate if on a fair construction there is no reason for saying the contrary.

(1) [1836] 3 A. & E. 897.

Kirk-Smith v. Parnell (2). In an earlier case in re Harrison (3) Lord Esher, M. R. very aptly stated the same rule as follows :

"There is one rule of construction which to my mind is a golden rule, viz.,that when a testator has executed a will in solemn form you must assume that he did not intend to make it a solemn farce that he did not intend to die intestate when he has gone through the form of making a will. You ought, if possible to read the will so as to lead to a testacy, not to an intestacy."

There are no express words preventing the vesting of property on the legatees pending the decision of the widow. The will appears to have been written without legal advice. The clauses which may at first sight appear to be contradictory are easily reconcilable The latter clause which permits Chuhermal to deal with the property so long as he behaved well towards the other beneficiaries is capable of the construction that it merely postpones the distribution of the legacies and does not in any way intend to prevent or aim at preventing the vesting of the legacies. It would appear abundantly clear from the context that the testator had no objection to permit Chuhermal to manage the property for the benefit of all the beneficiaries, so long as he managed the estate properly. The marriages of the testator's daughters were not likely to take place at once, and the withdrawal of large sums of money from the business of the testator, which was a going concern might have seriously hampered it This consideration sufficiently accounts for the desire of the testator to permit Chuhermal to continue to manage it

As so interpreted, there appears to be no vacuum between the death of the testator and the decision of the testator's widow that the distribution of the estate should take place at a particular time and no question of intestacy arises. We hold that the will is a valid will in respect of that part of the property over which the testator had a disposing power

Issue 2 : The learned Judge seemed to be of the opinion that as the executors had not assented to the residuary bequest in favour of Bhagwani before his death such bequest was not transmissible to the plaintiff as heir. In this he was clearly mistaken It will be sufficient to refer to the case of Khagendranath Mookerjee v. Khetranath Pal (4) where Mookerjee, J. has discussed the law on the subject with his usual thoroughness and has pointed out that as a protection to the executor the law ordains that every legatee whether general or specific, and whether of chattels real or personal, must obtain the executor's assent to the legacy before his title as legatee can be complete and perfect before such assent, however the legatee has an inchoate right to the legacy such as is transmissible to his own personal representatives in case of his death before it be paid or delivered." The plaintiff has therefore, every right to the residuary bequest left to Bhagwani by his father, and that the plaintiff is entitled to sue for recovery thereof.

Issue 3· In his evidence the witness Revachand stated ·

"I informed him (i. e. Chuhermal) of the will. He accepted the will and agreed to abide by it "

The learned Judge has accepted this evidence as true but has held that it does not go far enough to prove conclusively that Rewachand explained the will to Chuhermal before he gave his assent In doing so the learned Judge has not taken into consideration the clear and unambiguous admission of Chuhermal himself (line 100 of his evidence) that Rewachand told him what the contents of the will were. We have no hesitation in holding on the first part of this issue against Chuhermal.

In dealing with the second part of this issue, the learned Judge has very rightly observed that any assent by Chuhermal to abide by the will would not clothe the testator with authority to deal with property over which he had no disposing power But that is not the only aspect of the case put forward on behalf of the plaintiff. It is contended that the defendant is estopped from disputing that any part of the property dealt with under the will was ancestral property as in consequence of his assenting to treat the whole property as having been validly bequeathed and his agreeing to give effect to it, he was permitted to deal with it as manager or agent of the beneficiaries and that it was likewise in consequence of this assent that no suit was filed on behalf of Bhagwani during his lifetime for partition of the ancestral property It is further contended that Chuhermal's assent operated as a family arrangement between the parties by which the parties are bound. No specific issues have been raised on these points and we decline to go into them, but leave it to the parties to raise proper issues before the lower Court and to have them decided by that Court in the first instance

Issue 4 Now, there can be no doubt that Chuhermal was in possession of the property of the deceased. or at any rate a major portion of it He was holding it adversely to the widow and the other legatees, and he was therefore liable to be sued as an executor de son tort· Parthasarathy Appa Rao v Venkatadri Appa Rao (5) and Ss 303 and 304, Succession Act 39 of 1925 which sections now apply to Hindus as well. Two objections which seemed to have prevailed with the lower Court are· (1) that the suit is not a suit for the administration of the estate, and (2) that as there is no clear proof that the executors appointed under the will had refused to act as such, they were necessary parties to the suit.

Now, there can be no doubt that the suit is in effect a suit for the administration of the estate of the deceased though the prayer clause does not comply strictly with the form prescribed in that behalf in the Civil Procedure Code All that can be said is that the suit is at most technically bad in form. It is also clear that the executors have not moved in the matter, and is not unlikely that they do not wish to intermeddle with the estate However, in order to meet these technical difficulties, we permit the plaintiff to amend the plaint firstly by bringing the executors on the record as pro forma defendants, and secondly by bringing out more clearly the pleas of estoppel, of Chuhermal's assent operating as a family arrangement and lastly by amending the prayer clause and bringing it strictly in accordance with one of the alternative forms given under form No. 43, Appendix A, Civil Procedure Code. Amended plaint to be filed within fifteen days The case to be called up for further orders on 13th December

Soomar Abdulla—Accused

Sessions Case No. 25 of 1927, Decided on 18th January 1928

Criminal P. C., Ss. 528-A and 528-B—Accused must claim his right before Magistrate—If not, he is barred from raising it subsequently.

It is a condition precedent to the determination of the status of an accused person that he should assert his right to be tried as a person belonging to a particular nationality before the Magistrate to whom he is sent up for trial. It is the assertion of that claim which gives jurisdiction to the Magistrate to inquire into the matter and to give a finding thereon, which, if adverse to the accused, may be challenged in the subsequent proceedings. But if the accused has failed to assert the plea at the proper time, the provisions of S. 528-B in express terms prevent him from asserting it in any subsequent stage of the case

Parasram Tolaram—for the Crown.

Tulsidas Amanmal—for Accused

Order—The accused asserts that he is an Indian British subject and claims the privilege of being tried by a jury consisting of a majority of his own countrymen

Now S 275, Criminal P C, which deals with that privilege provides that the accused should not merely assert that he belongs to a particular nationality but he should be one who has been found under the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code to belong to that nationality. It is, therefore, necessary to see what those provisions are Chs 33 and 44 (A) are the only chapters to which my attention has been invited, and which deal with an enquiry into the nationality of an accused person Ch 33 has no application in the circumstances of the present case, as persons belonging to different nationalities are not concerned in the trial. Now Ch. 44 (A) which deals with cases not falling under Ch 33 of the Code makes it a condition precedent to the determination of the status of an accused person that he should assert his right to be tried as a person belonging to a particular nationality before the Magistrate to whom he is sent up for trial. It is the assertion of that claim which gives jurisdiction to the Magistrate to inquire into the matter and to give a finding thereon, which, if adverse to the accused may be challenged in the subsequent proceedings. S. 528-B which falls within that chapter reads as follows:

"528-B. If in any such case an European or Indian British subject or an European (other than an European British subject) or an American does not claim to be dealt with as such by the Magistrate before whom he is tried or by whom he is committed, or if, when such claim has been made before and rejected by the Committing Magistrate, it is not repeated before the Court to which such person is committed, he shall be held to have relinquished his right to be dealt with as an European British subject or an Indian British subject, or an European or an American, as the case may be, and shall not assert it in any subsequent stage of the case."

The accused admittedly failed to claim the privilege of being tried as an Indian British subject before the Committing Magistrate There has been no inquiry and no finding as to his status There is, therefore, a two-fold answer to the plea raised by the learned pleader In the first place, as the accused has failed to assert the plea at the proper time, I have no jurisdiction now to determine his status, and in the second place, he is expressly debarred from asserting that claim by the provisions of S 528-B which in express terms prevents him from asserting it in any subsequent stage of the case I, therefore, disallow this plea

In re Reloomal Tolaram—Insolvent.

Original Civil Case No. 22 of 1928, Decided on 28th March 1928

(a) Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, S. 11—Business by general agent, acting for diverse constituents on commission basis is not contemplated.

The business contemplated by the section should be carried on within the limits of the Court either personally by the defendant or by his agent properly and strictly so-called and under his effective control, but not by a general agent who carries on business in his own name for diverse constituents on payment to him of a commission : 8 *M. (b) Contract Act, S. 231—Liability of undisclosed principal for contracts entered into by agent is only secondary.

Business done by a commission agent in his own name though for the benefit of an undisclosed principal, who is liable to indemnify the commission agent against loss, is not business done by such undisclosed principal through the agent, but business done by the agent : 18 Bom. 294 (P.C.), Expl. and Dist. [P 26 C 1]

(c) Provincial Insolvency Act, S. 11 (b) (d)—Words "either personally or through agent" remove doubt as to insolvency Court's jurisdiction over foreigners, dealing through agents—Sales or purchases through commission agent are not included.

The words "either personally or through an agent" were introduced for the purpose of removing a doubt which might otherwise have existed as to the jurisdiction of the insolvency Court over foreigners carrying on business within the jurisdiction of the insolvency Court by the employment of agents or managers properly and strictly so-called, and not for including purchases and sales made by employing a commission agent [P 26 C 2]

Srikrishendas H. Lulla—for Applicants.

Order.—This is an application by a firm of commission agents carrying on business here, to declare one of their up-country constituents as insolvents. It is admitted that the debtors reside and till lately carried on business outside the jurisdiction of this Court, but it is contended that in so far they employed the petitioning creditors as their commission agents to buy and sell commodities for them in the Karachi market, they must be deemed to have carried on business at Karachi through their agents, the petitioning creditors, within the meaning of S. 11, Cl. (b), Presidency Towns Insolvency Act.

I think that this argument is entirely misconcieved The expression "carrying on business" within the jurisdiction to a Court has been the subject of several judicial decisions both here and in England and has received a much narrower interpretation than the one which has been suggested by the learned pleader. In Chinnammal v. Tulukannatammal (1), it was held that in S 12, Letters Patent, the expression "carrying on business" was not intended to be used in its most general sense but referred to a defendant who at the time of the commencement of the suit carried on within the local limits of the Court's jurisdiction some independent regular business in person, as in the case of Mitchel v. Hender (2), or at any office or other fixed place of business: see Rolfe v. Learmouth (3), either personally or by clerks or servants employed by the defendant and conducting the business under his control and in his individual or partnership name. In that case the defendant had no place of business in Madras, and the sales were effected on his behalf by one Narayan in his independent trade or business name of a general broker and the Court declined to entertain the suit for want of jurisdiction.

In Frdmji Kavasji v. Hormasji Kavasji (4), the Bombay High Court declined jurisdiction under S. 12, Letters Patent, against a retail dealer in European goods residing and carrying on business in an up-country station though he had an agent in Bombay for the purpose of purchasing and forwarding goods to be used in his trade.

In Khimji Chaturbhuj v. Charles Forbes (5) the Bombay High Court likewise declined jurisdiction against an English firm having in their employment a Bombay firm as their commission agents for the purpose of transacting their business on usual terms.

In Muthaya Chetti v. John Harrison Allan (6) an up-country trader who habitually sent goods to Madras for sale by a firm of commission agents whose business it was to sell goods for others on commission was said not to carry on business in Madras so as to give jurisdiction to that Court.

In Murugesa Chetti v. Annamalai Chetti (7), a case governed by S. 17, Civil P. C. of 1882, corresponding to S 20 of the present Code, the Madras High Court held that a person acting as agent within the jurisdiction of the Court should be an agent in the strict sense of the term, and that the mere fact that the defendant was, as a member of a joint Hindu family, entitled to claim an interest in a business carried on within the jurisdiction of the Court by a person who was also the manager of the family was not sufficient to bring him within the purview of the words " carries on business " within the meaning of that section. A distinction was, however, drawn between such a person and a member of a joint Hindu family who had consented to a trade being carried on on his behalf or by his conduct put himself in the position of a joint trader.

The decision on this point was confirmed in Annamalai Chetty v Murugesa Chetty (8) and in delivering the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council, Lord Lindley says :

" After carefully considering the evidence their Lordships have come to the conclusion that the District Judge fell into the error of treating Kandasami Chetty as the agent of the defendant. This mistake is clearly pointed out by the High Court. Kandasami Chetty's acts and his payments to the defendant are all attributable to his being the manager of joint family property, of which the defendant had a share , and their Lordships entirely concur with the High Court in holding that such a person is not the agent of the members of the family so as to make them liable to be sued as if they were the principals of the manager. The relation of such persons is not that of principal or agent, or of partners, it is much more like that of trustee and cestui que trust.

It is clear from these rulings that in order to give jurisdiction either under the Letters Patent or the Code of Civil Procedure the business should be carried on within the limits of the Court either personally by the defendant or by his agent properly and strictly so-called and under his effective control, but not by a general agent who carries on business in his own name for diverse constituents on payment to him of a commission as in the present case

The present application is against the firm and not an individual carrying on business It, therefore, falls within the purview of Cl (d), S 11, which contains the identical expression as in the Letters Patent and the Civil Procedure Code with the further limitation that such business should have been carried on within the period of one year preceding the date of the application. Prima facie, therefore, this expression should receive the same meaning as that contained in the other two statutes.

My attention has been invited to the following observations of Lord Morris in Goswami Shri Girdharji Mahraj v. Govardhanlalji Mahraj (9).

" The phrase " carry on business " as has been often said, is a very elastic one, and is almost incapable of definition. The tribunal must in each case look to the particular circumstances. It appears to their Lordships that the Letters Patent intended it to relate to business in which a man might contract debts and ought to be liable to be sued by persons who had business transactions with him."

It has been argued that if this test be applied to the present case, the debtors having made contracts through the petitioning creditors on katcha addat system exposed themselves to suits being filed by local dealers against them as the undisclosed principals of the petitioning creditors. The obvious answer to that argument is that they are not liable to be sued on business transactions entered into with them, but with the petitioning creditors as principals and their liability is only secondary. Business done by a commission agent in his own name though for the benefit of an undisclosed principal who is liable to indemnify the commission agent against loss is not business done by such undisclosed principal through the agent, but business done by the agent. It is pertinent to note that the observations referred to above were made in a case where the point at issue was whether transactions which were said to give jurisdiction to the Court, namely, receiving of offerings, amounted to "business" within the meaning of S. 12, Letters Patent, or not and that point having been answered in the negative, whether the receiving of such offerings by local agents amounted to business carried on through agents or not did not arise.

It has further been argued that the words of Cl (b), S. 11, are not identical with those of either S. 12, Letters Patent, or S 20, Civil P. C., and that the addition of the words "either personally or through an agent" was intended to give a more extended jurisdiction to the insolvency Court than that conferred on Courts of ordinary original civil jurisdiction and that the words "through an agent" include purchases and sales made by employing a commission agent as in the present case. I am not prepared to accede to that view.

The jurisdiction over foreigners of British Indian Courts sitting as Courts of original side jurisdiction had been left undecided in Annamalai Chetty v. Murugesa Chetty (8) notwithstanding the divergence of opinion on that point in Keshowji Damodar Jairam v. Khimji Jairam (10) and Girdhar Damodhar v. Kassigar Hiragar (11). I am of opinion that the words "either personally or through an agent" were introduced for the purpose of removing a doubt which might otherwise have existed as to the jurisdiction of the insolvency Court over foreigners carrying on business within the jurisdiction of the insolvency Court by the employment of agents or managers properly and strictly so-called.

(10) [1888] 12 Bom. 507.

Prior to the Act of 1913, the English Bankruptcy Courts exercised only a limited jurisdiction over foreigners. This jurisdiction was extended by Ss. 8 and 9 of the Act of 1913, which are now reproduced in S. 1 (2) and S. 4, Cl. (d) of the Bankruptcy Act of 1914. In S. 4, Cl. (d), inter alia, the following words appear :

"Or has carried on business in England personally or by means of an agent or manager, or (except as aforesaid) is or within the said period has been a member of a firm or partnership of persons which has carried on business in England by means of a partner or partners or an agent or manager"

These words are more explict than Cls (b) and (d), S 11, of our Act, but I think the provisions of both these statutes bear the same meaning and confer the same jurisdiction over debtors and confer jurisdiction over all debtors including foreigners, who carry on business either as individuals or as partners in a firm within the jurisdiction of the Court, provided they carry on such business either personally or through a manager or an agent properly so-called and not otherwise For these reasons I reject this application as incompetent.

Criminal Appeal No 311 of 1927, Decided on 24th February 1928, from order of Spl. 1st Cl Mag., Karachi.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 439 (6)—Appeal against conviction dismissed—When showing cause against enhancement of sentence, accused cannot show cause against conviction on same grounds.

Where an accused person appeals against his conviction and his appeal has been dismissed, it is not open to him in showing cause why his sentence should not be enhanced to show cause against his conviction except to the extent that the conviction was based on no legal evidence or was manifestly erroneous : A. I. R. 1927 Sind 39 and A. I. R. 1926 Bom. 555, Foll. [P 27 C 2]

*De Souza, A. J. C. M. Lobo—for the Crown.

I. Castellino—for Accused

Aston, A. J. C.—This is a case in which the record and proceeding have been called for suo motu and a notice issued to the accused to show cause why their sentences should not be enhanced.

It appears that the two accused Shidoo and Nagji were tried by the learned Special First Class Magistrate, Karachi, for having committed an unnatural offence on the complainant Ugaji, a boy of 13 or 14 years. They were convicted under S. 377 and sentenced to nine months' rigorous imprisonment each. They appealed to the Sessions Court. But their appeals were summarily dismissed by the learned Judicial Commissioner.

In showing cause against enhancement their pleader has pointed out that the medical evidence is at best neutral, that circumstances show that sodomy may or may not have been committed and that the learned Magistrate was of opinion that the complainant Ugaji was probably a passive willing agent as well as a habitual catamite. On the other hand, the evidence of Ugaji was corroborated by Jamnadas a boy who was present and the fact that Ugaji and Jamnadas, met the two accused and a third person who is at large and accompanied Ugaji is deposed to by Velo.

Quite apart from these facts, Rupchand, A. J. C. in Emperor v. Lukman (1) has held "Section 439 (6), Criminal P. C., does not enable an accused person, who has exercised his right of appeal and failed, to challenge the findings of facts of the appellate Court, while showing cause why his sentence should not be enhanced except in the same manner as in any ordinary revision application."

This view is also in accordance with the decision of the Bombay High Court in the case of Emperor v. Jorabhai Kisanbhai (2).

We are of opinion that grounds for setting aside the conviction of the accused in the exercise of our revisional jurisdiction are not established.

As regards the sentence, it is necessary to take into consideration the fact that Ugaji was probably a willing passive agent and a catamite. At the same time it is a fact that consent on his part is no defence though it makes the crime less serious than where an infant is kidnapped and subjected to unnatural lust.

I think that the sentence of nine months was too light. In the case of Shidoo, I would enhance the sentence to twelve months' rigorous imprisonment and in the case of Nagji who is older, to eighteen months' rigorous imprisonment.

De Souza, A. J. C.—A distinction was sought to be made by the learned pleader who argued the case for the applicants between the case of the Emperor v Lukman (1) and the present case. The ruling of Rupchand, A. J. C., that where an accused person appeals against his conviction and his appeal has been dismissed, it is not open to him in showing cause why his sentence should not be enhanced, to show cause against his conviction except to the extent that the conviction was based on no legal evidence or was manifestly erroneous, was given in a case where the appeal had been heard and decided on the merits. And Kincaid, J. C., who concurred with Rupchand, A. J. C., expressly bassed his view on the fact that in that case the conviction was supported by the findings of fact of the Magistrate and a Sessions Judge and the Magistrate had tried the case with great care and both the Magistrate and the Sessions Judge had written excellently considered judgments. In the case of Emperor v Jorabhai Kisanbhai (2) the appeal had also been heard and decided on the merits.

The point made out by the learned pleader for the applicants is that the present appeal had been summarily dismissed by the learned Judicial Commissioner and, therefore, the same weight should not be attached to the findings of fact of the two Courts as would have attached to them, if the appeal had been heard and decided on the merits. The learned pleader argued that the order summarily dismissing an appeal under the provisions of S 421, Criminal P C. does not amount to a judgment within the meaning of S 424 as a judgment under S 424 implies a trial. The learned pleader suggests that the final judgment in this case is not the judgment of the Court of appeal because there was none but the judgment of the trial Court and that there is no reason why the findings of fact of the trial Court should be treated as if they were the findings of Court of appeal.

(2) A. I. R. 1926 Bom. 555=50 Bom. 783.

I was at first impressed with this argument but on a more careful consideration, it seems to me that the order summarily dismissing the appeal virtually amounts to an order affirming the findings both of fact and of law recorded by the lower Court and there is no reason to discriminate between an order summarily dismissing the appeal under S 421, Criminal P. C and an order dismissing the appeal after hearing under S. 424, Criminal P. C. so far as its liability to attack in revision for the purposes of S. 439 Cl. (6) is concerned As pointed out by Rupchand, A. J C., it is only where there is no legal evidence at all or when there is a manifest failure of justice that the Court sitting in revision will re-open the findings of fact recorded by the two lower Courts

The learned Public Prosecutor admitted that in the present case evidence had been taken into consideration by the trial Court which was not admissible at all or which, if admissible, required corroboration. The learned pleader for the opponents, pointed out that the only corroboration of the evidence of Ugaji, the victim of sodomy, was the statement of the boy of 12 years of age and in whose statements there are several contradictions and inconsistencies. And he contended that Jumo's evidence is not sufficient corroboration of Ugaji who is after all an accomplice in the eye of the law.

It must be remembered that we are here sitting in revision and if we decide to interfere on findings of fact, it must be only because we are convinced that there had been a manifest and gross miscarriage of justice. I am unable to say that in the present case, having regard to the facts and the surrounding circumstances there has been such a miscarriage of justice It is hardly likely that a false charge of sodomy would be got up by Ugaji and that he would have complained about it to his master who immediately gave information at the police thana

In my opinion, therefore, there would be no justification for interfering with the findings of fact and for the reasons given in the judgment of my learned colleague, I would concur in enhancing the sentences as proposed

It has been argued that O. 21, R. 50, Civil P. C , does not apply to an award obtained without the intervention of the Court against a firm and made rule of the Court under the provisions of the Indian Arbitration Act.

Reliance has been placed on the following passage in the judgment of Mirza, J., in Valabhdas Narandas and Co. v. Keshavalal Himatlal (1): at p. 664 (of 29 Bom. L R)

"To entitle the applicants to the benefit of O. 21, R. 50, Civil P. C., they must show that a decree has been passed against a firm. I hold that here there is no decree passed against a firm, but there is an award purporting to be made against a firm. O. 21, R. 50, Civil P. C., is taken from the rules of the Supreme Court O. 48-A, R. 8 . . . . . The provisions of O.48-A have been held to form a Code by themselves requiring that they should be read together and each rule in the light of the rest Worcester City Banking Co v. Firbank (2) and per Lindley, L. J., in Mc Iver v. Burns (3). Under the English Law, there is no provision for the execution of an award against a firm under the provisions of O. 48-A, R. 8. Mr. Wadia has called my attention to several precedents of Chamber Judges of this Court, who have accepted awards on the file against firms and granted execution against the partners . . . . . With great respect, I am unable to follow these precedents."

From the above passage, it is abundantly clear that, prior to this case, the practice of the Bombay High Court was to entertain applications under O. 21, R 50, Civil P C, in proceedings taken by way of execution to enforce awards filed under the Indian Arbitration Act. The same pratice has prevailed in this Court for the last twenty years It would also appear that the same practice prevails in the Calcutta and the Allahabad High Courts · see the cases of Louis Dreyfus and Co. v. Purusottum Das Narain Das (4), Gladstone Wyllie and Co v Joosub Peer Mahomed and Co. (5) and Sital Prasad v. Clements Robson and Co, (6) In Louis Dreyfus' case (4) Rankin, J. (now Sir George Rankin, C J.) has said :

"It is perfectly well-known in India, just as it has been known for many years in England, that a large proportion of awards in commercial cases are made in favour of or against the firm. Business cannot be carried on unless commercial men who have constituted themselves into firms can be allowed to deal with firms, and I shall be doing something that I should be extremely sorry to do, causing much inconvenience and trouble, giving much opportunity for fraud and collusion, if I give my assent to the argument which has been put before me. Under the Indian Arbitration Act, the award is not a decree, but it is to be enforced as though it were a decree and a decree of this Court. I certainly hold—and I have held in Chambers before to-day—that the provisions which relate to the execution of a decree against a firm apply in the case of an award which has been filed, the award having been made against the firm . . . . . In this case the machinery is provided by which you can for all the purposes of execution ascertain who are the partners in the firm, and I am not going to deprive the commercial community of the system of arbitration and award by reason of a technical objection which, I think, is unfounded in principle and has got no commercial substance."

With these observations I respectfully agree, and in the absence of strong, clear and cogent reasons for holding that the long standing practice which is now well-known to the commercial community is wrong in principle and that O 21, R 50, Civil P.C., has no application whatsoever, I am not prepared to give it a go-bye. The cases of the Calcutta and the Allahabad High Courts have not been referred to or distinguished in the Bombay case, and the reasons on which the judgment in that case has proceeded do not, with all respect, appear to me to be convincing.

An award filed under the Indian Arbitration Act has the status of a decree of the Court though it is not a decree of the Court ; In re Bankruptcy Notice (7) ; and may be enforced in the same manner, and to the same extent as a decree of the Court. That being so, I can find nothing in O. 21, R. 50, Civil P. C, to suggest why its provisions should not apply to awards in the same way as the provisions of any other rule in that Order. In interpreting the language of R. 50, so far as its applicability to awards filed under the Indian Arbitration Act is concerned, no analogy can, in my opinion, be drawn from the alleged English practice. In the first place, the provisions of S. 15, Indian Arbitration Act, are unlike the corresponding provisions of S 12, English Arbitration Act, mandatory. They afford no scope to the Court to refuse to enforce an award in the same manner as a decree of the Court, except in cases when the Court either remits the award back to the arbitrator for reconsideration or sets it aside Under the English Act, it is within the competence of the Court to refuse to afford the claimant a summary remedy and to refer him to a regular suit based on the award I am not at present concerned with the rights of a claimant to enforce an award passed in his favour by a regular suit, but with his rights to enforce it by way of execution, and I can find nothing in the Act to justify the Court to refuse to enforce an award as a decree and thereby compel a party to file a suit on the award.

In the next place, the provisions relating to execution of decrees obtained against firms do not form part of O 30, Civil Procedure Code, which corresponds to O. 48-A, Rules of the Supreme Court They have been made part of O 21, which relates to execution of decrees generally, and, therefore, the argument that O 48A, Rules of the Supreme Court is self-contained, and that all the rules in that order should be read together and each rule in the light of the other loses much of its force, R. 50 is not in O. 30, but in O. 21, and there is no reason why it should not at the same time be read in the light of the other rules in O. 21 In my opinion and with all respect, these reasons are insufficient for the Court to hold that the applicability of O. 21, R. 50, Civil P. C, has not been extended to awards filed under the Indian Arbitration Act or that it is limited only to decrees passed in suits instituted under O. 30, Civil P. C. I accordingly disallow the objection and grant the application for permission to enforce the award against Akbarali with costs Criminal Revn. Appln No 89 of 1927-Decided on 23rd June 1927, for quash, ing of proceedings before City Mag., Karachi.

* Criminal P. C., S. 179—Company at Karachi employing agent to sell their goods in Punjab—Agent committing breach of trust—S. 179 would govern question regarding jurisdiction of Court—Karachi Court would have jurisdiction for word "consequence" here need not be taken in strict legal sense—Criminal P. C. S. 181.

The word "consequence" in S. 179 is to be understood in its ordinary grammatical meaning and need not be restricted to mean a consequence which is necessary ingredient of the offence. [P 31 C 2]

A company at Karachi employed an agent to sell their goods in the Punjab who committed criminal breach of trust.

Held: that with regard to jurisdiction of Court S. 179 would govern the case and Karachi Court would have jurisdiction as "consequence" in its grammatical sense had ensued at Karachi. A.I.R. 1922 Bom. 39, Foll. [P 31 C 2]

Aston, A J. C—This is an application under S 439, Criminal P C asking this Court to set aside an order of the learned City Magistrate, Karachi, deciding that he has jurisdiction to try the charge of criminal breach of trust against the applicant.

It appears that the Asiatic Petroleum Co. appointed the applicant Gobindsing as their agent at Gujarkhan in the Punjab. The agent undertook to sell kerosene oil at the prices fixed from time to time by the company and to submit from Gujarkhan a true and correct daily account He also undertook to remit the full proceeds of the sales whether realized from customers or not for each week not later than at the end of the succeeding 14 days and at the end of each calendar month to render to the company accurate and sufficient account sales in duplicate showing the full details of sales made and of the proceeds to be remitted All remittances were to be made direct from Gujarkhan to the company in Karachi

A large number of authorities have been cited to show that the Karachi Court would or would not have jurisdiction

The Crown has relied on Emperor v. Ramratan Chunilal (1), Emperor v. Laxman (2), Rumsahai v. Lala Krishnalal (3), Gunananda Dhone v. Santi Prakash (4), Queen-Empress v. O'Brien (5), Langridge v Atkins (6), Bajrangalal v. King-Emperor (7), Abdul Latiff Yusuff v. Abu Mahomed (8), Emperor v. Jamnadas Vasanji (9).

It will be seen that Emperor v Ramratan (1) draws a distinction between the words "consequence which has ensued" applied in the usual grammatical sense and the same words applied in a strictly legal sense The learned Chief Justice drew attention to the inconvenience which would result to firms which employed agents up-country if they went from place to place and misappropriated property belonging to the firm In such a case it would be difficult for the firm to establish where any property was actually received or retained by the agent or where the actual offence was committed unless the words "consequence which has ensued" were applied in the wider sense. There have been contrary rulings in different High Courts themselves notably in Allahabad and Calcutta And the argument for the contrary view to that in Emperor v. Ramratan (1), seems to be that the illustrations to S. 179 do not deal with the offences of criminal breach of trust but rather such offences as homicide or extortion. Whereas in S 181 the offence of criminal misappropriation and criminal breach of trust is specifically referred to and provision is made with regard to the Court which is to have jurisdiction to try the offences The main argument, however, of the cases which take the view opposite to that contained in Emperor v Ramratan (1), is, I think that S. 179, provides that when a person is accused of the commission of any offence by reason of anything which has been done, and of any consequence which has ensued, the Court, within whose jurisdiction any such thing has been done or any such consequence has ensued, has jurisdiction

Now, it has been urged that the person is not charged with criminal breach of trust by reason of the fact that loss has ensued at a particular place but by reason of the fact that he has done certain acts with a certain intention, the fact of loss not being an ingredient

I am of opinion, however, that this is a matter in which an over-precise application of the letter of the law would confound legal certainty and result in hardship and defeat the intention of the legislature which is that wrong-doers should be brought to justice

It is the practice of the Courts in Sind to follow the decisions of the Bombay High Court and apart from that I think the decision in (1) is founded on right principles and that it is a decision which this Court should follow

I would therefore dismiss this application for revision and return the record to the learned Magistrate for disposal according to law

Percival, J. C—I agree.

Two alternative arguments have been used by the learned Public Prosecutor, namely, that the case may fall under S 179, or under S 181 (2), Criminal P C. I should like to say that according to my view, the case falls under S 179, and that the best interpretation of the section is that which is contained in Emperor v. Ramratan (1).

In that case the learned Chief Justice said:

"The whole question seems to me to depend on whether we must give to the word 'consequence' in S 179 its ordinary grammatical meaning or whether we are bound to restrict it to meaning a consequence which is a necessary ingredient of the offence. I see no justification for holding that the ordinary meaning should not be given to the word 'consequence' in S. 179 and the argument in Queen-Empress v. O'Brien (6) seems clearly pertinent in reference to this point. For instance an agent might be given goods by his employer to sell at various places, and if he performed the trust imposed upon him he would be bound to pay the proceeds of the goods which had been sold to his employer. If he did not, and employer charged him with criminal misappropriation, it would be exceedingly difficult to prove at what place he had sold any part of the goods and misappropriated the proceeds. It seems to me that S. 179 was intended to apply to such cases so as to enable an employer to file his complaint in the Court within whose

It is to be noted that the words in S. 179 are "any consequence" not "any consequence which is a necessary ingredient of the offence."

Ghulam Rasul Khan Burgri and another—Respondents.

Misc. Appeal No 42 of 1925, Decided on 26th October 1928.

(a) Limitation Act, S. 5—Pleader's carelessness is no ground for extension.

The carelessness of the pleader is no ground for extending the period of limitation. [P 34 C 1]

(b) Civil P. C., O. 32, R. 3 (4)—Near relations parties to suit and having interests adverse to minor—Notice need not be issued against them.

When all the near relatives of the minors are parties to the suit and their interests are likely to clash with those of the minors, no notice need be issued on such relations. [P 34 C 2]

(c) Civil P. C., O. 32, R. 3 (4)—Scope.

Since the amendment in 1927 in Sind no notice to minors is essential. [P 34 C 2]

* (d) Civil P. C., S. 96 (3)—Person denying to be party to compromise can appeal—Civil P. C., O. 23, R. 3, and O. 43, R. 1 (m).

There is nothing in O 23, R 3, or in O. 43, R. 1, Cl. (m) to suggest that if the Court fails to demand satisfactory proof of the alleged compromise, a party to the suit who is deprived of his right to contest the compromise, is also deprived of his right to appeal against the order. S. 96, Cl. (3) presupposes that the party appealing has consented to the decree being passed. It does not purport to deal with a case where the aggrieved party was not a consenting party and had never been asked by the Court whether he had consented to a decree being passed or not. In such a case he does not appeal against the decree passed by consent, but attacks the very foundation on which the decree is passed. S. 96 (3) does not bar a right of appeal by a person who denies that he was a party to the alleged compromise. A. I. R. 1926 Bom. 39, Dist. [P 35 C 1]

 (e) Civil P. C., S. 96 (3)—Decree not limited to subject-matter of suit is appealable.

Where a compromise relates not only to property in dispute in the suit but also to other property, the order directing that a decree be passed in terms of the compromise not limited merely to the subject-matter of the suit, can be appealed against. [P 36 C 1]

(f) Civil P. C., O. 23, R. 3—Court failing to order the recording of compromise—Aggrieved party can still appeal.

The provisions of the law requiring the Court to order that the compromise be recorded are not a mere matter of form, but it is intended to afford an aggrieved party to appeal against the compromise and the failure of the Court to comply with its provisions cannot deprive the aggrieved party of the right of appeal expressly conferred on such aggrieved party by statute: 43 Cal. 85, Rel. on. [P 36 C 1]

 (g) Civil P. C., O. 41, R 22—Compromise sanctioned—Some defendants minors—Compromise alleged to be obtained by fraud—Major defendant appealing—Minor's remedy is not by way of cross-objection—Minor.

Where a compromise is effected between the parties to a suit in which some defendants are minors and it is obtained by fraud or under some other circumstances as to render it invalid, the remedy of the minors is not by filing cross-objections in an appeal by one of the defendants. [P 36 C 1]

(h) Appeal—Right of—Appeal from consent decree—Review also filed—Appellate Court should grant relief in appeal if party is entitled, although same can be obtained in review.

Where a person after preferring an appeal against a consent decree has also filed an application for review, the appellate Court should not refuse the person the relief by way of appeal if he is entitled to it merely because it is open to him to get the same relief by way of review. [P 36 C 1]

Rupchand Bilaram, A. J. C.—This appeal arises out of a partition suit which is said to have been compromised. The compromise petitions were presented to the Court. The first compromise petition is dated 7th May 1925 and purports to be a compromise between (a) plaintiffs, (b) defendant 3 acting on her own behalf and on behalf of the minor defendants 5 to 7 and (c) defeudant 10. The second compromise petition is dated 11th May 1925, and purports to be a compromise between the plaintiffs and defendants 1, 2 and 4 accepting the validity of the first compromise and providing for partition of property between them in certain shares and on certain conditions. The second compromise petition is signed by (a) plaintiff 1 on behalf of himself and on behalf of his minor brother plaintiff 2 and by their pleaders, (b) by the defendants 1 and 2 (c) by the pleader of defendants 3 to 7 and (d) by the pleader of the other defendants.

Both these compromises were accepted by the Court and a decree ordered to be drawn up in terms thereof.

Defendant 4 has come to us in appeal and has contended that she was not a party to the second compromise, and that her pleader had no authority from her to agree to it The guardian ad litem appointed by this Court on behalf of the minor defendants 5 to 7 has also filed cross-objections urging that the first compromise was in no way for the benefit of the minors and was one which should never have been sanctioned The following is a tabular statement showing the relationship of the chief contesting parties to the suit :

The plaintiffs filed the suit for partition of property which they alleged was possessed by their father as a co-owner with defendants 1 and 2 in certain defined shares. They joined defendants 3 and 4 to 7 as proper parties to the suit, but denied that they had any share therein, on the ground that as female members of the family they were excluded by the custom of the family from inheriting. They did not implead defendant 10 as a party to the suit but impleaded certain strangers to the family as defendants 8 and 9 as being co-owners in certain parcels of land along with the plaintiffs and defendants 1 and 2 They also did not bring into the suit the property exclusively owned and possessed by their father Rais Ghulam Mahomed at the time of his death

Defendant 10 was joined as a party a day before the compromise petitions were accepted by the Court. According to the first compromise petition it was agreed that the names of defendants 3 and 5 to 7 were to be entered in the Record-of-Rights as cosharers in such lands in which Rais Ghulam Mahomed was shown as possessing Re. 0-8-9 pies share and that as the share of defendant 3 was to be Re. 0-2-3 pies while that of each of the defendants 5 to 7 was to be Re. 0-4-2/3 pies out of the said share of Re. 0-8-9 pies, that they had no right to have their shares partitioned or to alienate them by way of gift or otherwise, than on the deaths of any one of them, her share would devolve on the plaintiffs, that on the marriage of any of the defendants 5 to 7, all that such defendant would be entitled to was to receive a money value of her share, and that none of them would have any right to share in any other property which Rais Ghulam Mahomed died possessed of, and which was not the subject-matter of the suit.

The second compromise petition awarded to defendant 4. Re 0-0-5 pies instead of Re 0-4-2/3 pies in the same property and on the same terms and conditions on which Rs. 0-4-2/3 pies share was awarded to defendants 5 to 7 It also dealt with a settlement of disputes between plaintiffs and defendants 1 and 2 inter se.

Several objections have been raised against the maintainability of the appeal and they may be dealt with in the order in which they have been urged Through the inadvertance of the legal advisers of defendant 4 the memo of appeal as originally filed did not include the name of defendant 10 as a co-respondent Her name was brought on the record after the period of limitation for filing the appeal had expired. An application has been filed asking us to condone the delay under S. 5, Limitation Act.

It is no doubt true that the pleaders of defendant 4 were misled by the plaint of which they had a copy into the belief that the parties to the suit consisted of two plaintiffs and nine defendants only. But in our opinion that is not enough. The learned pleaders had before them the certified copy of the compromise petition which clearly specified the name of Fatma, as defendant 10 and it was their duty to have ascertained whether the plaint had not been amended by the addition of Fatma as defendant. The carelessness of the pleader is no ground for extending the period of limitation. We accordingly hold that the appellant has failed to make out a sufficient cause for the nonjoinder of Fatma within the meaning of S 5, Lim. Act.

The failure of defendant 4 to join defendant 10 as a party to the appeal is, however, not fatal to its maintainability. It is open to any two parties to a suit to enter into a valid compromise between themselves. But such compromise cannot affect the rights of other persons who are parties to the suit, but are not parties to the compromise. Defendant 4's complaint is that as between herself and the plaintiffs 1 and 2 there has been no valid compromise and that she is entitled to get from them her legitimate share in the estate deft by her deceased father Rais Ghulam Mahomed.

If plaintiffs 1 and 2 have agreed to give a certain share in their father's property to any of the defendants and such defendants have agreed not to seek partition thereof from plaintiffs 1 and 2 it is open to defendant 4 to appeal against the alleged compromise as between herself and plaintiffs 1 and 2 impleading plaintiffs 1 and 2 only as parties to the appeal. It would also appear that so far as the rights of defendant 4 is concerned, it is limited to her right as the heir of her father, and if at all any persons other than plaintiffs 1 and 2 should have been joined as parties to the appeal such persons were the other heirs of Rais Ghulam Mahomed and such heirs were made parties to the appeal within the time allowed by law.

The third point urged on behalf of the contesting respondents was that the appointment of the nazir of this Court as guardian ad litem of the minor defendants 5 to 7 was irregular and contrary to the provisions of O 32, R. 3, Cl. (4), Civil P C., and that the appeal should not proceed until a proper guardian was appointed. It appears that the appellant was duly appointed, as guardian ad litem of defendants 5 to 7 in the lower Court, but at the time of the first compromise petition, defendant 3, grandmother of the minors, a lady said to be 80 years old, was substituted in her place. Through the inadvertance of the pleaders in the memo of appeal the appellant was shown as the guardian ad litem of her minor sisters, but that mistake was rectified by bringing on the record the Court of Wards as their guardian as the Court of Wards had assumed superintendence of their property and the property of the plaintiffs.

The Court of Wards declined to act as guardian of the minor defendants, their interests being in conflict with those of the minor plaintiffs. The nazir of the Court was therefore substituted as guardian of the minor defendants. It has been argued that this appointment should not have been made without an attempt having been made to appoint a near relative of the minors as guardian and without notice to the minors But it is clear that all the near relatives of the minors were parties to the suit and their interests were likely to clash with those of the minors, and no notice to the minors is essential in view of the amendment of O. 32, R. 3, Cl. (4), effected by notification No 925 of 1927 published at p. 1092 of the Sind Official Gazette of 1927.

The fourth point urged is that this appeal is incompetent in view of the provisions of S 96, Cl. (3), Civil P C., and the proper remedy open to the appellant is either by an application for review or by a suit. Reliance has been placed on the case of Gulabchand v. Ramsukh (1).

In dealing with this point, it is necessary to bear in mind the provisions of S 96, Cl. (3) and O 23, R 3, Civil P. C., read with O 43, R (1), Cl. (m). S 96, Cl. 3 provides that no appeal shall lie from a decree passed by the Court with the consent of parties.

Order 23, R. 3, Civil P C, reads as follows :

"Where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that a suit has been adjusted wholly or in part by any lawful agreement or compromise or where the defendant satisfies the plaintiff in respect of the whole or any part of the subject matter of the suit the Court shall order such agreement, compromise or satisfaction to be recorded and shall pass a decree in accordance therewith so far as it relates to the suit."

Order 43, R. 1, Cl (m) provides that an order under R 3, O 23 recording or refusing to record an agreement, compromise or satisfaction shall be appealable.

On a comparison of these provisions, it is abundantly clear that where a compromise petition is presented to the Court, it should be proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the suit has been adjusted by a lawful compromise and it is on such proof that the Court has jurisdiction to order that the compromise so far as it relates to the suit be recorded and a decree be passed in terms there of. If a party to a suit who is alleged to have entered into the compromise challenges the compromise it is prima facie open to him to appeal against the order recording it.

In my opinion there is nothing in O. 23, R 3 or in O. 43, R 1, Cl (m) to suggest that if the Court fails to demand satisfactory proof of the alleged compromise a party to the suit who is deprived of his right to contest the compromise, before the lower Court is also deprived of his rights to appeal against the order, in Courts other than High Courts, the remedy by way of review is limited to an application for review being necessarily presented to the Judge who passed the decree, and it cannot be contested with any force that the legislature intended to deprive the aggrieved party of his remedy to challenge in the same proceedings an order passed under O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C, unless the same judges who passed the decree continued in office.

Section 96, Cl. (3), pre-supposes that the party appealing has consented to the decree being passed. It does not purport to deal with a case where the aggrieved party was not a consenting party and had never been asked by the Court whether he had consented to a decree being passed or not. In such a case he does not appeal against the decree passed by consent, but attacks the very foundation on which the decree is based. Thereby he challenges the jurisdiction of the Court to pass the decree on the assumption that there was such consent. It would therefore appear that S. 96 (3) does not bar a right of appeal by a person who denies that he was a party to the alleged compromise

The facts of the case of Gulabchand v. Ramsukh (1) were peculiar. The appellant never disputed that he was a consenting party to the compromise, and the decree which followed, but pleaded inter alia that his consent was obtained from him by his pleader under threats

There is no such allegation in the present case, and that decision is therefore not on all fours with the present case.

The compromise petition in this case was signed by the plaintiff and defendants 1 and 2 and their pleaders and only by the pleader for the other parties.

The order of the Court reads as follows:

"Present plaintiffs 1 and 2 and defendants 1 and 2 and pleaders for the defendants.

Mr. Gopaldas states that he has authority to enter into this compromise on behalf of his clients.

A decree to be drawn in terms of this compromise and on the terms of that drawn between plaintiffs and defendants 3, 5, 6, 7 and 10. Parties to bear their own costs."

It has been argued on behalf of the appellant that the reference in the order to Mr Gopaldas is a mistake for Mr. Mulchand, that Mr. Gopaldas appeared for defendants 1 and 2 and that it was Mr. Mulchand who appeared for defendants 4 to 7 who stated to the Court that he had authority to compromise the suit inter alia on behalf of defendant 4, and that as he had no express authority in writing in that behalf, the compromise was of no effect as against defendant 4. In support of this argument reliance has been placed on the dictum of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sourindranath Mittra v. Heramba Nath Bandopadhya (2), that a pleader who does not hold and has not filed in the suit before the Court his client's general power-of-attorney authorizing him generally to compromise suits on behalf of his client, cannot be recognized by a Court as having any authority to compromise the suit unless he has filed in the suit his client's vakalatnama giving him authority to compromise the suit before the Court.

On the other hand it has been contended that there is no mistake in the names, that Mr Gopaldas also represented defendants 8 and 9 and that the statement refers to the consent given by Mr. Gopaldas on their behalf that the appellant had compromised the suit personally and that Mr. Mulchand had only signed the compromise petition on her behalf. But we have nothing on the record to show one way or the other whether Mr Mulchand put his signature to the compromise petition in token of his having arrived at the compromise on behalf of his client or in consequence of the compromise having been arrived at personally by his client. Under the circumstances the proof required by O 23, R 3, as a preliminary to the recording of the compromise was wanting. The order passed by the learned Judge below was therefore without jurisdiction and the appellant is entitled to an enquiry being held into the matter for the purpose of ascertaining whether she had given her consent to the compromise or not

It would also appear that the compromise related not only to property in dispute in the suit, but also to other property left by Rais Ghulam Mahomed which was not the subject-matter of the suit and in so far as the order directed that a decree be passed in terms of the compromise not limited merely to the subject-matter of the suit, it was an order which could be appealed against even on that ground

The appellant has ex majoure cautila applied for a review of the order appealed against and that application has been allowed to stand over pending the appeal We, however, see no reason why we should not grant the appellant relief by way of an appeal if she is entitled to it merely because it is open to her to get the same relief by way of review

In the end it was finally suggested that as the learned Judge had not passed an order recording the compromise no appeal could lie. But in our opinion the failure of the learned Judge to record the compromise is a strong argument for allowing the appeal. The provisions of the law requiring the Court to order that the compromise be recorded are not a mere matter of form but it is intended to afford an aggrieved party to appeal against the compromise Pabansardar v. Bhupendranath (3) and the failure of the Court to comply with its provisions cannot possibly deprive the aggrieved party of the right of appeal expressly conferred on such aggrieved party by statute

We set aside the order recording the compromise as between the plaintiff and defendant 4 and direct the Court below to take evidence whether the alleged compromise was validly made by defendant 4 herself or not, and to dispose of the second petition of compromise so far as it pertains to defendant 4 according to law. Costs to be costs in the cause

With regard to the cross-objections filed on behalf of the minor defendants, it is sufficient to observe that they do not come within the purview of O 41, R 22, Civil P. C. and are entirely misconceived. The compromise was sanctioned by the Court. It was obtained by fraud or under such other circumstances as to render it invalid; the remedy of the minors was not by filing cross-objections in the present appeal which only brings into question a separate compromise between plaintiff and defendant 4. We accordingly disallow these objections as incompetent but make no order as to costs.

Suit No 74 of 1925, Decided on 16th April 1925

Bombay Rent Act (2 of 1918 as amended by Act 3 of 1923), S. 2 (b) (2)—Premises let mainly and substantially for purpose of shop—Tenant will not be protected.

Where the real, main and substantial purpose for which certain premises were let, was the purpose of a shop and not of a dwelling house, the tenant cannot be protected. Espon's case, (1919) W. L. R 519, Rel. on. [P 37 C 2]

Kalumal Pahlumal—for Plaintiff.

Hiranand Motiram—for Defendant.

Judgment—This suit has been instituted by the plaintiff landlord for ejectment and for recovery of overdue rent The defendant is a monthly tenant. There is now no dispute between the parties as to the overdue rent A sum of Rs 26-6-0 was paid by the defendant to the plaintiff's pleaders after he was served with a notice to vacate the premises, This sum was through some mistake not given credit for in the suit. The plaintiff is prepared to do so

The relief for ejectment is based on the ground that the premises are business premises, and as such ceased to be under the protection of Bombay Rent (War) Restriction Act 2 of 1918, as amended by Bombay Act 3 of 1923 after 31st August 1924. The defendant has demurred to this plea. He contends that the premises in suit were let for being used both as business premises and a dwelling house, and that even otherwise they have been so used for over two years to the knowledge of the plaintiff, and being partly used as a shop and partly as a dwelling house, the premises are as much a dwelling house as business premises, and, therefore, come within the Act which still affords protection in respect of dwelling houses. The defendant further contends that the plaintiff having acquiesced in the use of the premises for both purposes, is estopped now from denying that it is a dwelling house. (The judgment then discussed evidence and after concluding that the premises were till recently used as a shop proceeded.) Even if it be assumed that for the last two years the premises have been used both as a shop and a dwelling house, the defendant is, in my opinion, not entitled to the protection claimed by him

Mr. Hiranand has referred to some English cases, and the recent decision of my brother Aston in Ghulamali G. Chagla v. Motoomal Vassantmal (1), which is now pending appeal

The decisions of English Courts, though entitled to great respect, can only be applied to the present case with great caution. Not only are such decisions authoritative for what was actually decided in those cases, but they are based on the English Statute containing several clauses which find no place in the Indian Statute. All those decisions refer to cases where the premises were intended to be used inter alia as dwelling houses at the time they were let. If carefully scrutinized, those decisions support the plaintiff's case and not that of the defendant. Epsom's case (2), decided on the old increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (War Restriction) Act 1915, and which probably was the cause of the introduction of S. 12, sub-S. (2) (ii) in the subsequent Act of 1920 (10 and 11 Geo 5 C. 17) proceeds on the assumption that the premises were being used as a dwelling house in accordance with the terms of the tenancy. This is clear from the following observations of Banks, L. J., at p. 171

"Then is this hotel a dwelling house? The Act contains no definition of a dwelling house . . . . . Were these premises let as a dwelling house? If an agreement were to let premises as a barn, the tenant even though he lived there could not be heard to say they were let as a dwelling house. But these premises were let for occupation. The defendants and their family and servants have resided continually there, and their residence is in accordance with the agreement of tenancy. The house was dwelt in by the defendants and let to them for that purpose. It is in the fullest sense a dwelling house and none the less so, because it is also a public house."

The defendant has not proved that the premises were let for this double purpose, and his case does not, therefore, come within the purview of Epsom's case (1).

The English Act of 1920 conferred certain privileges and gave protection to tenants of a dwelling house, and the proviso to S. 12, Cl. (2) expressly provided that a tenant of a dwelling house was none the less entitled to that protection because part of the house was used for business purposes. This Act, by S. 13, further gave privileges and protection, but on a restricted scale to tenants of business premises And the question which is the subject-matter of decision in some of the later English rulings referred to at the Bar is whether the letting where it was for both purposes, was a substantial letting for residential purposes or for business purposes. If the former, it came within the purview of S. 12, sub-S. 2 (ii) of the Act, and if the latter, it constituted business premises under S. 13 of the Act. Waller v. Thomas (3); Colls v. Parnham (4); Duke of Richmond v. Dewar (5) and Grieg v Francis (6). As pointed out by Swift, J., in Grieg's case (6), it has to be determined as a question of fact what was the real, main and substantial purpose of the premises

The proviso to S 12, Cl. (2) finds no place in the Indian Statute, but assuming that the dicta in the English decisions are a safe guide in finding whether particular premises let for occupation as a shop and as residence as a dwelling house or business premises, the question which a Court must answer in each case is what was the real, main and substantial purpose for which they were let, and in the present case, that question can only be answered in one way and that is that they were let for purposes of a shop. I would prefer not to discuss the decision of Aston, A. J. C., as it is now pending appeal. Each case depends on its own facts. I would only observe that if this decision purports to lay down that because a shopkeeper sleeps in his shop or has been so doing for a number of years, the shop thereby becomes a dwelling house within the meaning of the Act, I would respectfully demur to it The plea of estoppel by acquiescence raised by the defendant has no substance in it Prior to 31st August 1924, the plaintiff could not eject the defendant. He has given him notice in December 1924. He is not a resident of this place, and probably did not know to what use the premises were being put if at all they were used as alleged. The defendant has in no way been prejudiced by the alleged acquiescence There can be no estoppel on a question of law, whether this dual use by the defendant makes the tenement a dwelling house under the Act or not The defendant has had four months already to find out another shop. He is not entitled to further time to give up possession. I decree immediate ejectment with costs. Revn. Appln No 143 of 1925, Decided on 26th October 1928

There is nothing in O. 47 to suggest that the application for review must necessarily be made within the same period which is allowed to a party for the alternative remedy by way of appeal or application for restoration of a suit which has been dismissed for default of appearance . 2 *C. The discretionary powers of revision vested in the High Court by S. 115 are not in any way controlled by the provisions of O. 47 ; such powers are intended to apply even to orders disallowing a review application : 26 All. 572, Diss. from. ; 29 All. 468 and 31 All. 610, Rel. on. [P 39 C 2]

 (c) Civil P. C., O. 47—Application for adjournment by plaintiff's pleader refused —Order passed on application, in presence of pleaders in dismissing suit and another order on plaint dismissing suit ex parte—Case is fit one for review.

On the day of hearing, plaintiff's pleader applied for adjournment as only one witness out of six was present. The application was heard in the presence of the pleaders of the parties and was dismissed. The order passed thereon was one dismissing the suit. A separate order was written on the plaint dismissing the suit ex parte for plaintiff's default. Plaintiff filed an application for review.

Held : that although the Court had jurisdiction to refuse an adjournment, it had no jurisdiction to dismiss the suit in the presence of the pleader without giving the pleader an opportunity of either arguing the case or of examining the witness who was present and asking for warrants to issue against the absent witnesses. Having dismissed the suit in the presence of the pleaders for the plaintiff, the Court had no jurisdiction to pass a second order of dismissal for default of appearance by the plaintiff after the plaintiff's pleader had left the Court. It was, therefore, a fit case for granting an application for review. [P 39 C 1]

Mahomedbux and Chandumal — for Defendants 1 to 5.

Judgment —The facts of this case are somewhat peculiar.

It appears that on 9th September 1924, the plaintiffs' pleader put an application to the Court asking that the hearing of the suit which was fixed for that day be postponed on the ground that out of six witnesses who had received bhatta for that day only one was present. The diary of the case shows that the application was heard in the presence of the pleaders of the parties and was dismissed. But on looking to the application itself and the order passed thereon, we find that the order states as follows :

" Messrs. Mahomedbux for defendant 1 and Chandumal for defendants 2, 3, 4 and 5 objects to this application and states that the same is malafide. The plaintiff who belongs to Naushahro Feroze has purposely remained absent as the witnesses are not to support. Two witnesses Hiranand and brother of witness Valarmal are present.

I accordingly dismiss the suit with costs as against defendant 1 only. Defendants 2 to 5 to bear their own costs."

It also appears that on the same day the learned Judge passed an order which is written on the plaint itself, and which reads as follows :

" Plaintiff absent. Mr. Mahomed Bux for defendant 1 and Mr. Chandumal for defendants 2 to 5 present. Suit dismissed with cost against defendant 1 only. Suit dismissed against defendants 2 to 5 who to bear their own costs."

On 8th December 1925 an application was filed before the same Judge for review of the order made by him on the application for adjournment No mention appears to have been made in that application for review of the subsequent order made on the plaint. The learned Judge admitted the application for review and ordered notice to issue to the defendants. That application came up for hearing before his successor in office who held that as it was discretionary with the Judge to grant or refuse an adjournment he was not competent to grant the application for review though he expressed it as his opinion that his predecessor should not have dismissed the suit without affording in the first instance an opportunity to the plaintiff's pleader of examining the only witness who was present Now there can be no doubt that the learned Judge below failed to consider the effect of each order separately, with the result that he came to an erroneous conclusion, that he had no power to grant the review application. The first order passed by the trial Judge was passed in presence of the parties, or their pleaders This is clear from the diary of the case. Though the learned Judge had jurisdiction to refuse an adjournment, he had no jurisdiction to dismiss the suit in the presence of the pleader without giving the pleader an opportunity of either arguing the case or of examining the witness who was present and asking for warrants to issue against the absent witnesses

The second order which purports to have been passed on the same day was equally without jurisdiction The learned Judge, having dismissed the suit in the presence of the pleaders for the plaintiff, had no jurisdiction to pass a second order of dismissal for default of appearance by the plaintiff after the plaintiff's pleader had left the Court. It was, therefore, a fit case for granting an application for review.

The learned pleader for the opponents has raised two technical objections before us But there is no substance in either of them. In the first place he has contended that as it was open to the plaintiff to apply for restoration of the suit or to appeal against the order of dismissal within 30 days of the order, an application for review after the expiry of that period was incompetent. There is nothing in O 47, Civil P. C, to suggest that the application for review must necessarily be made within the same period which is allowed to a party for the alternative remedy by way of appeal or application for restoration of a suit which has been dismissed for default of appearance. The case of Koilosh Mondol v. Naba Dwip (1) referred to by the learned pleader which supports that view was distinguished by the same High Court three years later in the case of Raj Narain Purkait v. Ananga Mohan (2). In that case the plaintiff's suit had been dismissed for default and he had failed to apply for its restoration within the period allowed by law, and the plea of limitation was not allowed to prevail.

The second point taken by him is that an order rejecting an application for review is not open to revision by the High Court. He has referred us to the case of Ramlal v Ratanlal (3) where it was said that it was the intention of the legislature that the Court which originally heard a case should be the Court to decide whether an application to review its former judgment should or should not be granted and when the Court rejects such an application its decision should not be open either to appeal or to revision by a higher Court. But this dictum so far as it refers to the power of the High Court to interfere in revision has not been accepted as sound by the same High Court in the cases of J. G. Willis v. Jawad Husain (4) and Akbar Khan v. Mahomed Ali Khan (5).

We can find nothing in the Code to suggest that the discretionary powers of revision vested in the High Court by S 115, are in any way controlled by the provisions of O 47, Civil P C, or that such powers are not intended to apply to orders disallowing a review application. Whether the Court will exercise its discretion in any particular case or not is quite another matter.

We think that this is a fit case for the exercise of our powers and we accordingly allow this application and set aside both the orders of dismissal and direct that the Subordinate Judge do take back the case on his file and dispose of it according to law.

Costs to be costs in the cause.

Misc. Civil Appeal No. 52 of 1925, Decided on 20th July 1928, from an order of Asst. Judge, Hyderabad (Sind).

Bombay Regulation 2 of 1827, S. 54 — S. 54 still applies to Sind — Pleader ill and notifying his inability—Party is entitled to reasonable adjournment for engaging another pleader.

The provisions of S. 54 are still applicable to Sind. Where therefore the pleader for the appellant has notified to the Court his inability to proceed with the appeal on account of his illness, the appellant is entitled to an adjournment for a reasonable time to enable him to engage another pleader. [P 40 C 2]

Kimatrai Bhojraj—for Appellants.
Tahilram Maniram—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal against an order passed by the learned Assistant Judge, Hyderabad, refusing to set aside the order passed by him dismissing the appeal filed by the appellants.

It appears that Mr. Santdas, Pleader for the appellants, was ill and on 9th January 1925, one day before the date fixed for the hearing, he put in a written application asking for an adjournment. On that application the learned Judge passed the following order:

"This is an old appeal of 1919, and a stay of execution has been obtained by the appellant against the respondents. Mr. Santdas has other partners who could attend to this appeal. If this cannot be proceeded with tomorrow, for any reason, cause may be shown why the stay order may not be discharged."

On 10th January 1925, Mr. Chuharmal, a junior working with Mr. Santdas, put in a formal appearance for the purpose of repeating the application for adjournment. The learned Judge again refused to adjourn the case, but allowed Mr. Chuharmal two hours' time to prepare the brief, and later on, in the day, when Mr. Chuharmal and the appellant absented themselves from Court, the learned Judge passed an order dismissing the appeal for default, and subsequently refused to restore it to the file.

It appears that the attention of the learned Judge was not drawn to the provisions of S. 54, Bombay Regn 2 of 1827 which are still applicable to this province. By applying for an adjournment on 9th January, Mr. Santdas had notified to the Court his inability to proceed with the appeal within the meaning of that section. It would, therefore, appear that the appellant was entitled to an adjournment for a reasonable time to enable him to engage another pleader. No doubt, it is true that in certain cases, an adjournment of 24 hours to transfer the brief is ample, and that if a pleader knows a day before that he will not be able to attend to the case on account of ill-health, he should endeavour to transfer his brief. The circumstances of this case were, however, peculiar. It was a heavy appeal which required more time for preparation and it was not certain if it would be ripe for hearing The respondent had died pending the appeal. His legal representatives who had been brought on the record were minors and represented by their mother, and though she had been served with the usual notice, the Court had not passed an order appointing her a guardian ad litem of the minors nor had any appearance been put in, on her behalf up to that day. Though the appeal was an old one, it was made ripe only on 10th January, and there was every chance of its being postponed It would also appear that the vakalatnama filed on behalf of the appellants was in favour of Mr. Santdas only, and that, therefore, there was no obligation either on Mr. Chuharmal to conduct the appeal or the appellant to engage him for the appeal in lieu of his senior partner. We think that this was a case in which greater indulgence might have been shown to the appellant.

We accordingly allow this appeal, and order the learned Judge of the first appellate Court to take back the appeal on his file and dispose of it according to law.

With regard to costs, we think, it is a fit case in which each party should bear his own costs of this appeal.

Tahilram Manıram—for Plaintiffs.

Suganlal H Jeswani—for Defendants.

Judgment.—This is a suit filed by the plaintiff to recover Rs. 1,154-5-0 from the defendant on an account alleged to have commenced on 8th June 1920, and to have terminated on 9th January 1923.

Plaintiffs' case is that cloth used to be supplied to the defendant, that the account used to be settled from time to time and the balance due treated as a dusti loan. He alleges that Rs. 1,154-5-0 is due on the account and he claims interest from date of suit.

Defendants deny that there were any dusti loans. They admit that a cloth account commenced on 8th June 1920, but say it terminated before May 1921, for plaintiff applied to be adjudicated insolvent in May 1921, and, thereafter defendant merely made payments in discharge of his indebtedness. Defendants' main defence is that they owe nothing to the plaintiffs, a sum of Rs. 949-11-6 having been paid to the Official Receiver in full settlement on 9th January 1923.

Mr. Pinto who was the Official Receiver at the time denied that the Rs. 949-11-6 was paid in full settlement, but he admitted that he did not remember the circumstances and that his only ground for denying it, was, that in a credit note sent by him to the Nazir the words "in full settlement" did not appear His clerk writes the credit note and he signs it. It is then sent with the debtor to the Nazir's office. The Nazir enters the amount in his books, endorses the credit note and returns it to the Official Receiver. The Nazir then gives a receipt to the debtor and keeps a counterfoil Against the solitary fact that the words "in full settlement" were not written in the receipt there is the direct oral evidence of Udhavdas, the manager of the defendants' firm supported by the entry Ex. 35 in his cash book, viz.,

"Rupees 949-11-6 debited to Bhai Lalchand-Gobindram cash paid in full settlement in the Court" supported by the evidence of Dwarkadas who was employed by the Official Receiver on commission to recover outstandings and who says this amount was paid to the Official Receiver in full settlement. Defendants' story is further supported by the evidence of Tulsidas who was in the employ of the defendants' firm and who states that the Official Receiver told Lilaram he was accepting the amount in full settlement. If further support were needed it is to be found in the plaintiff's own book. For the latter contains an entry with the word Chucktoo afterwards erased. Rs. 949-11-6 credited to Bhai Tejbhandas-Jagannath on 9th January 1923, "Chucktoo" The word "Chucktoo" "means settled." Plaintiff says his deceased brother erased "Chucktoo" which had been written by Ridharai It is also in evidence that no demand was made by the Official Receiver on defendants' firm and no suit filed between 9th January 1923, the date of the alleged payment in full settlement and 15th February 1924, the date when the present suit was filed.

In addition to this, the evidence shows that one Lilaram kept books under the orders of the Official Receiver and recorded settlements After the adjudication order was annulled books were returned to the plaintiff The Official Receiver enquired from the plaintiff whether he had received all the books The reply was in the affirmative. Shortly afterwards the plaintiff alleged that he had not received one of the books. The only explanation which plaintiff was able to give of his previous answer to the Official Receiver was that he relied on to Mehtas giving the books to him When Mr. Suganlal on 7th July 1924, stated to the Court he wanted inspection of the khata prepared under the orders of the Official Receiver and also of the cash book, Mr Rewachand for the plaintiff replied that no such books had been prepared under the orders of the Official Receiver and that there were no such books in existence. At a later hearing plaintiff resiled from the position taken up on 7th July, and alleged that the books had been prepared but that they had not been handed over to plaintiff It is, in my opinion, impossible to believe the plaintiff's contradictory explanations which appear to me anything but bona fide I disbelieve the allegation that the books were not returned to plaintiff The Court is entitled to draw the presumption that if plaintiff had produced the ledger it would not have supported the plaintiff's case : see Jag Prasad Rai v. Singari (1), Murugesam Pillai v. Gnana Sambanda Pandara Sannadhi (2) and Debendra Narayan Singh v. Narendra Narayan Singh (3). At the last minute before defendant closed his case plaintiff's pleader made a strenuous demand that defendant should examine Lilaram as a witness alleging he was present in Court and threatening to make a point in argument of his omission to examine Lilaram if he failed to do so. It appears to me that if plaintiff was so anxious that Lilaram should be examined he should have examined himself.

With regard to the power of the Official Receiver to settle the claim, without sanction of the Court, plaintiff admits that some amount was due to the defendant for brokerage and that in his claim before the Official Receiver he had not deducted the amount due The evidence further shows, that there had been another account before the account in suit and the defendants' firm had been allowed brokerage and mithai in the account. The receipt of Rs. 949-11-6 in full settlement does not appear to me to have been regarded by the Official Receiver as a compromise requiring sanction within the meaning of S 59 (1), Provincial Insolvency Act. Mr. Pinto himself admitted that in cases where brokerage and mithai were due and had not been allowed for in the schedule he would accept the smaller sum in settlement than that claimed in the schedule without reference to the Court. Apart from this, as Rankin, J., pointed out in a case referred to in Laduram-Nathmull v. Nandalal Karuri (4), the Official Receiver is the person in whom is vested the property of the bankrupt, by law, the provisions regarding leave of the Court as under the English Act are administrative provisions only · see Lee v. Sangster (5), Leeming v. Murray (6) and In re Branson, Ex parte Trustee (7). The same principle is also applicable to liquidators of companies · see Cycle Makers' Co-operative Supply Co. v. Sinns (8) an English decision, no doubt, but the provisions of S. 179, Companies Act, are similar to those of S. 151 of the English Act and to S. 59, Provincial Insolvency Act In that case it was held that a liquidator for his own protection may take the sanction of the Court but when he took the risk, the compromise was binding until set aside by the Court see, too, Rup Ram v. Fazal Din (9) a case under the Indian Companies Act where it is held by Shadi Lal, J., that leave is a "domestic" matter and that a Court dealing with the suit is not affected by it

In view of my finding on this issue my finding on the other issues is unnecessary but in case my finding on issue 3 is wrong my finding on the other issues is as follows.

With regard to issue 1 the evidence of plaintiff with regard to the hand loans is supported by documentary evidence, viz., Exs. 10 to 16, inclusive which are admittedly genuine My finding on this issue is in the affirmative.

With regard to issue 2 plaintiff and defendant 2 agree that the account in suit commenced on 8th January 1920. Since plaintiff applied to be adjudicated insolvent in 1921, the account, in my opinion was terminated on his adjudication in that year, the exact date of which is not disclosed. Thereafter, defendants merely made certain payments in discharge of their indebtedness to the insolvent.

In view of the evidence given by the defendant and the admission of the plaintiff my finding on issue 4 is in the affirmative.

With regard to the question of interest the evidence of plaintiff supported by that of Ganshamdas-Dialmal shows, in my opinion, that interest is payable. No rate of interest is shown in the plaint. The Court, however, can take judicial cognizance of the fact that 6 per. cent. is the lowest commercial rate of interest. As no account has been put in, however, no specific amount of interest is shown to be due. My finding on issue 6 is that plaintiff would be entitled to charge interest at 6 per cent but no specific sum is proved to be due as interest.

With regard to issue 5 the account not having been proved the defendants' liability for the items referred to in this issue is not established. My finding accordingly is in the negative.

My finding on issue 7 for the reasons mentioned with regard to issue 3 and the other issues is nil.

I dismiss the suit with costs.

Bansidhar Mangatrai—Plaintiffs

v.

Dinanath and Co.—Defendants

Original Civil Suit No. 213 of 1927, Decided on 4th April 1928.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, Sch. 2 Art 15—Suit for money due on award is cognizable by Small Cause Court—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, S. 23, and Sch. 2, Art. 24.

A suit for recovery of money due on an award is not a suit for the specific performance of a contract. (A I R. 1924 Mad 485, 28 Bom. 1; A. I. R. 1921 Bom. 399 and A. I. R. 1926 Rang. 198, Foll.) Nor is such a suit one for contesting an award, though incidentally the validity of the award may have to be considered. (A. I. R. 1926 Rang. 198; 42 All. 169 and 6 S. L. R. 85, Foll.). Such a suit is maintainable in the Court of Small Causes. [P 43, C 2]

Tahilram Maniram—for Plaintiffs

Kodumal Lekhraj—for Defendants.

Judgment.—This is a suit to recover Rs 268-13-6 said to be due to the plaintiffs under an award passed under the Indian Arbitration Act 9 of 1899. A preliminary objection was raised by the learned pleader for the defendants that the Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit and that the proper Court in which the suit should be filed is the Court of Small Causes.

Mr. Tahilram on behalf of the plaintiffs contends that the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes to entertain the present suit is barred on various grounds In the first place, he argued that this was in essence a suit for specific performance of the contract, inasmuch as the agreement to refer implied an agreement to abide by the award and therefore, a suit to enforce the award was virtually a suit for specific performance of the implied agreement. This point has been considered in a series of authorities of which the latest is a decision of the High Court of Madras in the case of Thirumurthy Chetty v Ponnan Chetty (1) where the learned Judge dissenting from the view that a suit for enforcement of an award is in essence a suit for specific performance of a contract, remarked that a suit for the recovery of amount due under an award can in no sense be treated as a suit to enforce a contract. To the same effect are the decisions of the Bombay High Court in Fardunji v. Jamsedji (2) where it was held that a suit on an award to recover a certain sum of money allowed by the arbitrator is not a suit for specific performance of the award but a suit for the recovery of the money and for relief incidental thereto. This decision was followed by the same High Court in Erachshaw Dosabhai v Bai Dinbai (3). In fact, as pointed out by the Rangoon High Court in the case of Maung Ni v Maung Aung Ba (4), the payment of money is not regarded as specific relief under the Specific Relief Act: vide the provisions of S 21 (a) and S. 12 of that Act, the relief provided in that Act being relief in specie that is the performance of a specific act of the delivery of particular articles and not the payment of money unless, of course, the contract is for the delivery of particular coins.

It, therefore, seems to me on principle as well as authority impossible to maintain that a suit for recovery of money due on an award is a suit for specific performance of a contract The next contention urged by Mr. Tahilram is that the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court is ousted by Art. 24 of Sch 2 and S 23, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act 9 of 1887.

(1) A. I. R. 1924 Mad. 485.
(2) [1904] 28 Bom. 1 = 5 Bom. L. R. 705.
(3) A. I. R. 1921 Bom. 399 = 45 Bom, 318.
(4) A. I. R. 1926 Rang. 198 = 4 Rang. 227.

Art. 24, of Sch. 2, bars a suit to contest award Mr Tahilram's argument is that the present suit which though in terms is a suit to enforce the award is bound to raise a question as to the validity of the award and, therefore, it is virtually a suit to contest an award in a more innocent guise.

Alternatively Mr. Tahilram argued that the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes is barred under S 23, Provincial Small Cause Court Act, inasmuch as the plaintiffs' claim depends upon the proof of the validity of the award, a matter which the Court of Small Causes cannot finally determine since under the Indian Arbitration Act the validity of the award has to be determined exclusively by the Judicial Commissioner's Court.

Turning to the first branch of the alternative, the consensus of authorities of all the High Courts which have been reviewed in the Rangoon case of Maung Ni v Maung Aung Ba (4), above cited, is stated in the words of the learned Judge who decided the case of Mizaji Lal v Partab Kuar (5) in the following words :

> " It is argued that the suit was barred by the provisions of Art. 24 under which a suit to contest an award is not triable by a Court of Small Causes. The answer to this argument is that the present suit was not a suit to contest an award. On the contrary it was a suit to enforce an award by asking for delivery of the money which was payable under the award."

No doubt as pointed out by the learned Judges it may seem to be anomalous or even illogical that a Small Causes Court should be debarred from entertaining a suit to contest an award but should not be debarred from entertaining a suit to enforce an award in which the award may be contested. The anomaly, if any, said the learned Judges, is the concern not of the Courts but of the legislature

The same view was taken by a Bench of this Court in the case of Chimandas Mulchand v Manghoomal Hemraj (6). It was a suit filed in the Court of Small Causes to recover a sum of money due on an award. The defendant sought to impugn the validity of the award but the learned Judge of the Court of Small Causes declined to hear evidence on this defence as he thought it was one that could only be raised in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. The Judge apparently had in mind Art 24, Sch 2, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, under which his Court had no jurisdiction to entertain a suit to contest an award. But this Court pointed out that this was not a suit to contest an award and the Judge had jurisdiction to adjudicate on the validity of the award when the question arose incidentally in a suit that was within his cognizance The same case furnishes an answer to the argument of Mr. Tahilram which is based on S. 23, Small Cause Courts Act. It is there observed by the learned Judges following the decisions in Damodar Gopal v Chintaman Balakrishna (7), Narayan Bhaskar v. Balaji Bapuji (8), Kesrisang Banesang v Naransang Manabhai (9) that Small Causes Court has jurisdiction to decide questions of title that arise incidentally.

For these reasons, I would hold that the proper Court to entertain this suit is the Court of Small Causes, Karachi. I accordingly direct that the plaint be returned to the plaintiffs for presentation to the proper Court

(a) Civil P. C., O. 34, R. 6—An award decree authorizing mortgagee to recover balance after sale from mortgagor's person is not invalid.

It is permissible for a Court in a mortgage suit while passing a decree to direct that the mortgagee shall recover personally any deficit which may be found due after the mortgaged property is sold and, therefore, an award decree containing such an order is valid . *A. E V. Costellino—for Decree-holders

Kodumal Lekhraj — for Judgment-debtors

Judgment.—The dispute between the plaintiffs and the defendants in this suit, in which the plaintiffs sued for a sum of Rs. 55,620-12-3 or sale of the mortgaged property, and a personal decree if necessary, against the defendants in case of a deficit, was referred to arbitration and an award was passed Thereafter on 8th March 1926, the Court passed an award decree, in which the decree-holders were authorized to recover the balance remaining due to them from the person or other property of the defendants in case the net proceeds of the sale were found insufficient to pay the amount due

The property was sold some time prior to August 1928 In August 1928 the decree-holder applied for attachment and sale of the properties belonging to the defendants Subsequently on 7th December 1928 on the application of the decree-holder an order was passed granting the decree-holder a personal decree against the judgment-debtors

Mr. Kodoomal (for the defendants) contends that the rights, if any, of the plaintiffs under the award decree were abandoned that the decree-holder is in any event, estopped from asserting these rights and since the personal decree under O. 34, R. 6 was not granted until 7th December 1928, after the present application was filed, the application is incompetent.

There appears to have been some doubt as to whether a Court in passing a decree could make an order that the deficit if any, was to be recovered from the judgment-debtors until such deficit was actually ascertained. In Keshav Manja v. Govind Naga (1), the Bombay High Court ruled that the proper form for a Court to pass was an order that the decree-holder should have liberty to apply for a personal decree Their Lordships of the Privy Council, however, in Jeuna Bahu v. Parmeshwar Narayan (2), have dissented from this view It is now permissible for a Court to direct that a a decree-holder shall recover any deficit which may be found due after the mortgaged property is sold In the circumstances there is nothing invalid in the form of the award decree, and this order that the decree-holder should recover the deficit was an order which could be executed, since the deficit had been ascertained by the sale of the property This being so there was nothing invalid or incompetent in the application which was made

As regards the contention that the rights of the plaintiffs were abandoned no authority has been brought to my notice that the rights under a valid decree can be abandoned by presenting another application I think the correct view is that the decree-holder ex majori cautilla applied for a personal decree under O. 34, R 6 also and that his rights under the award decree remain in existence As regards the contention that the decree-holder is estopped, it is clear that the present application was pending when the personal decree was passed on 7th December 1928. I am of the opinion that no estoppel has been established In the circumstances the attachment is confirmed with costs

Misc Appeal No 39 of 1927, Decided on 24th October 1928, from order of Asst. Judge, Sukkur.

 (a) Civil P. C., S. 45 — Attachment before judgment—Property in Dutch territory—Mandate, issued to British Consul there, cannot be maintained.

An order of attachment before judgment issued by British Indian Court against the partnership property lying in Dutch territory is indubitably inconsistent with the supremacy of the Dutch Government and the mandate issued to the British Consul therein cannot be maintained. [P 45 C 2, P 46 C 1]

 (b) Civil P. C., S. 45—Scope.

The Courts contemplated by S. 45 are Courts in the Native Indian States in alliance with the British Government. [P 46 C 1]

Judgment.—In this suit the learned Assistant Judge, Sukkur, has issued an order of attachment before judgment against the partnership property lying at Soorbaya and has further ordered that a letter of request be sent to the British Consul of that place to take possession thereof

This order violates one of the fundamental principles of international jurisprudence and is without jurisdiction.

It is well settled that British Courts have no jurisdiction over matter which cannot be rendered effective or give effect to rights which cannot be enforced without interfering with the authority of a foreign Sovereign or the doing of acts inconsistent with his supremacy: Dicey on Conflict of Laws pp 39 and 42.

The enforcement of the order of attachment of property in Dutch Territory is indubitably inconsistent with the supremacy of the Dutch Government and the mandate issued by the learned Judge below to the British Consul cannot possibly be maintained.

It is hardly necessary for us to add that there is no provision in the Code of Civil Procedure to warrant the issue of such an order. S. 45, Civil P. C which empowers the transfer of decrees though not the transfer of orders of attachment before judgment is limited in its scope It empowers transfer only to those Courts which are established by the Governor-General-in-Council in the territories of any foreign Prince or State to which the Governor-General-in-Council has by notification in the Gazette of India declared that section applicable The Courts contemplated by this section are Courts in the Native Indian States in alliance with the British Government.

We accordingly set aside the order appealed against and allow the appeal with costs.

Balkishendas H Hulla—for Plaintiffs.

Kodumal Lekhraj—for Defendants

Judgment.—Defendant 3 was absent at a hearing on 10th February 1928 and the Court passed an order, that the case would proceed against him ex parte under O 9, R 6

It is now contended, on his behalf, that notwithstanding his previous absence, and the order passed by the Court, he is entitled to appear and defend the suit, at any time before judgment, as of right, without assigning good cause, and without obtaining leave

The uniform practice in these Courts, of which I believe I can take judicial cognizance, has been that where the Court passed an order, that it would proceed ex parte under O 9, R 6, Civil P C. The defendant, if he subsequently wished to appear and defend the suit on an adjourned date would make an application under O 9, R 7.

My brother Tyebji, however, in a case reported in Kala Gella v. Shivji (1), was of opinion, that the contention, that a Court was not only empowered, under O 9, R 6, to proceed ex parte, when the defendant is actually not in Court, but to order that the proceedings should thenceforward be ex parte was "opposed to a fundamental principle, on which our Courts purport to proceed, viz, that no man is to be judged, without an opportunity being given to him of being heard."

The principle that no man should be condemned without an opportunity of being heard is no doubt fundamental. "The laws of God and man" as Fortescue, J., observed in Dr Bantley's case, R. V. Chancellor & Co of Cambride (2), referred to in Broom's Legal Maxims Edn. 3, p 109 "both give the party an opportunity to make his defence, if he has any" But it is a well-known principle, that if rights are not availed of, at the proper time, they may be lost.

Under the rules of the Supreme Court in England, if a defendant or defendants make default in delivering a defence within the time allowed, and the plaintiff's claim is for pecuniary damages only or for detention of goods with or without damages the plaintiff may under O. 27,

(1) A. I. R. 1926 Sind. 181.
(2) 1 Str. 557.

R. 5, enter an interlocutory judgment forthwith, against the defaulting defendant or defendants and then proceed with his action against the other defendants

This is an example of rights being lost by a defendant owing to his default in exercising them at the proper time No fundamental principle of justice has been infringed for defendant could have exercised his right of making a defence had he chosen to do so at the proper time, but he made default.

Similarly, if a party neglects to cross-examine a witness at the proper time, he cannot, as of right, and without the leave of the Court, recall him for cross-examination

In India, if a plaintiff appears and the defendant does not appear, when the suit is called on for hearing, the Court may, in certain circumstances proceed ex parte.

Three conditions only are laid down in O. 9, R 6.

1 The plaintiff must appear, when the suit is called on for hearing.

2 There must be a default on the part of the defendant to appear when the suit is called on for hearing, and,

3. The summons must have been duly served.

Under the rules of the Supreme Court in England provision is made for the case of a defendant, who appears after the time mentioned in the writ and before judgment.

Order 12, R 22, is as follows:

"A defendant may appear at any time before judgment. If he appear at any time after the time limited by the writ for appearance, he shall not, unless the Court or a Judge shall otherwise order, be entitled to any further time for delivering his defence, or for any other purpose, than if he had appeared according to the writ."

This provision has not been embodied in the Civil Procedure Code in India.

Order 9, R. 7, of that Code is as follows.

"Where the Court has adjourned the hearing of the suit ex parte, and the defendant, at or before such hearing, appears and assigns good cause for his previous non-appearance, he may, upon such terms as the Court directs as to costs or otherwise be heard in answer to the suit as if he had appeared on the day fixed for his appearance."

A comparison of the two rules, above set forth, shows that the defendant, under O. 9, R, 7, on showing "good cause" is permitted to defend, as if he had appeared on the date, when the case was called on for hearing, the defendant under O. 12, R 22 of the rules of the Supreme Court in England is permitted to defend but entitled to no further time for making his defence, or any other purpose without the leave of the Court, than if he had appeared, at the time mentioned in the writ. At first sight the scope of the defence would appear to be the same and restricted to the same limits But the expression "upon such terms as the Court directs as to costs or otherwise" in O 9 R 7 seems to indicate an intention that a wider latitude was to be given to a defendant who showed "good cause" under O 9. R 7 than would be enjoyed by a defendant who simply availed himself of his right to appear under O. 12, R 22 And a defendant, who succeeds in establishing "good cause," under O 9, R 7, has been allowed considerable freedom, in these Courts, in making his defence

A ruling of the High Court of Calcutta in Satyendra Nath v. Narendra Nath (3), is relied on by the defendant, but in that case the plaintiff was absent on the date when the case was called on for hearing, though an application was made by his pleader for a postponement for the purpose of calling evidence The case did not in the opinion of the Court fall within O 9, R. 6, in fact the suit might in the opinion of the Court have been dismissed under O 9, R. 3

In Mannu v. Tulsi (4) it was held by a Judge of the Allahabad High Court that an order that proceedings should be taken ex parte against a defendant for default of appearance did not preclude him from appearing at an adjourned date and joining in an agreement to refer the suit to arbitration and that it was not necessary for him to have the ex parte order set aside

In Bhagwat Prasad v Shaikh Ahmad (5) a Bench of which the same Judge was a member gave a similar decision but no reason was given in either of these cases beyond the fact that no ex-parte decree had been passed. Wallace, J , in Appasamy Aiyar, In re (6) observed, that there was a paucity of authority on the point He was of opinion, however, that it was a cardinal principle to be observed in trials by a Court that a party has

(3) A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 805.
(4) A. I. R. 1922 All. 33.
(5) A. I. R. 1922 All. 110.
(6) A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 1122.

"a right to appear and plead his cause on all occasions, when that cause comes on for hearing" and the object of O. 9, R 7 is to enable a party who wishes to be relegated back to the position, which he would have been in, if he had appeared at a previous hearing, at which he was absent and who wishes the proceedings to be taken over again in his presence, so that he may regain the opportunities of cross-examination &c., which he lost by his absence

This decision was followed in Pattanna v. Neeli Chetty-Ramiah Chetty (7)

I agree with my brother Tyabji and with Wallace, J., that a defendant who shows 'good cause" under O. 9, R. 7 and complies with the terms, if any, directed by the Court as to costs may be given a wide latitude in making his defence. With great respect in the absence of a provision in the Civil Procedure Code similar to O 12, R 22 of the Rules of the Supreme Court in England, I am unable to agree, that a defendant is entitled, as of right, to terminate ex-parte proceedings at any time before judgment by appearing and that he is then entitled to a limited scope of defence based on the stage of the case at which he appears This alleged right is said to be based on a fundamental principle of law or a cardinal doctrine of justice that a party ought to have an opportunity of being heard.

But an opportunity to be heard must not, I think, be confounded with a continuous right to be heard. If a party sleeps on his rights and fails to exercise them at the time and in the manner prescribed by law, he has only himself to thank if they are lost No person has any vested right in any course of procedure · see Maxwell, Interpretation of Statutes, p 400 He has only the right of prosecution and defence in the manner prescribed for the time being by or for the Court in which he sues and if that mode of procedure is altered by statute he has no other right than to proceed according to the altered mode . see Maxwell, p 400.

In many cases where the Court is proceeding ex parte the intervention of the defendant, even with a limited right of defence, at an adjourned hearing, would necessitate the recall of the plaintiff's witnesses for further examination-in-chief Again, in these cases in which the summons was for hearing and final disposal the plaintiff would be prejudiced, in that he had examined his evidence blindfold, without knowing the nature of the defence, while the defence evidence, introduced at a later stage, would be concentrated on specific points of defence, and the Court would be in the embarassing position of having to decide between one set of witnesses, examined blindfold, and not subjected to cross-examination, and another set examined with knowledge as to specific points of defence and cross-examined. It appears to me unreasonable that an inherent right should be presumed, in a defendant, to cause delay and inconvenience, without being able to establish good cause for his previous non-appearance The right to delay or defeat justice, as Mr. Maxwell points out in Interpretation of Statutes 6th Edn p 401 is a right little worthy of respect.

Both under O. 9, R 6 and O 9, R. 7 a discretion is conferred on the Court. The absence of the defendant under O 9, R 6 gives rise to the accrual of no right by the plaintiff It is the Court, which may proceed ex parte Similarly, even where the defendant shows "good cause" within the meaning of O. 9. R 7 the language is not imperative. The words are "he may" not "he shall" be heard in answer to the suit as if he had appeared &c." It seems to me a fortiori that a defendant who made default and is unable to establish "good cause" is not entitled, as of right to intervene in ex parte proceedings

Reliance lastly is placed on the principle "stare decisis." In this suit, however, all that my learned brother did was to dismiss an application by defendant 2 to set aside an ex-parte order without recording any reasons for his order

If the appeal is to stare decisis or to the maximum Omnis innovatio plus novitate perturbat quam utilitate prodest "every innovation occasions more harm and derangement of order by its novelty than by its abstract utility," by long established precedent maintained for many years in these Courts a construction has been placed on O. 9, R. 7 which is I believe in accordance with the views herein expressed and for the reasons mentioned in this judgment no reasonable grounds appear to me to be established for departing from the same Plaintiff's objection is therefore allowed.

A composition between a debtor and his creditors operates as satisfaction of the debts and affords an answer to an action by the creditors upon the original liability. Good v. Cheesman, (1831) 9 *L. (b) Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, Sch 2, Art. 18—Composition effected between debtor and creditor and trustee appointed to collect outstandings—Creditors' only remedy against trustee is suit to enforce the trust—Such suit is barred under Art. 18.

Where a composition is effected between a debtor and his creditors, and a trustee is appointed to collect the outstandings and the trustee fails to carry out the terms of the deed, the only remedy of the creditors against the trustee is to file a suit against him for enforcing the trust. But such a suit is barred by Art. 18 from the cognizance of a Small Cause Court. A suit by the creditors on the original cause of action is incompetent against the trustee. [P 49 C 2]

Srikishindas H Lulla—for Applicants.

G A. Kikla and Pahlagsing B. Advani—for Opposite parties.

Rupchand, A J. C.—These connected applications have been filed againt the decree passed by the learned Small Cause Court Ju ge Shikarpur.

It appears that defendants 1 and 2 who carried on business as merchants were unable to pay their creditors in full. They proposed a composition under which defendants 3—6 were appointed as trustees to collect the outstandings due to defendants 1 and 2 and to distribute the same amongst the creditors. Under the terms of the deed they were required to deposit the moneys recovered by them with one Parmanand as banker before distribution The deed also provided that if the amount distributed amongst the creditors fell short of 12 annas in the rupee the debtor would make good such deficiency. The plaintiffs in these suits were parties to the composition. They instituted the present suits on the original causes of action and asked for decrees for the full amounts due to them less such amounts as had been paid to them by defendants 3—6. In these plaints they stated as follows:

"The defendants 3—6 have been joined for this reason that they have kept with themselves the moneys realized from defendants 1 and 2's property under the agreement through Parmanand and have not divided the same under the terms thereof. And even otherwise the said agreement has not been acted upon: so that it is ineffectual and the defendants also have behaved contrary to the agreement and the trustees too have disagreed among themselves."

The learned Judge was of opinion that each plaintiff was entitled to a decree in full against defendant 1 and was also entitled to a decree against defendants 3, 4 and 6 limited to the extent of 12 annas in the rupee less such amount as had been paid to him. Now it is well-settled that a composition between a debtor and his creditors operates as satisfaction of the debts and affords an answer to an action by the creditors upon the original liability: Leake on Contracts 6th Edn, p. 644 and Good v Cheesman (1); Lewis v Leanard (2), Venkatasuami v. Kotelingam (3), Kalumal v. Kessomal, Revn. Appln. 63 of 1925. The plaintiffs' suit as against defendants 1 and 2 as based on the original cause of action was therefore entirely misconcieved. As no relief was claimed against them on the basis of the compromise and no facts proved to entitle the plaintiffs to a decree against defendants 1 and 2 the learned Judge was in error in passing a decree against them. So far as the defendants 3-6 are concerned they were in the position of trustees. If they had failed to carry out the trust or if they had moneys in their hands which they were required to distribute amongst the creditors it was open to any one of the plaintiffs to file a suit against them for enforcing the trust. But such a suit was not cognizable by the Court of Small Causes in view of the provisions of Cl (18), Sch. 2, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. The suits as framed against them were equally incompetent

Criminal Revn Appln No. 125 of 1928, Decided on 22nd August 1928, from order of Dist. Judge, Hyderabad, (Sind), D/- 19th June 1928

Criminal P. C., S. 476-A — Lower Court allowing withdrawal of application without considering merits—Application is not rejected.

The word "rejected" in S. 476-A means rejected after consideration on the merits. Where, therefore, the lower Court has merely allowed the application to be withdrawn without consideration of its merits it cannot be said that the application is for the purposes of S. 476-A rejected. [P 50 C 2]

C M. Lobo—for Applicant

Partabrai D. Punwani — for the Crown

Judgment.— This is an application which arises from an order passed by the learned District Judge of Hyderabad calling upon the applicant to show cause why he should not be prosecuted for offences under Ss. 191, 193 and 209, I. P. C.

It is urged by the applicant's pleader that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to pass such an order as the alleged offences were committed in the Court of the Sub-Judge of Hyderabad. It is argued that S. 476-A, Criminal P. C., does not apply because a complaint was made in the Court of the Sub-Judge of Hyderabad and this application was rejected.

The facts of the matter are, however, that in the Court of the Sub-Judge both parties intimated that they had privately settled the matter between themselves and it was requested that the application to the Court to take action should be struck off. The order passed by the Sub-Judge was :

"Application disposed of."

Now we think that the word "rejected" in S. 476-A means rejected after consideration on the merits. S. 476-A gives power to the superior Court to take action when the lower Court has not taken action or when the lower Court has not rejected an application for taking action This seems to show that the superior Court cannot take action when either the lower Court has not taken action or after considering the matter before it, has rejected an application that action should be taken under S. 476, where, however, as here the lower Court has merely allowed the application to be withdrawn without consideration of its merits it cannot be said that the application is for the purposes of S 476-A rejected. Moreover, the order appears to us to be one of doubtful legality and one which we should treat as a nullity as the offences were not such as could be compounded. For these reasons we dismiss the application and we would deprecate a custom of applying to this Court when it is open to the party to apply to the lower Court. In this case the learned District Judge who passed the order merely asked the applicant to show cause and probably had not considered the matter about jurisdiction It was open to the applicant in the first place to go to the District Judge and put forward the arguments which he has put forward before us.

Criminal Revn. No. 316 of 1927, Decided on 26th March 1928.

(a) Bombay District Muncipal Act (3 of 1901), S. 151 (1)—Person manufacturing oil by machinery without license can be convicted.

A manufactory or place of business where machinery is used for the purpose of extracting oil does involve a risk of fire. A person can, therefore, be convicted for manufacturing oil by means of machinery within the Municipal District without obtaining a license in respect thereof. [P 51 C 1]

(b) Bombay District Municipal Act (3 of 1901), S. 151—For awarding continuing fine it must be proved that accused was continuing offence after prior conviction—Unless such charge is specifically made and finding is given as to number of days of continuing breach, an order awarding continuing fine is unwarranted.

Before a continuing fine is imposed for a continuing offence it must be alleged and proved that the accused had continued to use the premises for a specific number of days after his conviction, and that he had no license during those days. This charge must be the subject of a separate prosecution, and a separate inquiry. It is only on proof of the charge so laid that the Magistrate is called upon to exercise his discretion and to determine what would be the proper amount of fine per day which the accused should be made to pay and to give a finding as to the number of days for which such fine is to be levied. [P 51 C 2]

Balkishendas H. Lulla—for Applicant.

C. M. Lobo—for the Crown.

Rupchand, A J. C—In this case, the applicant has been convicted and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 50-0-0 for non-compliance with the rules of the Karachi Municipality in so far that he had manufactured oil by means of machinery within the Municipal District without obtaining a license in respect thereof and to a further fine of Rs. 10-0-0 per day, until he obtains a license. He has now come to us in revision

On his behalf, it has been contended that the bye-law framed under S. 48 (b), Sub-Cl. (3), Municipal Act, requiring a license was ultra vires as the manufacturing of oil by means of machinery was not a nuisance within the meaning of S 151, District Municipal Act. This argument loses sight of the very important words in Cl. (n) of that section which refer not only to a manufactory or place of business from which offensive or unwholesome smells arise but also to a manufactory or place of business which may involve risk of fire.

We are not prepared to hold that a manufactory or place of business where machinery is used for the purpose of extracting oil does not involve a risk of fire. The legislature has vested the discretion in the municipality to decide whether any particular manufactory involves a risk of fire and the exercise by the municipality of such discretion cannot be interfered with by the Court unless the Court is satisfied that such discretionary powers have been manifestly abused. There is no such allegation much less proof in the present case. We think therefore that the applicant has been rightly convicted of the breach of the rules requiring him to take out a license.

The only other question is the legality and propriety of the fines imposed on the applicant

Now the order requiring the applicant to pay a continuing fine of Rs. 10-0-0 per day is on the face of it bad and unmaintainable It is not the failure of the applicant to obtain a license, but the continued use by him of the premises without a license that is made punishable Furthermore, the section clothes the Magistrate with a discretion to impose any fine not exceeding Rs. 40 per day for each day the premises are used without a license.

On a plain reading of the section, it is abundantly clear that before a fine is imposed for a continuing offence it must be alleged and proved that the accused had continued to use the premises for a specific number of days after his conviction, and that he had no license during those days This charge must necessarily be the subject of a separate prosecution, and a separate inquiry. It is only on proof of the charge so laid that the Magistrate is called upon to exercise his discretion and to determine what would be the proper amount of fine per day which the accused should be made to pay and to give a finding as to the number of days for which such fine is to be levied. This order is at most a declaratory order as to the proper fine which the applicant will be required to pay for a prospective offence if he commits one and as such it is clearly unwarranted by law

With regard to the fine of Rs. 50-0-0 imposed on the applicant, it would again appear that this was a test case. The applicant was not the only person who had failed to obtain a license and that there had been no previous prosecution in respect of the manufactory of oil by machinery. We are also told that the applicant has since paid the license fee for that year.

Under the peculiar circumstances of this case, the learned Public Prosecutor has not pressed for a heavy fine. We accordingly reduce it to Rs. 15-0-0 only.

The result is that we uphold the conviction, but reduce the fine for the first offence from Rs. 50 to Rs. 15 and order that the balance of the fine, if paid, should be refunded, and we set aside the order of fine for the continuing offence and order that the fine, if recovered, should likewise be refunded.

(b) Bombay District Municipal Act (3 of 1901) S. 161 — Applications by accused under consideration—Time is not extended.

U B. Chandiramani—for Applicant.

C. M Lobo—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is a revision application against the conviction and sentence passed by a Bench of Honorary Magistrates, Karachi The accused was convicted for refusing to increase an air-well, as directed by the Karachi Municipal Authorities, under S. 96, Act 3 of 1901 and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 25 under S. 155 of the said Act, and was further warned to carry out the work before 24th October 1928, failing which he would be fined Rs. 5 per day after that day.

With regard to the second order, it has been laid down in Hussain Haji Umar v. Emperor (1), that there must first be a conviction for the breach, and again a subsequent conviction for continuing the breach from the date of the first conviction, before an order can be passed inflicting a daily fine.

As regards the first part of order, namely, the fine of Rs. 25 under S 155 of the Act, objection is taken on the ground of limitation. It is pointed out that in this case notice was issued in July 1927, and the first sanction was given on 17th September 1927, whereas the complaint was not filed till May 1928. The reason for the delay was that the applicant had made various petitions to the municipality, which were being considered before the complaint was filed

There is no authority, however, for holding that the delay caused by such petitions can extend the period of six months allowed in such cases.

The objection on the ground of limitation is therefore valid On this ground the conviction and the first part of the sentence, namely, the fine of Rs 25, must also be set aside.

The convictions and sentences are accordingly set aside and the fines, if paid, should be refunded to the applicant.

[P 55, C 1]

G A. Kikla—for Plaintiffs.

Kimatrai Bhojraj, Issardas Oodharam, Tahilram Manram and Nadirshah Naoroji—for Defendants.

Judgment.—The facts giving rise to this case are somewhat as follows:

One Ebrahimji, a Borah Mahomedan, resident of Karachi died in the year 1909, leaving behind him a widow Rahmatbai and seven sons—plaintiff 1, one Alibhoy since deceased and defendants 5 to 9.

He had also another son Abdul Hoosein who predeceased him whose son is defendant 4.

By his will he bequeathed the property in suit to Rahmatbai. She died in 1914 and by her will dated 29th June 1912, which is duly registered, she appointed defendants 5 to 9 as trustees of the property and bequeathed it for "khairati" purposes. The relevant clause in the will reads:

"Clause 7—I wish and direct that my said sons shall get the above-mentioned property transferred in my name in the Government records and they are and shall be at liberty to let the said property from time to time, to recover the rent thereof, to file suits in the proper Courts against the tenants for receiving rent or possession or to do any other thing from time to time that may have to be done. From the income of rent thereof, they shall deduct the expenditure on repairs, etc., and pay up the taxes, etc., and the balance money shall be utilised in "khairati" purposes in my name as my aforesaid sons deem fit."

It is said that after her death her heirs executed an agreement, which is not registered and bears no date agreeing to give effect to the will of Rahmatbai The property in suit is the family residential house of Ebrahimji and continues to be occupied by his sons other than plaintiff 1, who appears to have been living and trading separately from his other brothers both before and after the death of his father. In 1918 the deceased Alibhoy and defendants 4 to 9 created a mortgage on the property in favour of defendant 1. In 1924 they submitted to an award in respect of the mortgage which was made rule of the Court in Judicial Miscellaneous No 382 of 1924.

On 4th August 1926, the property was sold in proceedings taken to enforce the award and purchased for Rs. 15,200 by defendant 2.

On 12th August 1926, plaintiff 1 and his son plaintiff 2 instituted the present suit under S. 92, Civil P. C , after obtaining the necessary sanction of the Collector of Karachi for a declaration that the property was dedicated to "khairati" works, i. e., charitable purposes, and that the mortgagors had, therefore, no saleable interests therein and for a scheme being prepared for the due administration of the trust.

The chief contesting parties are the plaintiffs, on the one hand, and defendant 1, on the other

The auction-purchaser, defendant 2 in the case, is indifferent about the result of this litigation, as he has applied for setting aside the sale in the connected execution proceedings on the ground that the mortgagors had no saleable interest in the property and has obtained an order for the purchase-money being deposited in a Bank pending the disposal of this suit.

The main point in the case is as to the validity of the trust created by the deceased in favour of the objects of khairat which are left to be determined by the trustees. If such a trust is void and unenforceable under the Anglo-Mahomedan Law as administered by our Courts, there is an end of the whole case and in that event there will be no need for consideration of the other points in issue I have, therefore, heard the parties on this issue as a preliminary legal issue Now, it is, no doubt, open to a Mussalman whether he be a Sunni or a Shia to create a waqf by his will provided the property which is the subject of the waqf does not exceed one-third in value of his whole estate Baker Ali Khan v Anjuman Ara Begam (1) and that where the subject of the waqf exceeds one-third in value of his property, it may, under certain circumstances, be rendered valid by the consent of his heirs. It will also not be seriously disputed that a waqf in favour of khairat is treated as lawful in ancient texts on Mahomedan Law, and is one which it was obligatory for the Qazi to give effect to In Chap 10 of Ameer Ali's Mahomedan Law, Vol 1, p. 273, (Edn. 4) which deals wit hthe Nowkoof Alaihim or the objects of a waqf, the learned commentator has said:

"According to all the Schools of Mussalman Law, a waqf may be created for the benefit of any person or class of persons, or for any object of piety or charity . . . . . The words 'piety' and 'charity' have a much wider signification in Mussalman Law and religion than in any other system. Khair, birr, ihsan, etc., include every purpose which is recognized as good or pious under the Mussalman religion and the Mussalman Law, and the test of what is 'good' or 'pious' or 'charitable' is the approval of the Almighty. Every 'good purpose' (wajah-ul-khair) which God approves, or by which approach (kurbat) is attained to the Deity, is a fitting purpose for a valid and lawful waqf or dedication."

It is, therefore, abundantly clear from this passage that a waqf in favour of khair is not limited to the specific objects of charity recognized in the contemplation of the English decisions, and that it includes many more objects than those falling within the ambit of the expression "dharam" which finds place in Hindu wills and which is said to mean "charitable, religious or philanthropic purposes."

(1) [1903] 25 All. 236=30 I. A. 94=8 Sar. 997 (P.C.).

In Ranchordas Vandravandas v. Parvatibai (2) a devise to dharam was held to be void on the ground of uncertainty, and in delivering the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council, Sir Richard Couch said:

"It is not necessary for their Lordships to refer particularly to the cases in the Indian Courts, where it has been held that a devise or bequest for dharam is void for vagueness and uncertainty. They begin at an early period both in Bombay and Calcutta, and according to the judgment of the appeal Court, are numerous. The reasons for the decisions of the English Courts upon devises or bequests of a similar nature are stated by Lord Eldon in his judgment in the leading case of Morice v. Bishop of Durham (3). He says (10 Ves. 539): 'As it is a maxim that the execution of a trust shall be under the control of the Court, it must be of such a nature that it can be under that control so that the administration of it be reviewed by the Court, or if the trustee dies the Court itself can execute the trust—a trust, therefore, which in case of maladministration could be reformed and a due administration directed, and then, unless the subject and objects can be ascertained upon principles familiar in other cases it must be decided that the Court can neither reform maladministration nor direct a due administration' Lindly, L. J., refers to this judgment and says [In re Macduff (4)]. 'That is the principle of that case and has been enunciated or repeated from time to time.' In the latter case the words of the bequest were 'purpose, charitable or philanthropic.' In Wilson's Dictionary 'dharam' is defined to be law, virtue, legal or moral duty, and the language of Lord Eldon applies as strongly, if not more so, to dharam as to the words used in the English cases. The objects which can be considered to be meant by that word are too vague and uncertain for the administration of them to be under any control."

These observations apply with greater force to a waqf created in favour of khairat, that is to say, in favaur of all good purposes whatsoever be their nature and where such good purposes are not specified but left for determination by the trustees.

It is argued that the principle in the Bishop of Durham's case (3) should not apply to a waqf by a Mussalman which conforms to the ancient text and that the Judge who takes the place of the Qazi is equally bound to give effect to it, however indefinite and uncertain waqf may be according to English precedents. It is further argued that the Mussalman Waqf Validating Act 6 of 1913, gives statutory recognition to all waqfs which are recognized by the Mussalman Law as religious, pious or charitable, that the doubt if any, which existed as to the validity of waqfs for purposes of khair is removed by this Act and that all such waqfs should, therefore, be given effect to.

The first line of argument is based on the observations made in that behalf in Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law, Vol. I, p 414, 4th Edition, and in Tyabji's Muhammadan Law, p. 596, Edn 2. With all respect, I prefer to accept and follow the view of Sir Roland Wilson in his notes to para. 322 at p. 345 (Edition of 1920), where the learned commentator has said:

"The assertion in Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law, Vol. I p. 325, that the principle laid down in Morice v. Bishop of Durham (3) is not applicable to trusts or consecrations under that law, seems to be founded on a misapprehension of the principle, which, when rightly understood, is seen to be involved in the very nature of civil jurisdiction. To construe a trust 'for good purposes unspecified' as exempting the trustee from all judicial control would be in effect to construe it as no trust at all, but a beneficial bequest to him personally; on the other hand, to construe it, with the learned author, as empowering "the Hakim" to frame a scheme at his own discretion, is to confer upon the officer so designated a function which is not judicial but administrative. it is to make the so-called waqf in effect, a bequest to the State—only that the State is to estimate the goodness of different purposes by a Mahomadan standard. If this is realty Mahomadan Law, it is outside the province of that law in British India."

With regard to the second line of argument, it is sufficient to observe that the Mussalman Waqf Validating Act has no retropective effect and canuot, in the words of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Khajeh Sulehman Quadir v. Salimullah Bahadur (5), "be construed a validating deeds executed before its date.

As the will in issue was executed in 1912, it is not necessary for me to discuss the effect of S 2, Cl. (1), of that Act which reads as follows:

"'Waqf" means the permanent dedication by a person professing the Mussalman faith of any property for any purpose recognized by the Mussalman Law as religious, pious or charitable."

It is sufficient for me to observe that the definition of "waqf" is given for the purpose of that Act, and that that Act does not purport to deal with the validity or otherwise of waqfs for objects which are indefinite or uncertain, but declares that certain waqfs for the maintenance and support of the waqif, his family and descendants shall, under certain circumstances, be treated as valid.

Trusts created in favour of khairat have been held to be void for uncertainty by the Punjab Chief Court in Sahab-ud-Din v. Sohan Lal (6) and by the Bombay High Court in Sidik Hoosein v. Haji Sulleman Abdul Wahid. Suit No 604 of 1902 in the latter case Batty, J, has said on this point as follows:

"With reference to Cl. 30 it is, for the plaintiffs and defendants 6 and 7, contended that the phrase "some good charities which is in the vernacular expressed by the word "khairat" is so vague and uncertain as to include such purposes as would fall under the expression "dharam" which in respect of Hindu wills has been held too general and indefinite for the Court to enforce Vandravandas Pursholamdas v. Cursondas Govindji (7). The Chief Interpreter has given the Dictionary meaning of the phrase which appears to extend to "good works" generally being derived from "khair" excellent or good. For defendant 9 it is suggested that the testator's own enumeration of the specific charities which are to derive benefit from previously mentioned bequests defined the meaning of the phrases as used by him. But those bequests at most afford illustrations of some of the characteristics caused by the phrase, and cannot be taken as furnishing an exhaustive definition. Moreover, Cl. 18 apparently included in the same category a bequest which whether for the spiritual benefit of the testator or purely commemoration, could hardly be regarded as "charitable." I think the word "khairat" might, and probably was intended to include good works which might conduce to the credit of the testator by reason of some meritorious character in them unconnected with any secular benefit to others."

This judgment has been referred to with approval by Crump, J, in the case of Mariambai v. Fatmabai (8) which recently has been decided and has up to now only appeared in the "Times of India." The parties in the case of Mariambai v. Fatmabai(8) were Borahs, and belonged to same community as the testatrix in the present case.

I hold that the bequest in question is invalid for want of certainty, and that, therefore, this suit fails in limine and is dismissed The plaintiffs to bear costs of defendants 1 and 2. Separate sets of costs to be taxed. Other defendants to bear their own costs.

I may, however, note that in course of his arguments, Mr. Tahilram contended that he should be permitted to lead evidence that the word "khair" among Borahs refers to the giving of feasts to the jamayat. I have refused to allow this evidence to be led, as in the first place, the case as laid contains no such averment, and, in the second place, the will is written by a Hindu petition-writer who appears to have used the expression in the sense in which it is generally understood, and lastly, that though giving feasts to jamayat may be one of the objects of the alleged charity, it could not have been the sole object of the testatrix as is clear from the words which follow vesting the discretion in the trustees to apply the money to such "khairat" as they deemed fit.

Percival, J. C.—This is a revision application against the order of Mr. Tyabji, A. J. C., directing that the award in the case should be filed. The facts of the case briefly, so far as they only refer to this application, are that there were three appointments made of an arbitrator. Respondents 1 (now opponents) first appointed Mr. Statham, arbitrator and they gave notice accordingly under S. 9 (b), Arbitration Act, to the other side, that is, to respondents 2 Respondents 2 failed to appoint their arbitrator, and Mr Statham became sole arbitrator, but afterwards refused to act. The same procedure was adopted in respect of Mr. Penn Simkins, and he also refused to act as arbitrator. Finally the same course was a second time adopted in the case of Mr. Statham. On this occasion Mr. Statham acted as a sole arbitrator, and made the award which is now under consideration.

The record also shows that respondents 1 filed a suit within three years of the date of the claim, which suit was admittedly in time. After the suit had proceeded for two years respondents 2 relied on the arbitration clause and had the suit stayed; and the suit was still pending when the order was passed by Mr Tyabji.

The two points raised in this application are, firstly, that the procedure adopted for the appointment of the arbitrator was not correct, and that the arbitration was, therefore, invalid; and, secondly, that the reference to the arbitration was made too late, and that the claim is, therefore, time barred.

On the first point, the question depends on Ss. 8 and 9, Arbitration Act. It is urged on behalf of the present applicant that S 8 (b) applies in this case, because, when a sole arbitrator has once been appointed under S. 9, then you have to turn back to S 8 to see what procedure is to be adopted in case the sole arbitrator refuses to act. I am, however, unable to accede to this argument, because, in S 8 of the Act, it is provided that, if the arbitrator neglects or refuses to act, any party may serve the other parties or the arbitrators, as the case may be, with a written notice to concur in appointing an arbitrator umpire, or third arbitrator I think that this makes it clear that S. 8 (1) (b) cannot refer to such a case as is dealt with in S. 9 where the submission provides for reference to two arbitrators, one to be appointed by each party. This view of the law, it appears, was approved in Gopalji Kuverji v. Morarji Jeram Naranji (1), at p 830. Where it was stated that S. 9 applies only to joint appointment by consent.

We come back, therefore, to the position that the procedure to be adopted is that laid down in S. 9. In respect of S. 9, it is argued by the learned pleader for the applicant that that section does not state what is to be done in case the person who becomes a sole arbitrator refuses to act. I think, however, that, when Cls. (a) and (b), S 9 are read together, it may fairly be inferred that the party who appointed the arbitrator, who became a sole arbitrator, may appoint a fresh arbitrator, after giving fresh notice to the other side. That is to say the precedure provided by S. 9 is to be repeated, and that is exactly what was done in this case For these reasons, the objection based on Ss. 8 and 9, Arbitration Act does not appear to be valid.

Turning to the objection on the ground of limitation it is argued that the claim is time barred because reference to arbitration was made (it is contended) three years after the claim became due. It appears to me, however, that it is not necessary to go into the question whether the reference to arbitration was made after the requisite time or not. All that we have to consider here is whether the suit was filed within the requisite period of limitation. Here there is no doubt that the suit was so filed, and it was respondent 2 who relied on the arbitration clause and had the suit stayed

I do not propose to go into other points connected with the question of limitation. It appears to me that the claim cannot be held to be time barred because the suit was filed within a requisite period of limitation. The application is, accordingly, dismissed with costs.

Rupchand, A J. C—I concur The submission clause in the contract in dispute provides for the appointment of two arbitrators one by each party and contains no machinery for compelling one of the parties to the submission to make an appointment on behalf of the other.

It, therefore, falls clearly within the purview of S 9, Arbitration Act, which supplements the requisite machinery for enforcement of an agreement to submit disputes to arbitration of that nature. I can find nothing in S. 9 to suggest that the same machinery may not be invoked over again and the whole procedure gone through from the beginning to the end if on account of any unforeseen circumstance the nominee of one of the parties who is appointed as the sole arbitrator under the provisions of Cl (b) of that section refuses or neglects to act. The repetition of the procedure laid down by the section, on a refusal or neglect of the sole arbitrator so appointed, affords a fresh opportunity to the party who has made default in the first instance to reconsider his position and to appoint if he so wishes his own nominee when he is called upon to do so again.

Now, if Cls. (a) and (b), S. 8, Arbitration Act, are carefully analyzed they clearly show that neither of them applies to a submission which provides for the appointment of two arbitrators one by each party. Cl (a) clearly contemplates a submission to a single arbitrator from its very inception and does not apply to a submission which provides for more than one arbitrator acting in the matter at any time. Cl (b) which follows Cl. (a) deals with appointment of a substitute and prima facie refers to the substitute of a sole arbitrator appointed under a submission of the nature contemplated by Cl (a), that is to say, a sole arbitrator appointed in pursuance of a submission which does not contemplate the appointment of more than one arbitrator in any event. The words "the parties do not supply the vacancy" in that clause as also the words "concur in the appointment of an arbitrator" used in the latter part of that section indicate beyond doubt that the submission is one which requires the parties themselves to concur in the appointment of a sole arbitrator.

Our attention has not been drawn to any decided case in which a different view has been taken. On the contrary the case reported as Gopalji Kuverji v. Moraji Jeram Naranji (1) supports the view that Cls. (a) and (b), S 8, refer to submissions which provide for the appointment of a single arbitrator. The first ground, therefore, fails.

In dealing with the second objection the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner has proceeded on the broad ground that the Limitation Act does not apply to settlement of disputes by arbitration and, therefore, it is open in every case to a party to enforce the submission clause, notwithstanding the fact, that the claim in dispute is statute-barred on the date on which he claims to refer the dispute to arbitration. With all respect I am unable to accept this broad proposition of law. Where the agreement between the parties falls within the four corners of Exception I to S. 28, Contract Act, which exception is based upon the ruling in Scott v. Avery (2), no question of limitation can ever arise, for, in that case the claimant has no cause of action for instituting a suit so long as his damages have not been ascertained by recourse to arbitration. In such a case no question of limitation arises and the observation of the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner would indubitably apply. As an authority for that proposition reference may be made to the case of Cayzer, Irvine & Co. Ltd. v. Board of Trade (3).

But different considerations apply to an ordinary submission clause contained in a commercial contract which provides for a reference to arbitration of disputes arising out of the contract and does not purport to bar the right of a party to enforce his claim in Court before he has obtained an award in respect thereof. In that case a cause of action immediately arises to the aggrieved party and if he wishes to enforce his claim he should be vigilant. He may take early steps either to enforce his claim by arbitration or by a regular suit. If he sleeps over his right for over the statutory period prescribed for the institution of his suit he is liable to be defeated by the plea that as his claim is barred by limitation and as no suit is maintainable in respect thereof there is no subsisting dispute under or arising out of the contract which may be enforced by arbitration. This was the view taken by me in In the matter of the Arbitration Act (4).

As observed by Lord Sumner in Hirji Mulji v. Cheong Yue Steamship Co. (5), the jurisdiction of an arbitrator depends on the question whether or not there was any submission, and that again on the question whether, at the time when it purported to be submitted to him, there was a dispute subsisting between the parties under the contract I think it goes without saying that if there is no dispute subsisting between the parties under the contract there can be no reference to arbitration in pursuance of the submission clause contained in such contract. Where a party is called upon to nominate his arbitrator after the expiry of the period of limitation and raises the plea that he is not prepared to go to arbitration as the claim is timebarred it is difficult to see how such a plea can be said to arise out of the contract which may be adjudicated upon by the arbitrator. His refusal to do so would, therefore, give no right to the opposite party to nominate an arbitrator on behalf of his opponent or to nominate his arbitrator as the sole arbitrator to settle such disputes. From this point of view no question arises as to the applicability of the Limitation Act to arbitrations. And there is no occasion, therefore, to consider whether the case of In re Astley & Tyldesley Coal Co. and The Tyldesley Coal Co (6), which held that an arbitrator was bound to give effect to the plea of the statute of limitation if it was raised before him as a defence, was rightly decided or not That point has been left undetermined in the more recent case of Hirji Mulji v. Cheong Yue Steamship Co. (5) referred to above, and may be dealt with when a proper case for its consideration arises. So far as the facts of this case are concerned the second objection is easily disposed of on a much narrower ground. The opponents' claim was not barred by the statute As a matter of fact, they had already instituted the suit. It was stayed under S. 19, Arbitration Act, and could easily be revived again by leave of the Court in the event of the arbitration proving infructuous. It was also not open to the applicant to approbate and reprobate. It was he who had asked for arbitration. Further more the application which was in writing contained a clear acknowledgment of the liability of the applicant to pay such amount as was found due by the arbitrators and revived the period of limitation. The second plea was, therefore, without any foundation whatsoever and was one which should never have been raised. The application will, therefore, stand dismissed with costs.

Misc. Case No. 275 of 1927, Decided on 22nd December 1927.

(a) Arbitration—Buyer and seller — Contract providing appointment of arbitrator by one party for the other after seven days from despatch of notice—Notice not delivered to other party for a fortnight—Sufficient cause for not enforcing terms of clause not shown —Terms must be enforced.

Where according to the terms of the indent the seven days, after which the other party should have power to appoint an arbitrator on behalf of the defaulting party, were to count not from the date of the receipt of the notice, but from the date of its posting; but the notice was actually delivered to the defaulting party after a fortnight and no sufficient ground had been urged why these provisions of reducing the period of notice to seven days from the date of despatch and agreed to by the parties with open eyes should not be given effect to.

Held : that the objection by the defaulting party to the appointment of arbitrator on their behalf by the other party on that ground must fail. [P 59 C 2, P 60 C 1]

(b) Contract Act, S. 52 — Party desiring to enforce submission clause must specify nature of dispute and nominate his arbitrator first—Arbitration Act, S. 9.

Where a party intended to enforced the clause providing submission of disputes to arbitration, he should in the first instance perform his own part of the contract for the proper and expeditious disposal of the arbitration proceedings. He should, therefore, not only specify the nature of the disputes which are to be referred but also intimate to the opposite party the name of the arbitrator selected by him so as to enable the opponent to choose another person as his nominee. [P 60 C 2]

Where according to the terms of the indent between sellers and buyers, there was no express provision that in case of failure by one party to appoint its arbitrator, the other party could appoint both arbitrators at once.

Held . that the party desiring to enforce the submission clause ought to nominate his own arbitrator first and if both arbitrators are appointed at once, the award is liable to be set aside : *A. Tahilram Maniram—for Respondents 1.

P. S. Shahani—for Respondents 2.

Judgment.—These are objections to an award filed under the Indian Arbitration Act. The disputes between the parties arose out of an ordinary commercial contract for sale by respondents 1 to respondents 2 of sugar.

On 9th June 1927, respondents 1 sent a notice to respondents 2 calling upon them to appoint an arbitrator within seven days of the date of the notice for the purpose of settling their claim arising out of the resale of sugar which was not taken delivery of, notice was actually delivered to respondents 2 on 25th June 1927.

On 21st June 1927, respondents 1 sent a further notice to respondents 2 intimating to them that as the requisition made by them in their first notice was not complied with they had appointed Mr. Gilks as arbitrator on behalf of respondents 2 and had also appointed Mr. Graham as arbitrator on their behalf.

Notwithstanding the protest by respondents 2 that the appointment was invalid and intimation being given by them that Mr. Clayton would act as their arbitrator, Messrs. Graham and Gilks proceeded with arbitration and passed an award, which is now challenged on two grounds : first, that the appointment of Mr. Gilks on behalf of respondents 2 before the expiry of seven days after the receipt of the notice to them, was bad in law and secondly, that the notice calling upon them to appoint their arbitrator was also bad as it did not contain the name of the person who was to act as arbitrator on behalf of respondents 1.

Now the material clauses of the indent which have a bearing upon these objections are Cls. 10 and 15 They run as follows :—

Clause 10 :

"All letters and notices given to the buyers by the sellers in connexion with this contract may be sent by prepaid post letters and addressed to the buyers at Amritsar, which the buyers hereby admit to be their address, and all notices so sent shall be considered to be served on the buyers at the time same ought to have been delivered in due course of post by the Post Office, etc."

Clause 15 :

"Disputes of whatever nature arising out of this contract. . . . shall be referred to the arbitration of two European merchants, residing in Karachi . , . One to be appointed by each party. If either party fail to nominate their arbitrator within seven days after notice calling upon them to appoint an arbitrator has been sent to them by registered post, the other party shall have power to appoint an arbitrator on behalf of the defaulting party. Should the two arbitrators be unable to agree, they shall refer the case to an umpire, who shall also be a European merchant, residing in Karachi."

It would appear from these clauses that the parties have provided in explicit and unequivocal terms that seven days were to count not from the date of the receipt of the notice, but from the date of its posting The underlying object of these provisions is clear They are intended to prevent parties, particularly those living in different places, from delaying the performance of their part of the contract, and in the event of its breach, of delaying, likewise, the settlement of disputes by arbitration and payment, of the amount so found due, by the simple process of evading service of notices sent to them by post as appears to have been done in the present case. The registered cover in question was indubitably sent to the proper address as suggested by respondents 2. In the ordinary course of events it should have been delivered within two days of its despatch It was admittedly not delivered to them for a fortnight. The cause of inordinate delay may well be surmised

No sufficient ground has been urged why these provisions of reducing the period of notice to seven days from the date of despatch and agreed to by the parties with open eyes should not be given effect to.

The first objection, therefore, fails.

The second objection, however, stands on a firmer footing. The submission clause empowers each party to the contract to nomitate an arbitrator on behalf of his opponent in the event of default but is silent as to the order in which each party is required to perform the reciprocal promise of nominating an arbitrator on his own behalf On behalf of respondents 1 it is contended that it was open to them to nominate their own arbitrator at any time whatsoever and that they were quite in order in nominating both their own arbitrator and the arbitrator on behalf of respondents 2 at one and the same time Reliance has been placed on the case of Shaw Wullace & Co v. Subbiar & Sons (1), te which respondents 1 were parties. But that case is clearly distinguishable. There the submission clause was differently worded and was as follows :

"Should either party omit to nominate an arbitrator within seven days of the receipt of a notice calling on him so to do, the other party shall be at liberty to nominate both arbitrators."

In express terms, the above clause reserves liberty to respondents 1 to nominate both the arbitrators after default by their opponent to comply with a notice given on that behalf. Now S. 52, Contract Act, provides that when the order in which reciprocal promises are to be performed is not expressly fixed by the contract, they shall be performed in that order which the nature of the transaction requires and there can be no doubt that where a party intends to enforce the submission clause, he should in the first instance perform his own part of the contract for the proper and expeditious disposal of the arbitration proceedings. He should, therefore, not only specify the nature of the disputes which are to be referred, but also intimate to the opposite party the name of the arbitrator selected by him so to enable to opponent to choose another person as his nominee. That this is the procedure is evident from the provisions of 9, Arbitration Act, which deals, inter alia with submissions which provide for appointment in the first instance of two arbitrators, one to be nominated by each party but contain no provision empowering one of them to nominate an arbitrator on behalf of his opponent in the event of default

There is also another reason why I am not prepared to accept the contention of respondents 1, assuming for the moment that the nature of the transaction does not necessarily indicate that the party claiming arbitration is in the first instance required to nominate his own arbitrator and that the submission clause is open to two alternative constructions.

The submission clause of which respondents 1 are indubitably the authors must be construed fortius contra proferentum as per Lord Blackburn in Muir v. City of Glasgow Bank (2) : see also the observations of Brett, M. R , in Burton v. English (3) If respondents 1 intended to reserve to themselves the right of appointing both the arbitrators simultaneously, it was for them to make their intention clear and having failed to do so, they have to thank themselves, if the present award is thereby rendered infructuous. Under these circumstances I am afraid I cannot uphold this award, and I accordingly set it aside Looking, however, to the conduct of respondents 2 and particularly the fact that this objection was not raised until a very late stage of the proceedings, I order that each party should bear his own costs of the proceedings Criminal Revn. Applns Nos. 160 and 146 of 1928, Decided on 24th September 1928, against an order of 1st Class Magistrate, Sukkur.

Criminal P. C., S. 203—Previous similar complaint dismissed by co-ordinate Magistrate—Dismissal not set aside—New complaint cannot be entertained.

It is not open to a Magistrate to entertain a complaint when a similar complaint has been dismissed by another Magistrate of co ordinate jurisdiction and the dismissal has not been set aside by higher authority 23 Cal. 983, 22 All 105 2) All 7 36 All. 120, A I R. 1922 Sind 23 and A. I. R. 1928 Sind 49, Foll. [P 61 C 2]

B. P. Samtani—for Applicant

C. M Lobo—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The first of these applications is to quash the proceedings instituted on complaint by opponent against applicant and others in the Court of the First Class Magistrate of Sukkur, and the second is to set aside an order passed in those proceedings.

The ground on which the first application is based, is that, a former complaint on the same facts by opponents against applicant in the Court of another Magistrate was dismissed under S. 203, Civil P C. It may be added that in the former proceedings process was issued against applicant's husband only but he was discharged under S 259, Criminal P. C. for failure of opponent to appear on one of the days of hearing.

The question therefore is whether it is open to a Magistrate to entertain a complaint when a similar complaint has been dismissed by another Magistrate of co-ordinate jurisdiction and the dismissal has not been set aside by higher authority. In the case of Queen Empress v. Adamkhan (1) this question was answered in the negative on the ground that it is utterly contrary to sound principles that one Magistrate of co-ordinate jurisdiction should in effect and substance deal with, as if it were an appeal or a matter for revision, a complaint which had already been dismissed by a competent tribunal of co-ordinate authority This ruling was referred to in two subsequent cases of the Allahabad High Court, Emperor v. Mehrban Hussain (2) and Ram Bharos v. Bahan (3) and was not expressly dissented from In Nilratan Sen v. Jogesh Chandra (4) of the Calcutta High Court which was followed in Queen Empress v. Adamkhan (1) it was pointed out that the Criminal Procedure Code distinctly lays down a procedure for having an order dismissing a complaint or discharging an accused person set aside and that it seems reasonable to conclude that the legislature intended that such an order should be interfered with only in the manner provided by the Code.

The principle that no complaint can be entertained against a person formerly discharged in proceedings in connexion with the same offence has twice been approved by this Court in reported rulings: Chandiram v Emperor (5) and Shah Mahomed v Emperor (6). In the case of two hitherto unreported revision applications of this year the proceedings have been quashed owing to the dismissal of a prior complaint on the same facts.

The ratio decidendi in Queen Empress v. Adamkhan (1) and Nilratan Sen v. Jogesh Chandra (4) appears to be a sound one and embodies the principle which has been accepted by this Court. We therefore set aside the proceedings against the applicant and those against whom the complaint was lodged along with her. As the first application is granted, the second application is naturally not pressed.

Choithram Lakhraj—for Defendant 1.

Milne, A J. C—This suit coming on for hearing issue 13 is tried as a preliminary issue.

Issue 13.—Is the suit bad for want of notice ?

For defendant 1.—(By consent notice exhibited Ex. 5 with accompaniments, petition to Commissioner-in-Sind of 14th June 1922 and a copy of the Collector's order of 8th May 1922).

Plaintiffs allege that they and the brother of defendant 3 became owners, by various transfers, of 122 acres in Deh Tangiani. Under S 13, General Clauses Act 4 of 1897, singular includes plural, plaintiff meaning plaintiffs and relief, reliefs. The notice is given by Thawerdas alone. The reliefs mentioned in the plaint are not stated.

In Bhagchand Dagdusa v. Secy. of State (1), it was laid down that the Act must be read in the natural meaning of the words, S. 80 is mandatory and no exceptions are indicated.

In Bhola Nath Roy v. Secy. of State (2), it was held that the notice should state names, descriptions and places of residence of all plaintiffs. This objection can be taken in a second written statement or later: Secy. of State v. Dipchand Poddar (3). The plea may be raised at the hearing The issue has been framed

The 24 Mad case was not followed by Calcutta, It is single Judge ruling. The Privy Council ruling: Secy of State v. Dipchand Poddar (3), lays down that there are no exceptions. Chandiram, plaintiff 2, made a petition asking for a separate allotment of land; he is not joint: the plaint does not show them to be joint.

Plaintiffs are not joint: they are suing separately. Ex 37 shows they were separate (after suit); Chandiram says they separated in 1925

Defendant 2—Nil

Plaintiffs.—In the first written statement no such defence was raised In para 17 of the plaint it was alleged that notice was duly given The plaint was amended to include a relief for possession: and I filed a sketch. Defendants filed a further written statement in which the question of notice was raised.

The suit is said to be bad for want of notice: not that the notice is defective. Notice is sufficient if it substantially fulfils the purpose: in Secy of State v. Perumal Pillai (4) notice was given by one of the two plaintiffs: cf. also Jahangir v. Secy of State (5).

Plaintiffs are a joint family and plaintiff 1 Thawerdas is the managing member. To the notice the petition to the Commissioner was appended: this raises all the questions in dispute. I rely on Kessoram Poddar & Co. v. Secy. of State (6). All the details need not be stated: M. Venkatakrishnier v. Secy. of State (7) and Bholaram Chowdhury v. Administrator-General (8) are to the same effect.

Thawerdas (Ex. 27) says they were joint: Chandiram corroborates Exs. 30, 112 and 113

In Bhagchand Dagdusa v. Secy. of State (1) the suit was filed before the two months notice expired.

Finding.—This issue was tried as a preliminary issue. Two grounds of objection were taken: (i) that in the notice

(1) A. I. R. 1927 P. C. 176=51 Bom. 725=54 I. A. 338 (P.C.).
(2) [1913] 40 Cal. 503=16 I. C. 849=17 C. W. N. 61.
(3) [1897] 24 Cal. 906.
(4) [1901] 24 Mad. 279=11 M. L. J. 117.
(5) [1903] 27 Bom. 189=5 Bom. L. R. 30,

(8) [1904] 8 C. W. N. 918.

the reliefs claimed are not stated and (ii) the names, descriptions and places of residence of all the plaintiffs are not shown.

There is no force in the latter objection. There does not seem to be any substantial ground for disbelieving the evidence of the plaintiffs that at the time of the filing of the suit they were joint. Plaintiff 2 states that they became separate in 1925; the defendants point to a petition made by plaintiff 2 in 1924 in which he asked that his eight annas share in the suit land should be entered separately This petition was made after the suit was filed and it does not perhaps follow that the plaintiffs were then separate. The petition may merely indicate the state of mind which subsequently resulted in partition. But in any case even if plaintiffs were separate the case: Kessoram Poddar & Co. v Secy of State (6) would appear to apply: it would appear from that ruling and it is a reasonable proposition that a substantial compliance with the provisions of S 80, Civil P. C is sufficient In the present case, defendant 1 knew from the petitions that had been made to revenue officers from time to time, the area in dispute, whether there were 1 or 2 claimants was not very material, but they were aware that plaintiff 1 who carried on the correspondence with the revenue authorities claimed through his father and it would be natural to expect that plaintiff 1's brother was interested in the land. The revenue authorities have dealt with plaintiff 1 as representing the claim arising out of his father's interest in the land.

Nor is there any substance in the contention that the reliefs claimed have not been clearly stated in the notice To the notice was appended a copy of the last petition submitted by plaintiff 1 to the Commissioner-in-Sind in which the facts of the case are stated. The first relief claimed is a declaration of ownership and in para 5 (h) of that petition plaintiff 1 claimed all the kacha, 135 acres as his property. The second claim is, that plaintiffs are entitled to the first grant of new kacha land thrown up in front of their land; that claim is stated in para 5 (b) of the petition. The 3rd claim that the Collector's order of 8th May 1922 is illegal, is consequential; a copy of the order was attached to the notice and the petition itself was an appeal against that order. The claim for a declaration that the grant of 30 acres from the suit land to defendant 2 was void, was also consequential; as also the claim for a permament injunction against defendant 1 and the claim for mesne profits from defendant 2 The claim to 30 acres granted to defendant 2 is stated in para. 2 of the plaint. I hold therefore that defendant 1 had clear notice of all the reliefs claimed.

Gamboshah in 1881-82 took up 184 acres of kacha land; he sold 49 acres to one Bachal; and in 1891 Gamboshah took up a further area of 50 acres and Bachal 30 acres. There had been erosion between 1881 and 1891 In 1892 Gamboshah sold 36 acres to Kewal and Sher Mahomed On 6th April 1897 plaintiffs' father, Sirumal purchased Sher Mahomed's half share in the 36 acres sold by Gamboshah. On 15th September 1897 plaintiffs' father purchased 36 acres from Gamboshah, being portion of the 184 acres taken by Gamboshah in auction in 1881-82 and still remaining with Gamboshah. On 30th June 1898 Sirumal and the brother of defendant 3 purchased the 50 acres purchased by Bachal from Gamboshah's original grant: thus plaintiffs were now owners of the land remaining from Gamboshah's original auction-purchase: Kewalmel having a half-share in 36 acres and the brother of defendant 3 a one-third share in 50 acres Kewalmel, father-in-law of plaintiffs in 1896 gifted his half share 36 acres to plaintiffs. Plaintiffs' father remained in possession of his share till 1919. Plaintiffs were a joint Hindu family; plaintiff 1 managed the lands as plaintiff 2 was a school master. The total area of the land purchased by plaintiffs' father or gifted to plaintiffs was 122 acres in which defendant 3 has a one-third share in 50 acres.

In 1922 the Collector granted 30 acres out of the suit land to plaintiffs for five years; and 30 acres to defendant 2 for five years; 44 acres were to be disposed of subsequently, a total of 104 acres. In 1922 out of the 122 acres about 18 acres had been eroded.

The Secretary of State contends that 8 acres of the 122 remain: the rest are under water. That is not correct: 104 acres remain. But if the land was eroded and new land was formed in its place, plaintiffs are still the owners. Plaintiffs rely on S. 46, Land Revenue Code: Sathe pp. 99 to 103: gradual accretions are the property of the riparian owners: Thakurain Ritraj Koer v Thakurain Sarfaraz Koer (9), where a river changes its bed the rights of the original owner of the new bed remain: Haradas Acharjya Chowdhury v. Secy. of State (10), private property submerged and then left bare belongs to the original owner: Keshav Prasad Singh v. Secy. of State (11); Rahimaddhi Matabhar v. Niamaddi Howaldar (11a), Sher Bahadur Singh v. Tafazul Husain (12), *Mt. Defendant admits transactions in paras. 1 to 7 of the plaint, the gift and partition in paras. 8 and 9 are not admitted.

(Report dated 5th December 1921 below Collector's endorsement, Ex. 26 The Government Pleader objects to the production of Ex. 26 as it is a Government record, S. 123, Evidence Act, but the document has been filed in Court by defendant 1.)

Defendant 1.—Under S 123, T. P Act, a gift must be in writing and registered Even if the Transfer of Property Act did not apply, transfer of possession is necessary Vasudev Bhat v. Narayan Daji (17): the donee must be put into possession; Bhaskar Purshotam v Saraswatibai (18)

The question of partition is a matter of evidence; also the question of possession of 122 acres Defendant 1 says that plaintiffs had originally in their possession 116 acres in deh kacha Tangiani of which 17 belonged to defendant 3, and 15 to Kewalmal.

The alleged gift does not convey any title to plaintiffs; under S. 79, Land Revenue Code, the transfer must be recorded in revenue records The section was in force in 1896 when the transfer took place

The question of what area was eroded and what area was thrown up is a question of evidence. Only the southern portion of plaintiffs' land remains; the statement in Ex 9 that 8 acres in the north remain alone of plaintiffs' land is a mistake. About 56 acres remain of plaintiffs' kacha land in deh Tangiani; including 17 acres of defendant 3 and 18 acres of Kewalmal. The area of the whole kacha in 1921-22 was 135 acres 37 guntas The area of the original kacha in 1892 was 201 acres. We cannot state from any records the area of the kacha between 1892 and 1921 In 1921 of the 135 acres 79 belonged to Gamboshah and Bachal; either they or Government were the owners; Sirumal was not the owner His land was on the east of the Khan wah. It has to be proved that fresh land has appeared and where. We say no land has been thrown up at all.

When land is eroded and re-appears, it vests in the Government. S. 3, Land Revenue Code, defines an occupant, holder of unalienated land. S. 46 applies to land thrown up in front of alienated land, S. 3 defines alienated land ; inam or jagir land. The law quoted by defendant Regn. 9 of 1825 regarding alluviated lands is in force in the U. P. and Bengal ; not in Sind. Sind is governed by Circular No. 23 of the Commissioner, no weight is to be given to pretended recognition of land, even though the situation is the same. Plaintiffs have abandoned their land, they have made applications for the suit land on one year's tenure ; Maharaja of Vizianagram v Secy. of State (19), mere submergence does not imply relinquishment, but the occupant must continue to pay the assessment due : cf S. 58, Land Revenue Code, occupancy is conditional on payment of assessment

Plaintiffs maintain now that none of the land is under water (Plaintiffs accept this position). (Plaintiffs admit that para 20 (b) of the plaint refers only to land thrown up at the date of suit ; " is " should be read as " has been.") Accretion can only occur where land is situated on the river bank Under S 64, Land Revenue Code, the occupant is entitled to land forming on the bank Accretion is slow and imperceptible : Narendra Bahadur Singh v. Achhaibar Shukul (20), Sher Bahadur Singh v Tafazul Husain (12), land washed away and then reappearing is not accretion The plaint is not properly stamped Plaintiffs are in possession of 30 acres only. The plaint was amended in respect only of the 30 acres given to defendant 2. The area is 135 acres ; 30 are in their possession ; 30 are in possession of defendant 2 ; stamp should be paid on the remaining 75.

Plaintiffs are not entitled to any declaration : S. 42, Specific Relief Act, a further relief could be claimed ; possession of the remaining 75 acres. In Bikutti v. Kalendan (21) if the consequential relief is deliberately not sued for, the suit should be dismissed. The five year's period has practically expired; the Collector may change his orders.

(For issues and findings see p. 66.)

(The judgment then discussed the evidence in respect of issue 3 and holding that plaintiffs proved their title to 122 acres in deh kacha Tangiani proceeded.) The mahalkari (Ex. 49) has stated that " haq kabze " tenure is not permanent tenure but is " like " eksali land (land granted for one year.) But if there were any such tenure there should be some more definite proof of its existence and incidents than this vague statement. " Haq " (right) and " Kabze " (possession) would seem to denote the incidents of a permanent tenure. (The judgment then discussed evidence as to possession and continued ) I hold then that plaintiffs' allegation that only 18 acres of their land were eroded is more in accordance with the Government maps. They, therefore, remained in possession of the bulk of the land acquired by them , this is further proved by the details of cultivation by plaintiffs in each year from 1897-1898 given in Ex 26. The mahalkari (Ex 49) admits that no other person cultivated the kacha ; if there had been any other person it would have been easy for the revenue authorities to state the yearly area as they have done in the case of plaintiffs.

In the view, however, which I take of the law applicable to land re-forming in place of eroded land, the actual area eroded is not a question of any importance,

Issue 6.

Are the plaintiffs the owners or entitled to the first grant of the land which has re-appeared as alleged ?

Plaintiffs.—I have stated my grounds in opening Under S. 63, Land Revenue Code, if alluvial land is formed it must be offered first to the neighbouring owner. I rely on Haradas Acharjya Chowdhuri v Secy of of State (10), land submerged and re-appearing is the property of the original owner); Keshav Prasad Singh v. Secy. of State (11) (ditto; land washed away); Thakurain Ritraj Koer v. Thakurain Sarfaraz (9) (change of bed of river) ; Lopez v. Muddun Mohun Thakoor (15) (diluviated); Sri Thakurji v Jaikali Kunwer (14) (capable of identification) ; Sher Bahadur Singh v. Tafazul Husain

(12) (identified by measurement and level).

The Commissioner's Special Circular 23 has no force of law. Even under it the Collector is bound by the Land Revenue Code. Para. 3 does not relate to lands submerged and re-appearing ; but to new kacha thrown up.

Defendants say plaintiffs have abandoned the land : vide Exs. 33 to 37. No abandonment can be presumed from these applications. Plaintiffs, in these, have claimed the new lands on the strength of their original holding Defendant rely on Maharaja of Vizianagram v. Secy. of State (19) ; but that is a ruling under a Madras special law Ex. 49 the mahalkari admits this land is not assessed ; assessment is paid on the area cultivated.

Section 68, Land Revenue Code, does not apply to the present case. It is not alleged that I have not paid any assessment due. Exs. 11 to 15 show that the land is on permanent tenure Ex. 11 in perpetuity. Ex 12 is under S. 74, Land Revenue Code : cf. definition of occupancy in S. 3 (16) ; Exs. 13-16 are in the same form.

In Exs. 33 to 37 plaintiffs are said to have acknowledged that their land was eroded and abandoned their original rights. Ex. 32 refers to my frontage only. Ex. 34 is an application for 10 acres only. Ex. 35 is an application for 5 acres only ; which was granted by Ex. 32.

In Ex. 41 and Ex. 40 the northern boundary of Gumboshah's land is Dasomal's and Bachal's land. Ex. 41 gives the boundaries of the whole of Gumboshah's land though only half was sold.

Exhibit 9 shows I had land to the West of Khan Wah. Ex. 31 shows the position of Dasomal's land. Ex. 19 shows that a similar mistake was made regarding Dasomal's land.

Mr. Shivaldas (Ex. 49) admits no one else has claimed the land. Between 1881 and 1891, 63 acres of Gumboshah's land had been eroded : Ex. 17. This would be on the east. The new grant would be of the land thrown up in its place. When Ex. 10 was issued, the matter was threshed out ; I asked for the papers but they have not been produced. The Special Circulars are not applicable.

| Issues. | Findings. |
|---|---|
| 1. Did Kewalmal Ramchand gift away the land in deh Tangiani as alleged in para. 8 of W. S.? | Yes. |
| 2. Was there any partition as alleged in para. 9 of the plaint ? If so, was the land allotted to defendant 3 as alleged ? | No finding necessary. |
| 3. Have the plaintiffs and their predecessors-in-title been the owners and in possession of 122 acres of land as alleged in para. 10 of the plaint ? | Yes. |
| 4. Do the said sale-deeds, gift and partition convey any right to the plaintiffs over the land in suit ? | Yes; except the partition. |
| 5. What portion of the said 122 acres was eroded by the river Indus, and what portion, if any, has re-appeared ? | As alleged by plaintiffs. |
| 6. Are plaintiffs the owners or entitled to the first grant of the land which has re-appeared as alleged? | They are entitled to the land re-appearing in the same position as their original land. |
| 7. Is the Collector's order referred to in para. 13 of the plaint illegal, ultra vires and of no effect ? | Yes ; so far as it relates to plaintiffs' original land or land which has re-formed on the site thereof. |
| 8. Are the plaintiffs owners in law or entitled to the grant of the land in suit ? | They are owners of and entitled to 122 acres of the land. |
| 9. Does the land vest in defendant 1 for reasons given in para. 7 of the W. S.? | The aforesaid 122 acres do not vest in defendant 1. |
| 10. Is any and if so what portion of the land in suit still under water and can the plaintiffs obtain the relief of declaration and injunction with regard to the same ? | No portion is under water. |
| 11. Do the plaintiffs claim any and if so, what portion of the land in suit by accretion and can they do so ? | Yes; they cannot do so. |
| 12. Has there been any accretion in fact and law ? | No, on both parts. |
| 13. Is the suit bad for want of notice ? | No. |
| 14. Is the suit properly stamped ? | Yes. |
| 15. Are the plaintiffs entitled to any, and if so, which of the reliefs sought ? | As per final order. |
| 16. General. | As per final order. |

They do not apply to land which can be identified. The rulings quoted deal with the law apart from the Bengal Regulations. A zemindar is said not to be owner of the land S 73, Land Revenue Code shows the occupant is the proprietor. S. 37 refers to land not the property of individuals. Gumboshah paid malkano of the land There is no question of the identity of the land , the south-west and north boundaries are intact ; on the other side is the forest

Defendants.—The boundaries of Ex 41 could not be correct It is admitted that Dasomal's land is to the north. The eastern boundary would be Khan Wah with Bachal's land as well as the forest It was by mistake that Dasomal's land was shown as the northern boundary Lopez v. Muddun Mohun Thakoor (15) refers to (alluvial land) : it deals with the construction of S. 14, Act 11 of 1825 which deals with the land accruing by gradual accretion , such land becomes an increment to the land to which it accrues (The land diluviated and re-formed was held to belong to the original owner?) Haradas Acharajya Chowdhuri v. Secy. of State (10) refers also to erosion by the river Ganges ; Keshava Prasad Singh v Secy of State (11) refers also to S 4, Bengal Regulations. Mt Raj Kunvari v. Chaudhri Uma Prasad (13) and Sher Bahadar Singh v. Malik Tafazul Husain (12) refer to land capable of identification ; Sri Thakurji v. Jaikali Kunwer and others refers also the Bengal Regulations

Bombay Regulation 4 of 1827, S 26, lays down the law applicable in suits The law applicable to alluvion and diluvion is Special Circular 23 of the Commissioner in Sind. Under para 3 new land vests in Government, as Government is owner of the old land to which it is annexed Plaintiffs are only occupants : S. 37, Land Revenue Code This principle holds good even if plaintiffs are permanent occupants. Ordinary Circular 23 shows how such lands should be disposed of Para 5 of Special Circular 23 shows that mere re-appearance in the same place does not confer any right Mr Shivaldas (Ex. 49). L. 12 confirms this. Plaintiffs confirm ; they have applied for the regrant of the land : cf. Ex 33.

If the Special Circular does not apply the land should be identified and alluvion should be gradual. No body has seen the accretion being formed

Plaintiffs rely on S 63, Land Revenue Code. That pre-supposes a permanent occupant of the land The exchange entries in Government records do not confer any title Also under S 63 the matter is left to the Collector's discretion ; and the occupant has to pay the malkano demanded

Finding.—The law as regards alluvion is stated in Lopez v. Mudun Mohun Thakoor (15); the land in that case had been diluviated, that is to say, the surface soil was wholly washed away by reason of the continual encroachment of the river. The rule of English law was applied that if by its situation and extent the land can be known, the subject does not lose his property. The owner does not lose his property if he can make out where and what it was Lands washed away and afterwards re-formed on an old site which can be clearly recognized remain the property of the original owner. Bengal Regulation 11 of 1885 was considered in that case but the finding was not based on that Regulation. The ruling therefore is one generally applicable and not one based on a purely local regulation This case was followed in Keshav Prasad Singh v. Secy of State (11) which dealt with the land which had been washed away by the Ganges and on the site of which new land had formed. This is the general law applicable throughout India.

It is contended by the defendants that there is a special law applicable to Sind and that is contained Special Circular 23 of the Commissioner-in-Sind , these circulars have been declared to have the force of law by Government of India Notification No 1254 of 30th September 1880. Defendants rely in particular on para. 3.

"All new land not separated from the main land by a channel containing water throughout its length during the whole year is to be considered as the property of the owner of the old land to which it is annexed subject to the Government assessment in the cases provided for in the new rules below."

Defendants have contended that 'owner' in this para means Government, as Government is the ultimate owner of all land. But it would be difficult to accept this construction In para. 2 it is stated that lands newly thrown up by the river or sea are the property of Government ; and if the land referred to in para 3 was to be considered the property of Government, that would have been said in para 3 as has been said in para. 2. It seems clear that whatever the land referred to in para 3 may be, the owner referred to therein is the permanent occupant ; who has permanent proprietary rights in the land for purposes of cultivation.

But it appears from para. 4 that para 3 applies only to land which has been thrown up by the river and which cannot be identified with any land which may have previously existed on the same spot and since been swept away. If the land can be identified with any such land para 3 does not apply. The land, if it can be identified, continues to be the property of the original owner The second sentence of para. 4 gives an illustration ; the general wording of the first sentence is not restricted by the example given. Para 5 contains a warning against the pretended recognition of lands which have been entirely swept away, merely because in situation they somewhat resemble the lands which have been previously swept away ; but if the situation not merely resembles but can be identified as the actual situation of the lands which were eroded, to my mind, according to the circular the lands reformed remain the property of the original owner. In this the law as laid down in the circulars and the general law of the land as stated in Lopez v Muddun Mohun Thakoor (15) is the same. It is a principle as stated in the case quoted founded on universal law and justice On the facts as I have found them the law propounded by defendants is a law of expropriation ; and for this there must be clear and unmistakable authority.

That the land which has appeared has re-formed in the place of land which previously belonged to plaintiffs, there is little doubt In the maps which have been put in by both parties (Exs. 55 & 56) to illustrate their argument the plot in the north-east corner sold by Bachal to Sirumal is the land of the plaintiffs. That plot, it is clear from the maps, is the plot that has been exposed to erosion. Plaintiffs, it is clear from the sale-deeds, have had approximately 16 acres of land eroded. It is a natural presumption that the eroded land was in continuation of plaintiffs' remaining land and extending towards the river. The northern boundary, the boundary of deh Manjhand, the southern boundary, the forest, the western boundary, the kacha paka land, the greater part of the eastern boundary, these are clear ; the area is known ; plaintiffs' land can therefore be determined with reasonable accuracy This strongly corroborates the oral evidence that the land which has re-appeared on the north-east boundary of plaintiffs' existing land has re-formed in place of land belonging to plaintiffs which had been eroded I hold therefore that plaintiffs' eroded land can be identified by its situation and that they are entitled to 18 acres of land originally belonging to them which was eroded and in place of which a new formation has appeared adjoining their existing land.

They are not, however, entitled to any further area. It appears from the sale-deeds that the eastern boundary of the land sold by Bachal to Sirumal was a forest dhoro The eastern boundary of their land, being a dhoro in forest land the further area that has appeared can be identified therefore not as plaintiffs' land but as land belonging to the forest department. Plaintiffs admit that the eastern boundary of their land was forest land.

Defendants have contended that plaintiffs have abandoned their right in this kacha land. They have made in recent years certain applications to be allowed to cultivate this land on one year's permission : vide applications Exs. 33 to 37. But there is nothing in these applications to show any intention to abandon Plaintiffs have asked for permission to cultivate as a right and they have since brought this civil suit as permission to cultivate was given to another person as well as to themselves They may have been ignorant of their rights or they may have thought it simpler to comply with the wishes of the revenue officers in the matter. But it is clear I think from the applications above referred to and from the present suit that plaintiffs have always claimed that they alone are entitled to cultivate this kacha and were prepared to maintain their rights. By Ex. 32 in 1919 permission was granted to take possession of 5 acres for 1 year "to which he (Sirumal) was entitled by virtue of his right of possession"; even the revenue authorities recognised that the permission to cultivate was asked on the strength of existing rights in plaintiffs.

Defendants' case is not based on any alleged custom or practice Ex. 49 states that it is the practice to treat land which has re-appeared in place of the land eroded as Government land. This would be no adequate proof of practice or of the manner in which the circumstance has been interpreted, if the defendants' case had rested on that basis The witness was not a very accurate or a precise witness.

Issue 12.—Has there been any accretion in fact and law ?

Plaintiffs.—The measurements show accretion.

Defendants.—It is a re-formation.

Finding.—Accretion has been defined in Lopez v. Muddun Mohun Thakoor (15), as acquisition of land from a river by gradual, slow and imperceptible means. There is no proof as to how the land that has re-appeared was formed ; it seems from the maps to have been a definite change in each year, according to the actual course of the river, after the innundation season. It cannot be held therefore that there was any accretion.

The Karachi Municipality — Defendant.

Original Civil Suit No. 815 of 1921, Decided on 15th June 1927.

 (a) Master and Servant—Test to determine voluntary or compulsory resignation—If servant's intention is not to be bound by contract, resignation is voluntary — If employer's conduct amounts to refusal to continue servant, resignation is compulsory—Language is immaterial.

In determining whether a person has resigned or has been compelled to resign the correct test is to find whether the acts and conduct of the servant evince an intention no longer to be bound by the contract, or whether the conduct of the employer amounts to a basic refusal to continue the servant on the agreed terms of the employment, in the latter case there is a wrongful dismissal and repudiation of the contract and the use of polite instead of peremptory language would not alter the conclusion Stephenson v. London Joint Stock Bank, Ltd., 20 *T. (b) Bombay District Municipal Act (3 of 1901), Ss. 184 & 46 (e) — Karachi Municipal Rules, R. 90 — Servant of Karachi Municipality cannot be dismissed without giving him opportunity of being heard.

A statutory power to appoint, fine, reduce, suspend or dismiss officers and servants is vested in the Karachi Municipality by reason of S. 184 and 46 (e). But the provisions of R. 90 of the Rules framed by the Karachi Municipality constitute a statutory restriction or limitation to the power given by Statute to the Municipality to dismiss their servants. R. 90 is manifestly for the protection and benefit of officers and servants of the Municipality and the existence of such a rule is inconsistent with the position that a servant of the Karachi Municipality is a servant who may be dismissed at pleasure at any time without notice and without reason . 18 C *W. (c) Bombay District Municipal Act (3 of 1901), S. 46—Karachi Municipality Rules — Dismissal in accordance with rules and bye-laws—Court cannot enquire further—But if dismissal is wanton or against rules and bye-laws, servant can succeed as in ordinary suit between master and servant — Civil P. C., S. 9.

In a suit for damages for wrongful dismissal brought by an officer or servant of the Karachi Municipality against the Municipality, once the Court is satisfied that the plaintiff's dismissal has been in accordance with the rules and bye-laws of the Municipality, it has no jurisdiction to probe any further into the question. If, however, the Court finds that the plaintiff's dismissal had been wanton and in utter disregard of the rules and byelaws of the Municipality, the Municipality would forfeit the protection and privileges afforded to them by Statute and the plaintiff would be entitled to succeed as in an ordinary suit between master and servant for wrongful dismissal : R. v. Darlington School Governors, (1844) 6 Q. B. 682, Rel. on. (Case law considered). [P 82 C 1]

(d) Master and Servant — Extent of misconduct sufficient for dismissal varies according to circumstances.

There is no fixed rule of law defining the degree of misconduct which will justify dismissal from service. Much will depend on the nature of the misconduct and the nature of the duties to be performed by the person dismissed. Clouston & Co. v. Corry, (1906) A. C. 122, Foll. [P 83 C 1]

 (e) Master and Servant — Servant can be dismissed on reasonable notice — Reasonableness is question of fact — Measure of damages for dismissal is earnings for notice period.

Every master has an inherent right to dispense with the services of his servant with reasonable notice As to what is reasonable notice depends on the nature, of the servant's employment. When this is determined, the measure of damages is what the servant would have earned in the employment of his master during the period of notice. The damages for the dismissal cannot include compensation for the manner of the dismissal, for his injured feelings, or for the loss he may sustain from the fact that the dismissal of itself makes it more difficult for him to obtain fresh employment. Maw v. Jones, (1890) 25 *Q. T G. Elphinston—for Plaintiff
Dipchand Chandumal—for Defendant

Judgment.—The plaintiff, Mr. Abraham Reuben, entered the service of the Karachi Municipality in the year 1893 He obtained a substantive appointment as surveyor in 1897 on a salary of Rs 100 per mensem with a conveyance allowance of Rs. 25 The plaintiff's services with the Karachi Municipality terminated about the end of December 1920, under circumstances which will be referred to hereafter He was then drawing a monthly salary of Rs. 260, Rs 45 as conveyance allowance, and Rs. 20 as War allowance ; he was also entitled to an annual increment of Rs 10 per month till his salary reached the sum of Rs. 300.

Between 1897 and 1911, Mr James Forrest Brunton was Chief Officer and Chief Engineer of the Karachi Municipality. He has been examined on commission as a witness for the plaintiff in the case (Ex. 33) and it would certainly appear from his evidence and from the letters and certificates (Ex. 33) (a) to 33 (g) put in through him, that the plaintiff, during this period was considered an excellent and entirely honest servant of the Municipality, at any rate by Mr. Brunton himself.

In June 1909, it would appear from Ex. 25, that some members of the Corporation entertained suspicions with regard to the honesty of the plaintiff in connexion with road metalling contracts. But Mr. Brunton put up a strong defence on his behalf and in March 1910, before proceeding on leave put on record his appreciation of the signal services in his opinion rendered by the plaintiff in connexion with a Drainage Extension Scheme which he stated were deserving of very special recognition (Ex 25*a*). On 31st March 1910, Mr. Brunton proposed that the plaintiff should be granted a bonus of Rs. 2,250 (Ex 25b) The proposal was accepted by the Municipality, and on 4th May 1910, the plaintiff was given the bonus in question

"in appreciation of services rendered in connexion with the Drainage Extension.(Ex.25c)"

Mr Brunton retired from the service of the Karachi Municipality towards the end of 1911, but before handing over charge again placed on record a glowing appreciation of the plaintiff's work as a Municipal servant stating in conclusion that he hoped that .

"before long the Municipality would see their way to pay the plaintiff a more adequate salary and recognize, by a substantial increase, the services of a valuable public servant. (Ex. 25d)."

On 3rd May 1913, again Mr Markwick (Ex. 32) in handing over charge of the Office of Municipal Engineer recorded a no less flattering appreciation of the plaintiff's work which he concluded by hoping that the Municipality would reward him "in some tangible form" (Ex 25e)

There is also on the record a certificate given to the plaintiff by Mr. Measham Lea, the Chief Officer and Chief Engineer of the Karachi Municipality, dated 22nd March 1912, wherein the plaintiff's services are commended in the highest terms (Ex 28).

That the Municipality accepted the recommendations and shared the opinions of Messrs. Brunton, Markwick and Measham Lea in regard to the plaintiff seems obvious from Exs. 26 and 27 dated June, 1914 The managing committee of the Municipality obtained the Commissioner-in-Sind's sanction not only to an increase of the plaintiff's salary to Rs 200—10—300 with a conveyance allowance of Rs. 30 but to an alteration of his designation from "Surveyor" to "Sub-Engineer" In their resolution dated 2nd June 1914, (Ex. 26) the Managing Committee state :

"with regard to para. 3 of the Commissioner-in-Sind's letter the Managing Committee are of opinion that having regard to the strenuous conditions under which the present incumbent of the post of surveyor works the remuneration proposed by the Municipality is in no way out of proportion to the services rendered. For many years Mr. Abraham has carried out his duties with distinct satisfaction and on many occasions he has been recommended for promotion by the officers under whom he has served. Despite this, however, no promotion has been given to him since 1907. The Municipality highly esteem the services rendered by Mr. Abraham and his untiring energies, and in submitting their proposal they were guided by a thorough knowledge of the value of the work which Mr. Abraham performs and the intelligence which he displays in the important matters and schemes in connexion with which his assistance is required."

Again on 12th May 1919 Mr. Measham Lea, the Chief Officer and Chief Engineer before proceeding on leave, considered it proper to place on record yet another glowing appreciation of the plaintiff's services and described him as "a most valuable servant of the Municipality" (Ex. 28*a*).

With the departure of Mr Lea, however, the plaintiff's troubles commenced. By their Resolution No. 140 dated 25th June 1919, Ex. 5 the Municipality appointed a sub-committee consisting of Messrs. Ghulam Hussein Kassim, Jamshed N. R Mehta, Dipchand T. Ojha, and M. Misquita:

"to investigate the charges of corruption laid against some members of the municipal establishment at a recent meeting of the Corporation; also to investigate the system of giving out contracts and making payments for them and suggest remedial measures."

Their report was to be submitted within three months

With the nature of the investigation made by this sub-committee hereinafter referred to as the Corruption Committee, I am not at present concerned. Between October 1919 and February 1920, the plaintiff was examined and cross-examined on several occasions especially with regard to the property moveable and immovable acquired by him during the period of his service with the Municipality Ex. 12 The report of the Corruption Committee of the Municipality dated 11th June 1920, Ex 6, was forwarded to the President of the Municipality by the Chairman of the Committee with his letter dated 12th June 1920, Ex 7.

As regards the plaintiff the Corruption Committee suggested he should be "seriously dealt with" as it was an open secret that he was not honest and had made plenty of money in municipal service If he could not be adequately punished by being reduced or placed in charge of a post where corruption was not possible, his services should be dispensed with.

On 1st July 1920, a copy of this report was forwarded to the plaintiff by the Chief Officer and Chief Engineer, Karachi Municipality:

"for any explanation he may have to give the same to be submitted within a week's time from the date of receipt." Ex. 8.

On 7th July 1920, the plaintiff submitted a brief statement in reply to Ex 8. Therein he pointed out that the Corruption Committee had laid no particular charge against him but has assumed that he had acquired his property and cash dishonestly That property he said was partly ancestral, partly saving during his service of over twenty-seven years and partly profits earned from the purchase and sale of landed property. He had submitted declaration in respect of his property as required by Municipal Rules since 1915 or 1916. He submitted copies of his testimonials and prayed for definite charges of corruption and bribery to be framed against him to enable him to refute the same and clear his reputation, Ex 9.

Mr. Measham Lea had in the meanwhile returned from leave and on 20th July 1920, in forwarding to the President of the Municipality Ex. 9 and the explanations offered by other servants of the Municipality affected by the report of the Corruption Committee, submitted his own spirited comments on the said report which he concluded as follows:

"In conclusion I would add that the committee had a full year with unlimited powers to carry on the enquiries, with a clerical staff provided, but they have absolutely failed to adduce one tittle of evidence as regards blackmail or anything of that kind although if the sweeping allegations were correct there must have been hundreds of concrete instances some of which surely would have come to the knowledge of councillors representing the public who were blackmailed, and intimately accessible to them. On the contrary the Committee's report bolsters up the irresponsible scandal of the bazaar, belittles the work of the Municipal staff, and besmirches the fair name of the Municipality" (Ex. 10).

The Corruption Committee's report was brought up at a special general meeting of the Municipality on 8th September 1920, much eloquence was expended upon it, but ultimately the Corporation unanimously passed a resoluation remitting the report to the Managing Committee to take such steps as they deem suitable in the light of the remarks made in the report, and during this evening's debate Ex. 11. The Corporation could not but have been aware that the Corruption Committee formed four out of the nine members of the Managing Committee to whom they were delegating the power to take action on the report

At a meeting of the Managing Committee held on 25th November 1920, at which the report of the Corruption Committee was read and considered, it was resolved that the plaintiff should be asked to resign Municipal service, Ex. 13. This resolution was communicated to the plaintiff on 3rd December (Ex 14); on the same day the plaintiff by Ex. 15 informed the Chief Officer and Chief Engineer that the Managing Committee had not made any specific charges on which they based their decision. He added:

"I am quite prepared to defend and prove that the allegations made were quite false and without foundation. However, I shall feel obliged if you kindly let me know the terms on which the Managing Committee want me to resign the Municipal service. If necessary, I may kindly be allowed an interview with the Managing Committee. Ex. 15 was placed before the Managing Committee at a special meeting held on 16th December 1920. Eight out of the nine members thereof attended that meeting, including the four members of the Corruption Committee. It was resolved that "Mr. Abraham Reuben be informed that the Managing Committee will not enter into discussion with him. He must resign within one week of the receipt of notice and he must understand that if he fails to do so the Managing Committee will take such action as it deems fit." (Ex. 16).

This resolution was communicated to the plaintiff on 20th December (Ex. 17).

On 21st December the plaintiff wrote stating

"under protest I am prepared to obey the Managing Committee's order and hand over charge of my office from the end of the current month pending my appeal to the Municipality which will be submitted in due course (Ex. 18)."

On 23rd the Chief Officer endorsed on Ex. 18 "Mr. Shivdasani to take over charge from Mr. Abraham." On 27th December 1920, in compliance with the above office order the plaintiff and Mr. Shivdasani respectively delivered over and received charge of the office of Sub-Engineer Ex. 19. The plaintiff never again returned or was allowed to return to duty. On the same day he left for Poona to be present at the 7th day ceremonies for his brother-in-law who had died on 24th December.

On 17th January 1921, the plaintiff presented an appeal to the President and members of the Karachi Municipality against the orders of the Managing Committee dated 25th November and 16th December 1920 (Ex 20) The appeal came up for disposal at a meeting of the Municipality on 4th March 1921, when it was resolved "that the appeal dated 17th January 1921, by Mr. Abraham Reuben against the Managing Committee's resolutions dated 25th November and 16th December 1920, be recorded and the Corporation confirm the action taken by the Managing Committee" (Ex. 24).

It is worthy of note that the resolution was carried by the casting vote of the President and that among the eight members of the Corporation who voted in favour of the resolution, Mr. Dipchand T. Ojha and Jamshed N. R Mehta were members of the Corruption Committee. In his memorandum dated 12 of March 1929, the Chief Officer communicated this resolution to the plaintiff (Ex. 22).

The plaintiff thereafter appears to have sought legal advice, for on 2nd May 1921, Messrs Ltttle & Co , Solicitors of Bombay, served a notice on the Municipality (Ex 23) demanding from them on behalf of the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 25,000 as damages for wrongful dismissal from service.

On 11th June 1921, the plaintiff filed the present suit. In his plaint the plaintiff alleges that he has been in the employment of the defendants for 27½ years, he refers to Exs. 13 to 18 and states on 21st December 1920, under compulsion he handed over charge of his office under protest and in obedience to the orders of the Managing Committee ; he contends that the defendants prevented him from continuing in their service after 31st December 1920, and in the alternative pleads that the defendants on 16th December 1920, refused to perform their part of the contract with him and compelled him to put an end to the same ; that in any event he was wrongfully and illegally dismissed by the defendants in December 1920. He recites his pay and emoluments at the time of his alleged dismissal and contends that at the time he was entitled to six month's privilege leave on full pay, to twelve months furlough on half pay and thereafter to his full pension on medical certificate which he could easily have then obtained, that even otherwise he had not long to serve to entitle him to full pension; he attaches to the plaint a schedule showing damages sustained by him to the extent of Rs. 28,155 but limits his claim to Rs 25,000, only In their written statement filed on 16th September 1924, the defendants contend that the plaintiff in consequence of the report against him by the Corruption Committee and after a consideration of his explanation was given an opportunity of resigning his service, that he availed himself of the opportunity and resigned, and that he has, therefore, no cause of action against the defendants Somewhat inconsistently in the alternative they plead that if the Court holds that the plaintiff was dismissed from service they were entitled to dismiss him for misconduct and no appeal lies to a Court against such dismissal. They contend that the granting of privilege leave, furlough and pension are within the absolute discretion of the defendants, that the plaintiff cannot claim these as of right or base a claim to damages thereon. They deny the plaintiff's claim to damages and proceed in the subsequent paragraphs of their written statement to traverse the allegations and contentions of the plaintiff.

The following issues were framed on 8th November 1921.

1. Did the plaintiff resign service, and if so, did defendants compel him to resign ?

2. Can plaintiff maintain the present suit ?

3. Did defendants prevent plaintiff from continuing in their service ?

4. If the plaintiff was dismissed from service has this Court jurisdiction to decide whether he has been rightly or wrongly dismissed ?

5. Was the plaintiff wrongfully and illegally dismissed from service as alleged by him ?

6. Is the plaintiff estopped from contending that he was dismissed or that the defendants refused to perform their part of the contract or compelled him to put an end to it ?

7. Can plaintiff claim more than one month's pay in lieu of notice ?

8. Can plaintiff claim furlough, leave and pension as of right ?

9. Could the plaintiff have obtained a medical certificate to enable him to retire on pension ?

10 Is the plaintiff entitled to any of the sums mentioned in the schedule filed with the plaint ? If so, which ?

11. To what damages if any is plaintiff entitled ?

12. General.

Issues 1 to 3 in some degree overlap, they are certainly connected and may conveniently be dealt with together

On 3rd December 1920, the resolution of the Managing Committee that he should be asked to resign municipal service was communicated to the plaintiff (Exs 13 and 14). In his letter of the same date Ex 15 the plaintiff after protesting against the resolution of the Managing Committee asked to be informed of the terms on which the Managing Committee wished him to resign There can be little doubt that the plaintiff at this juncture felt that he was engaged in an unequal contest with the Managing Committee of the Municipality and that if he could strike a good bargain with them on the questions of leave, furlough and pension due to him it would be better for him to accept the suggestion and resign For this reason he asked for an interview with the Managing Committee On 20th December, however, on receipt of Ex. 17 peremptorily ordering him to resign within a week, the plaintiff must have realized that the Managing Committee were in no mood to bargain with him and that a resignation would entail the loss of his claims to leave, furlough and pension without even a fight This is clear from the language in which his reply Ex 18 is couched He states :

"I beg to inform you that under protest I am prepared to obey the Managing Committee's order and hand over charge of my office from the end of the current month pending my appeal to the Municipality."

The plaintiff studiously and of set purpose avoids the use of the word 'resignation'; under protest and pending his appeal to the Municipality he is prepared to hand over charge of his office. On 23rd December, the Chief Officer and Chief Engineer endorsed on Ex 18 an office order that Mr. Shivdasani should take over charge from the plaintiff, 24th to 26th December were the Christmas holidays and on 27th December the office order was carried out, Ex. 19. Again the concluding paragraph of Ex. 20, the plaintiff's appeal to the Karachi Municipality is very significant. It reads :

" under these circumstances I appeal to you, gentlemen, for justice as against the Managing Committee's resolution dated 16th December 1920, more especially as under this order if I resign I cannot get my earned leave or pension."

The words I have underlined (italicized) indicate that the plaintiff wished it to be very clearly understood that he had not resigned. Mr Markwick Ex 32 was acting as Engineer in December 1920 and was the plaintiff's immediate superior at the time. He has repeatedly stated in his evidence that the plaintiff did not resign, that he handed over charge in obedience to the office order of the Chief Officer and Chief Engineer and under protest

Now, in these circumstances and in this state of facts, the question is, whether the acts of the plaintiff, especially the act of handing over charge on 27th December are to be interpreted as a voluntary resignation by him or whether the action of the Managing Committee considered as a whole, amounts to a dismissal of the plaintiff from municipal service. The case of Stephenson v London Joint Stock Bank Ltd. (1) bears considerably on the point In that case, the plaintiff, a clerk, in the defendant Bank had endorsed a promissory-note made by one Mr Sedger. On the Bank coming to know of this, the plaintiff was called upon for an explanation. On receipt of it the Secretary to the Bank wrote a letter to the plaintiff containing the words :

" you are required to resign your appointment in the Bank forthwith."

The plaintiff then wrote to the Bank resigning his appointment. The question was, whether the plaintiff had retired with the consent of the Directors or had been dismissed The Lord Chancellor in delivering the judgment of the Court of Appeal said he entertained no doubt upon the point. They had to look at the whole of the facts, and doing so there could be no doubt but that the plaintiff had been dismissed The use of polite instead of peremptory language did not alter the fact. In General Bill Posting Co v Atkinson (2) the House of Lords held, approving the earlier authorities :

" that the true question is whether the acts and conduct of the party evince an intention no longer to be bound by the contract."

In In re Rubel Bronze & Metal Co., and Vos (3) McCardie, J., states :

" It has been authoritatively stated that the question to be asked In cases of alleged repudiation is ' whether the acts and conduct of the party evince an intention no longer to be bound by the contract " , and again at p 323 of the report :

" If the conduct of the employer amounts to a basic refusal to continue the servant on the agreed terms of the employment, then there is at once a wrongful dismissal and repudiation of the contract."

Applying these rulings to the facts in the case before me as I have set them out, I am of opinion that the only inference to be drawn is, that the plaintiff did not resign his appointment but was dismissed by the Managing Committee of the Municipality. It has been argued that the plaintiff's letter Ex. 18 amounts to a voluntary resignation, that the Managing Committee gave the plaintiff an opportunity to resign and the plaintiff availed himself of that opportunity. I think the argument is unsubstantial. Ex. 18 is surely not to be read by itself but in the light of the fact and circumstances immediately preceding and following it, and so read cannot by any stretch of imagination be regarded as evidencing a voluntary resignation.

I, therefore, hold on issue 1 that the plaintiff did not resign his service The second part of issue 1 does not arise.

On issue 2 I hold that the plaintiff is not disentitled to maintain the suit on the ground that he voluntarily resigned. On issue 3 I hold that the defendants prevented the plaintiff from continuing in their service, that they dismissed him On my findings on issues 1 to 3 the question of estoppel covered by issue 6 does not arise. I, therefore, answer that issue in the negative. The really important issue in the case is issue 4 and this I propose next to discuss For the defendants it is contended that this is not a case governed by the ordinary law of master and servant under which a servant wrongfully dismissed is entitled to damages from his master and is entitled to have the questions of wrongful dismissal and damages determined by a Court of law The servants of a District Municipality, it is argued are appointed, suspended and removed in pursuance of powers conferred by Statute under rules and bye-laws made thereunder That, municipal servants are on a par with servants of the Crown; they are servants at pleasure Where therefore a servant of a District Municipality is dismissed no suit can lie against the Municipality for wrongful dismissal. He can avail himself only of such remedial provisions as the Statute or the rules and bye-laws made thereunder provide; a civil Court has no jurisdiction in the matter.

For the plaintiff, on the other hand, it is argued that the District Municipal Act 3 of 1901 does not confer on the Municipality the power to appoint, suspend and dismiss servants; it merely provides for the mode and conditions under which servants may be appointed, etc That the law regulating the relations between a District Municipality and its servants is the ordinary law of master and servant qualified only in certain particulars by the rules and bye-laws which regulate the mode and conditions in and under which such servants may be appointed, suspended and dismissed. That the civil Court's jurisdiction to determine in any particular case the questions of wrongful dismissal and damages therefor, remains unaffected. That a Municipal servant aggrieved by an order of dismissal whether on the ground that the order is not justified by the facts, or on the ground that the mode and conditions prescribed in the rules and bye-laws have not been observed, has the ordinary servant's right to obtain a civil Court's decision on the question whether there has or has not been a wrongful dismissal and if the former, what damages he is entitled to for such wrongful dismissal

Now, S. 184, Bombay District Municipal Act 3 of 1901 in the clearest possible terms invests the Chief Officer with power :

"(a) to appoint (i) without the previous sanction, of the Municipality, to any post the monthly salary for which . . . . . does not exceed Rs. 15, and

(ii) with such previous sanction in each case, to any post under the Municipality other than that of the Health Officer, Engineer or Chief Accountant, and (b) to fine, reduce, suspend or dismiss any municipal servant whose salary does not exceed Rs. 15, and, subject to the provisions of the rules for the time being in force, any other Municipal Officer or servant not being the Health Officer, Engineer or Chief Accountant, provided that in respect of any punishment other than a fine not exceeding one week's salary his order shall be subject to an appeal to the Municipality."

Further the section states that the Chief Officer is invested by the Act with this power

"Independently of such powers as may be delegated to him by the Municipality in this behalf."

Obviously if the Municipality can under the Act delegate to its Chief Officer powers "in this behalf" i. e powers of appointing, fining, reducing, suspending and dismissing servants, it must under the Act itself be invested with such powers. Again S. 46, Bombay District Municipal Act, requires the Municipality to make rules in respect of certain matters specified in the section and Cl. (e) thereof reads :

"subject to the provisions of S. 184, determining the mode and conditions of appointing, punishing or dismissing any officer or servant and delegating to officers designated in the rules the power to appoint, fine, reduce, suspend or dismiss any officer or servant."

Obviously again, if the Municipality is empowered to make rules delegating to officers designated in the rules the power to appoint, fine, reduce, suspend or dismiss any officer or servant it must itself by the Act be invested with powers to appoint, fine, reduce, suspend or dismiss officers and servants

Reading Ss 184 and 46 (e), Bombay District Municipal Act together, I am of opinion that it is clear that the Municipality has vested in it a statutory power to appoint, fine, reduce, suspend, or dismiss officers and servants, to make rules determining the mode and conditions of appointing, punishing or dismissing such officers or servants and to delegate to officers specified in such rules the power to appoint, fine, reduce, suspend or dismiss any officer or servant Where under S 182, a City Municipality appoints a Chief Officer then such Chief Officer has the statutory powers in respect of the appointment and punishment of municipal officers and servants specified in S 184 over and above powers in this regard delegated to him by the Municipality under rules framed in accordance with S. 46 (e) of the Act

Now the rules framed by the Karachi Municipality under S 46 (e) of the Act appear in Ch 6 of the compilation "Rules and Bye-laws of the Karachi Municipality" which is Ex. 53 in the case. The Chapter is headed "Appointment of Officers" Rr. 86, 88 (1) and 90 which are relevant to the present enquiry read as follows :

"86. The Managing Committee will have power to appoint, punish, suspend or dismiss officers and servants drawing a pay exceeding Rs. 125 but not exceeding Rs. 300."

"88. Any member of the establishment whose monthly salary exceeds Rs. 125 punished, suspended or dismissed by the Managing Committee may appeal to the Municipality."

'90. No officer or servant shall be dismissed without a reasonable opportunity being given to him of being heard in his defence."

For the defendants it is contended that Ss 184 and 46 (e), Bombay District Municipal Act read with R. 88 framed under S 46 (e) exclude the jurisdiction of the civil Court in the matter of the dismissal of a servant of the Karachi Municipality. That the provisions of R. 90 are not intended to give jurisdiction to the civil Court but are purely for the benefit of the Municipality. I have already set out the contentions of the plaintiff but it is further contended on his behalf with special reference to the rules that the plaintiff was dismissed without a reasonable opportunity being given to him of being heard in his defence as provided by R 90, that there was, therefore, an initial breach of contract on the part of the defendants and that if this is established the plaintiff is entitled to a declaration by the civil Court that he has been wrongly dismissed and to damages for wrongful dismissal even without going into the further question of misconduct involved in issue 5

There would appear to be only two cases in our Court, one reported the other unreported, in which a District Municipality was sued by one of its servants for damages for wrongful dismissal.

In the first of these, Thariomal Pritamdas v. Karachi Municipality, Civil Suit No. 164 of 1892 the issues raised were (1) whether the plaintiff was rightly dismissed, (2) to what relief if any is he entitled. The District Judge Mr. Hart Davis held that the plaintiff had not been rightly dismissed and awarded him Rs 500 as damages.

The case is of no assistance in deciding the issue now under discussion It was decided in 1893, long before the present Bombay District Municipal Act 3 of 1901 came into force. There is no reference in the whole of the judgment to the District Municipal Act then in force and it was assumed by the Court as well as by both the parties that the law relating to relations between a District Municipality and its servants was the ordinary law of master and servant The other case is one reported as Municipality of Tatta v. Assanmal Chandomal (4). This was an appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Tatta awarding damages to the plaintiff Assanmal who had been employed as Secretary by the Tatta Municipality and whose services had been dispensed with wrongfully as the plaintiff alleged.

Now, this was a case decided in 1914 when the Bombay District Municipal Act 3 of 1901 was in force, but strange as it may seem, the issue now before me for decision was not raised and the case was argued and decided on the basis that the law applicable thereto was the ordinary law regulating the relations of master and servant The main issue in the lower Court and on appeal before Fawcett, A. J. C, was.

"whether defendants were justified in dispensing with the plaintiff's services on the ground alleged in para. 3 of the written statement."

The case is of course strongly relied on by the plaintiff as a decision of an eminent Judge of our Court holding that the ordinary law of master and servants applied as between a District Municipality and its servant In deciding the issue now under discussion, however, I think the case is of no assistance The parties thereto went to trial and appeal on a particular common legal basis and the only points decided by Fawcett, A J. C., were whether on that admitted legal basis the plaintiff had been wrongly dismissed and if so to what damages he was entitled The very point of jurisdiction involved in this issue was raised in the case of Chellam Aiyar v. Corporation of Madras (5) The appellant in that case was servant of the Municipal Corporation of Madras and had been dismissed from service by the President of the Corporation. He sued the Corporation of Madras for damages for wrongful dismissal. His suit was dismissed by Srinivasa Aiyangar J , on the ground that such a suit would not lie. On appeal the decision was upheld by a Division Bench of the Madras High Court consisting of Sir John Wallis, C.J., and Oldfield, J. After referring to S. 58, Madras City Municipality Act 3 of 1904 which empowers the President to appoint subordinate officers and servants subject to the control of the Local Government and subject to such control if any to fine, suspend, reduce or dismiss any of the said officers and servants the judgment proceeds :

"Now it appears to be well-settled that when an officer in the position of the President of the Madras Corporation is empowered by Statute to appoint and dismiss subordinate officers and servants those officers and servants hold their office at pleasure This was decided in the case of Smyth v. Latham (6), and more recently in the case of Notley v. London County Council (7)."

The learned Judges of the Divisional Bench then go on to find that though S. 58 refers to the power of the President being subject to the control of the Local Government no action in regard to such control had been taken by Government when the Madras Corporation Code had been sent up to it. They proceed :

"The position, therefore, simply is that the officers and servants of the Corporation hold office at pleasure and subject to dismissal by the President. There is a further provision enabling them to appeal from the President either to the Standing Committee or to the Corporation according to the amount of their salaries, and a provision that the decision of the Standing Committee or Corporation, as the case may be, shall be final. Independently of this last provision we think that a Corporation servant thus holding office at pleasure who has been dismissed by the President has no cause of action against the Corporation."

They go on to state that as regards offices held at pleasure it is well-settled that no notice of framing of charges is necessary to validate the dismissal. Lastly, the learned Judges refer to the cases of Shenton v Smith (8) and Ram Das Hazra v Secy. of State (9), in support of the proposition that even where Government had prescribed rules regulating the dismissal of public servants yet the non-observance of those rules would not render the dismissal of an officer holding office at pleasure invalid or give him a cause of action. The case is undoubtedly very much in point. It is, of course, very strongly relied on by the defendants on whose behalf their learned pleader has pointed out that the three propositions it establishes put the plaintiff clean out of Court. The plaintiff, it is argued, as a servant of the Karachi Municipality held his office at the pleasure of the Municipality, he was liable to be dismissed at any time without notice and without the framing of any charge even if R 90 of the rules and byelaws of the Karachi Municipality has not been observed and the plaintiff has been given no opportunity of being heard in his defence, the failure to observe the rule furnishes him no cause of action and does not invest the civil Court with jurisdiction to determine whether the plaintiff has been rightly or wrongly dismissed

The learned counsel for the plaintiff has endeavoured to distinguish the case on two grounds. He argued first that it was a decision based on S. 58, Madras City Municipal Act, which vested in the President of the Corporation a statutory power to appoint and dismiss subordinate officers and servants There was no corresponding section in the Bombay District Municipal Act, the defendants had no statutory powers in regard to the appointment and dismissal of servants. I have already held that such a statutory power is vested in the Karachi Municipality by reason of S 184 and 46 (e), Bombay District Municipal Act. The Madras case is, therefore, in my opinion not distinguishable on this ground

The learned counsel next referred to the case of Satish Chandra Das v Secy. of State (10) This case has a direct bearing on the issue under consideration as well as on Chellam Aiyar's case (5). It was a suit brought against the Secretary of State by a dismissed Sub-Inspector of Police for the recovery of Rs. 10,000 as damages for alleged wrongful dismissal by the Inspector-General of Police, Bengal. In his plaint the plaintiff contended that his dismissal was illegal and wrongful and in flagrant disregard of all the regulations and conditions of police service. In particular he alleged that no enquiry was held as contemplated by the Government of India Act and the rules framed thereunder The defence inter alias was that the plaint disclosed no cause of action as Government had every right to dismiss its officers at its pleasure.

Buckland, J., framed the following preliminary issue :

"Does the plaint disclose any cause of action by reason of any regulation or regulations having the force of law and providing for the grounds or manner in which the plaintiff could be dismissed."

The regulation relied by the plaintiff was R. 14 of the Rules regarding the Civil Services in India made by the Secretary of State for India in Council under sub-S. (2), S. 96-B, Government of India Act which provided that the dismissal, removal or reduction of any officer should except in certain specified cases be preceded by a properly recorded departmental enquiry the nature of which the rule proceeded to lay down. On the hearing of the issue the learned Judge held that notwithstandiug S. 96 (b), Government of India Act, 1915, which provided that every person in the Civil Service of the Crown of India held office during His Majesty's pleasure the provisions of R. 14 of the Rules regarding the Civil Services in India made by the Secretary of State for India in Council under sub-S (2), S. 96 (b), Government of India Act which are manifestly intended for the protection and benefit of the officer are inconsistent with importing into the contract of service the term that the Crown may put an end to it at pleasure. At p. 50 (of 54 Cal.) of the report the learned Judge states :

"Stated in other words what it comes to is that before a Police Officer may be dismissed, the procedure laid down by R. 14 must be followed. In so far as the plaintiff alleges that such regulation was not complied with, the plaint discloses a cause of action."

The case mainly relied on by Buckland was that of Gould v. Stuart (11).

In that case the Government of New South Wales in answer to a suit for damages brought against it by a clerk who had entered the service of the Government under the New South Wales Civil Services Act of 1884 and been dismissed summarily raised as preliminary pleas (a) : That the declaration disclosed no cause of action and (b) that there was nothing in the provisions of the Civil Service Act which prevented the Government from terminating the employment of an officer under it at any time The Supreme Court of New South Wales gave judgment for the plaintiff on these preliminary points. On appeal their Lordships of the Privy Council affirmed the judgment of the Supreme Court on the ground that though under the law of New South Wales as well as of England the Crown has the power to dismiss its servants at its pleasure, yet part 3, Civil Service Act, which prescribed the procedure to be followed before a Civil Servant could be dismissed contained provisions which were manifestly intended for the protection and benefit of the officer and were inconsistent with the importing into the contract of service the term that the Crown may put an end to it at pleasure. At p. 578 of the report their Lordships say : "In that case they would be superfluous, useless and delusive" The case of Gould v. Stuart (11) is distinctly referred to by Mookerji, J., in the case of Ram Das Hazra v. Secy of State (9) as establishing an exception to the rule that all public servants and servants of the Crown hold their appointments at the pleasure of the Crown on the ground that in that case "It was otherwise provided by Statute" It does not appear that either in Ram Das case (9) or in Chellam Aiyer's case (5) or in the English case referred to therein, the Statute in question or any rules framed thereunder contained any provisions making it inconsistent to import into the contract of service of the plaintiffs in those cases the term that their service could be put an end to at pleasure That there can be such an exception to the general rule that servants of the Crown hold their office at the pleasure of the Crown has again been recognized in the case of Jehangir v. Secy. of State (12) where Mr. Justice Tyabji states :

"The plaintiff was a public officer, whose employment was one which could only be given to him by the Sovereign or the agents of the Sovereign. Such public servants hold their offices at the pleasure of the Sovereign and are liable to dismissal at his will and pleasure, if the power of dismissal is not limited by statutory provision."

My attention has also been drawn to an unreported decision of Beaman, J., in Civil Suit No. 596 of 1917, David Joseph N. P Damson v. The Trustees for the improvement of the City of Bombay I have read through a copy of the judgment handed to me but have come to the conclusion that the decision in that case was very largely influenced by the fact that there was a contract in writing under the terms of which the plaintiff in that case entered the service of the Improvement Trust. The decision, therefore, throws no light on the matter now under consideration.

On a consideration of the various cases I have discussed above, I have come to the conclusion that the learned counsel for the plaintiff has succeeded in showing that the case of Chellam Aiyar v Corporation of Madras (5) is entirely distinguishable. R. 90 of the rules and bye-laws of the Karachi Municipality which provides a reasonable opportunity being given him of being heard in his defence is a rule made under the provisions of a Statute, the rule is manifestly for the protection and benefit of officers and servants of the municipality and the existence of such a rule is inconsistent with the position that a servant of the Karachi Municipality is a servant at pleasure who may be dismissed at any time without notice and without reason. The provisions of R. 90, in my opinion, constitute a statutory restriction or limitation to the power given by Statute to the defendants to dismiss their servants In so far as the plaintiff alleges in para. 8 of his plaint that the provisions of R 90 have not been complied with, that he has not been given a reasonable opportunity of being heard in his defence, he has in my opinion a cause of action.

In this view of the matter it becomes necessary, therefore, to determine whether the plaintiff's allegation that before his dismissal he was not given a reasonable opportunity of being heard in his defence is at all well founded. I have indeed in the opening portion of this judgment set out in chronological order the facts leading up to this litigation, some of those facts, however, call now for closer attention The plaintiff cannot but have been aware of the resolution of the Karachi Municipality Ex 5 appointing a sub-committee to investigate the charges of corruption laid against some members of the municipal establishment I feel that he cannot have been unaware that he was one of the members of the municipal establishment to whom the resolution referred. At any rate any doubt that he might have entertained on the subject must undoubtedly have been dispelled when the Corruption Committee took up its work and called for a statement from him of the property moveable and immovable acquired by him during the period of his service in the Karachi Municipality. That such statement was called for and was submitted by him to the Corruption Committee is manifest from Ex 12 the record of the plaintiff's examination before the Corruption Committee which is based on the statement submitted by him, and from Ex 51, containing the details called for Between October 1919, and February 1920, the plaintiff was examined not less than six times by the Corruption Committee and a perusal of Ex. 12 the record of his examination makes it clear to me and it must have been clear to the plaintiff at the time that the object of that examination was to elucidate two points whether the plaintiff could honestly have acquired during the period of his service with the Municipality the property moveable and immovable declared in his statement and valued at about Rs. 70,000 and whether there had been any improper relations and connexions between the plaintiff and contractors dealing with the Municipality during the period of his service.

In June 1920, the Corruption Committee submitted its report Ex. 6 and on 30th June, a copy of that report was in the plaintiff's hands. The Committee's finding and recommendations so far as they relate to the plaintiff are contained in para. 21 (i) of their report They are very clear indeed: the plaintiff is held to be dishonest and to have made plenty of money in Municipal service, the Committee recommend that he be seriously dealt with By Ex 8 a copy of this report was forwarded to the plaintiff "for any explanation he may have to give"

The plaintiff has been examined and cross-examined before me at great length and it is obvious to me that he is highly intelligent individual, fairly educated and possessing quite good knowledge of English I cannot, therefore, regard as serious the argument advanced by his learned counsel that the plaintiff was no lawyer but a mere engineer and that he could not be expected to spell out of a report covering seven pages of print what charge he had to meet and what explanation he had to give Such an argument is further met by the plaintiff's explanation Ex. 9 itself which clearly indicates that the plaintiff well understood that the finding against him and the charge he had to meet was that he had made money dishonestly during his service with the Municipality.

There was in my opinion, therefore, a definitely laid charge against the plaintiff which he was given an opportunity to meet. It has been argued that seven days was not a reasonable opportunity to the plaintiff to meet a charge or be heard in his defence. The answer to this argument is that the plaintiff never asked for a day more but submitted Ex. 9 on 7th July as the only explanation he had to offer. Even on 3rd December 1920, when the plaintiff had been asked by the Managing Committee to resign he states in reply Ex. 15 :

"I am quite prepared to defend and prove that the allegations made were quite false and without foundation."

By "allegations" he can only mean the finding of the Corruption Committee that he was dishonest and had made plenty of money in Municipal service. Till the date of his handing over charge at the end of December 1920, the plaintiff never offered any explanation or defence other than Ex. 9 to which I have referred above. On these facts I feel no hesitation in holding that the plaintiff was afforded from start to finish a reasonable opportunity which fully complied with the requirements of R 90 and that the plaintiff deliberately chose not to defend himself against the general charge of dishonesty laid against him but contented himself with a show of readiness to meet what he knew, the defendants, and before them the Corruption Committee were not in a position to formulate specific instances when the plaintiff had accepted bribes or been corrupt.

To summarise the position the plaintiff has been dismissed from the service of the Karachi Municipality by virtue of the powers vested in the Municipality by reasons of Ss 184 and 46 (e), Bombay District Municipal Act. One of the conditions and limitations attached to the exercise of that statutory powers is that plaintiff, before he can be dismissed must have a reasonable opportunity of being heard in his defence. This condition has been entirely fulfilled. The plaintiff had a right of appeal against the Managing Committee's order of dismissal. This right he has availed himself of and his appeal has been dismissed. The question remains in this state of facts and in these circumstances : has the Court jurisdiction to decide whether the plaintiff has been rightly or wrongly dismissed ? The question, I must confess, is a difficult one, and the conclusion I have arrived at is not free from doubt. On the one hand, the authorities cited by the learned counsel for the plaintiff in support of his position that the jurisdiction of the Court to determine whether the plaintiff has been rightly or wrongly dismissed is unfettered by anything contained in the Bombay District Municipal Act or in any rules or bye-laws framed thereunder appear to me to be of little assistance

Andrews v. Mitchell (13) was a case under the Friendly Societies Act of 1896. The plaintiff Mitchell had been expelled from the Foresters' Friendly Society without any charge being framed against him. By the rules of the Society no members could be expelled unless a charge was framed against him and he had been proved guilty on that charge. Their Lordships of the Privy Council affirming the decision of the Court of appeal held that the plaintiff's expulsion was without jurisdiction Lord Robertson stated :

"The Act of 1896 has not given carte blanche to the tribunals of these Societies to pronounce decisions which shall be exempt from examination in Courts of Law. The decisions protected from review are constitutional decisions—decisions pronounced according to the rules ... registered under the Friendly Societies Acts."

It was the entire departure from those rules which was held to invest a Court of law with jurisdiction. Cassel v. Inglis (14) was a stock exchange case. The decision of Astbury, J., is summed up as follows :

"I am of opinion that the contract gave to the Committee the right to decide how and by what procedure they would carry out the fiduciary duty committed to them, whether an objection under R. 35 had been lodged or not, and in the absence of evidence to the contrary, I cannot say that they departed in any way from what the law requires of them in this respect, but must assume that they, acting honestly, came to the conclusion for some good and sufficient reason ..... that the plaintiff was not eligible for re-election."

The decision, if anything, is against the plaintiff.

In Thompson v. New South Wales Branch of the British Medical Associa- tion (15) the main point raised was that the rules set out in the Articles of Association relating to the expulsion of members was illegal as being in restraint of trade and, therefore, void. The plaintiff further alleged libel and claimed damages therefor.

None of these cases relate to servants of the Crown or to servants appointed in virtue of powers granted by Statute; none of them can, therefore, be regarded as an authority really bearing on the point now under discussion. They do in general lay down that bodies like the Stock Exchange, Friendly Societies, Medical Associations, which in some cases exercise under their rules and regulations quasi-judicial functions, are required by law to exercise these functions with due regard to natural justice and equity, and that Courts of law have jurisdiction to interfere where their decisions are contrary to natural justice and equity; but they can be of little assistance in determining to what extent, if any, a Court of law has jurisdiction to interfere in questions between master and servant, where the master is the Crown or a public body empowered by Statute to employ and dismiss servants.

In the same category must be placed the two Indian cases relied on by the learned counsel for the plaintiff: Mohamed Kalim-ud-din v. Stewart (16) a stock exchange case, and Gompertz v. Goldingham (17) a club case.

Lastly the case of Satish Chandra Das v. Secretary of State for India (10) is of no assistance as the case when reported had not proceeded beyond the stage of the preliminary issue to which reference has been made before

On the other hand, the learned pleader for the defendants has been unable to refer me to any authority other than the case of Chellam Aiyar v Corporation of Madras (5) and the English rulings cited therein as supporting his position that the Court has no jurisdiction to determine whether the plaintiff has been rightly or wrongly dismissed. Chellam Aiyar's case (5), as I have shown before, is distinguishable, and with all respect to the learned Judges that decided it I think the propositions they lay down are too broadly stated.

The point, it appears to me, must be determined on a consideration of general principles.

It is difficult to understand why Statute like the Bombay District Municipal Act should specially invest municipalities with power to appoint, fine, reduce, suspend or dismiss officers or servants, and require elaborate rules to be framed regulating the appointment, etc. of officers and servants if the legal relations between these officers and servants and the body empowered by the statute to appoint and dismiss them remain the ordinary legal relations existing between any ordinary master and servant. To my mind the object can only be in order to create special legal relations between these bodies so empowered and their officers and servants suspending the ordinary legal relations of master and servant

Again it is difficult to understand why a municipality should be empowered by statute to frame rules and bye-laws having the force of law empowering particular high placed officers to dismiss officers, servants, providing an appeal to a higher tribunal against an order of dismissal, requiring that the officer or servant proposed to be dismissed be afforded an opportunity of defending himself, if the officer or servant dismissed can in the exercise of his ordinary civil rights have the question whether he had been rightly or wrongly dismissed determined by the civil Court To my mind again the object can only be to supersede the common law right of a servant to have such questions determined by a Court of law and to provide instead domestic tribunals the decision of the highest of which should be final and binding of such officers and servants

Again an officer or servant of a municipality is a public servant, his conduct or misconduct in the discharge of his duties affects the public and their interests It would be highly inconvenient, nay scandalous, if every question relating to the misconduct or corruption of a public servant in the discharge of his duties had to be investigated in a Court of law. On the other hand, a municipality owes a duty to the public in the matter of their officers and servants, that they should be honest and fit and proper for the office held by them It would be impossible for a municipality to discharge their duty in this regard to the public if every action taken by them in the control of their officers and servants was liable, to be contested, investigated and scrutinized by a Court of law The words of Lord Denman in the case of R v. Darlington School Governors (18) are to my mind very apt in this regard He said:

(17) [1886] 9 Mad. 319.

"They "—that is the governing body—"are bound to remove any master whom according to their sound discretion, they think unfit and improper for the office and, as that discretion may possibly be well exercised for defects of various kinds not amounting to misconduct, so there may be misconduct, incapable of proof by witness but fully known to the governors themselves on which they could not abstain from exercising their power of removing the master without ths abandonment of their duty . . . . . they might be reasonably satisfied of the truth of the charges without possessing any means of proving them by evidence."

It is on a consideration of these general principles that I have come to the conclusion that on the facts of this case and in the circumstances thereof, both of which I have laid out above in detail, the Court has, by reason of the provisions of the Bombay District Municipal Act and the rules and bye-laws framed by the Karachi Municipality thereunder, and to which I have made special reference, no jurisdiction to decide whether the plaintiff has been rightly or wrongly dismissed I would go further and hold in general that in a suit for damages for wrongful dismissal brought by an officer or servant of the Karachi Municipality against the municipality, once the Court is satisfied, that the plaintiff's dismissal has been in accordance with the rules and bye-laws of the municipality, it has no jurisdiction to probe any further into the question and the plaintiff's suit must be dismissed

It is unnecessary for me in the view I have taken to determine what the position would be if in such a case a Court came to the conclusion that the plaintiff's dismissal had been wanton and in utter disregard of the rules and bye-laws of the municipality. It seems to me, however, that in such a case the municipality would forfeit the protection and privileges afforded to them by Statute and that the plaintiff would be entitled to succeed as in an ordinary suit between master and servant for wrongful dismissal.

(18) [1844] 6 Q. B. 682=14 L. J. Q. B. 67.

I, therefore, answer issue 4 in the negative

My finding on this issue is sufficient to dispose of the suit ; but this litigation is not likely to end here ; the suit is one of 1921, and in the event of an appellate Court taking on the question involved in issue No. 4 a view different from mine, I feel they should have before them my findings on all the points involved in the suit so as to obviate the necessity of a remand. I, therefore, proceed to consider the remaining issues. (The judgment then proceeded to consider issue 5 as if whether the plaintiff was wrongfully and illegally dismissed) I have not come to a finding on the material before me whether the plaintiff has amassed his wealth honestly or dishonestly. The point is whether before the Managing Committee of the municipality which dispensed with the plaintiff's services there was material on which they could honestly come to the conclusion that the plaintiff could not by fair means have acquired the property he admittedly possessed. As to the charges of improper relations with municipal contractors, there was material before the Corruption Committee and the managing committee that the plaintiff was badly mixed up with at least two contractors dealing with the municipality, Badrudin Budhabhoy and Kabla Umar. This point has been brought out in further detail in the cross-examination of the plaintiff in this Court. I do not propose to go into this matter at any length as I think it is unnecessary for me to do so. I cannot help concluding, however, that the admissions made by the plaintiff cast a cloud of suspicion over his dealings with both these contractors.

Now, the plaintiff in his plaint has imputed no malice to the members of the Managing Committee of the Karachi Municipality who dismissed him ; and this being so, I cannot seriously regard the insinuations made against Messrs, Dipchand Ojha, Ghulam Hussain Kassim, Jamshed Mehta and Ghulamali Chagla in their cross-examination by the learned counsel for the plaintiff The plaintiff alleges the dismissal was wrongful that is unjustifiable Can it be said that with the materials before them, and to which I have referred in so much detail, their dismissal of the plaintiff was wrongful and illegal? As stated by their

Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Clouston & Co. Ltd. v. Corry (19):

"there is no fixed rule of law defining the degree of misconduct which will justify dismissal from service."

Much will depend on the nature of the misconduct and the nature of the duties to be performed by the person dismissed In the present case the plaintiff was a trusted officer of the Karachi Municipality, a public servant owing duties not only to his employers but to the public generally. I feel no hestitation in stating that on the materials before them the Managing Committee of the Karachi Municipality were justified in the action they took My answer to issue 5 is, therefore, in the negative.

Issues 7 to 11 may well be dealt with together ; they involve the one question. What damages is the plaintiff entitled to if the Court having jurisdiction to do so were to hold that the plaintiff had been dismissed wrongfully and illegally. It is entirely unnecessary to discuss these issues individually or to record a finding on each of them as the learned counsel for the plaintiff has admitted that the plaintiff does not claim the specific sums shown by him in the annexure to the plaint, but that these particulars are intended merely te furnish a basis for determining the measure of damages. These issues in fact appear to have been drawn under a misapprehension.

Now, every master has an inherent right to dispense with the services of his servant with reasonable notice. As to what is reasonable notice depends on the nature of the servant's employment When this is determined, the measure of damages is what the servant would have earned in the employment of his master during the period of the notice. This I think is a proposition of law which cannot be disputed, in fact, the learned counsel for the plaintiff conceded this position and confined his final arguments on the issue of damages to the point as to what in the plaintiff's case should be regarded as reasonable notice. The case of Maw v. Jones (20) which appears to have laid down a contrary principle has been practically overruled in Addis v. Gramophone Co (21) where their Lordships of the Privy Council held that :

" Where a servant is wrongfully dismissed from his employment the damages for the dismissal cannot include compensation for the manner of the dismissal, for his injured feelings, or for the loss he may sustain from the fact that the dismissal of itself makes it more difficult for him to obtain fresh employment."

In Manubens v. Leon (22) a hair dresser's assistant on a weekly wage but with an implied term that he was to receive tips was held entitled to claim as damages for wrongful dismissal in addition to a week's wages an amount in respect of the loss of the tips which he would have received but for the wrongful dismissal In Grundy v. Sun Printing and Publishing Association (23) a year's notice was considered reasonable for an Editor of a newspaper and damages were awarded on that basis. In the case of Municipality of Tatta v Assanmal Chandoomal (4) three months salary was awarded as damages to the plaintiff who was the Secretary of a Small Municipality In a footnote at p 97 of Vol. 20 of Halsbury's Laws of England there is a whole collection of cases showing what period of notice has in decided cases been held to be reasonable for persons employed in various trades and professions.

Bearing in mind the nature of the plaintiff's employment, and after considering the cases I have referred to above, I should in this case, had I not decided issues 4 and 5 against the plaintiff, have awarded him 12 months' salary at Rs 335 per month (Rs 280 plus 45 plus Rs 20), as damages for wrongful dismissal Unfortunately for the plaintiff I have found on issues 4 and 5 against him and his suit must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Judl. Misc No 348 of 1928, Decided on 28th January 1929.

 (a) Arbitration Act, S. 4 — Option to submit to arbitration exerciseable by one party only—Award is valid.

Section 4, Arbitration Act, like S. 27 Arbitration Act 52 and 53 Vict. C. 49, only requires an agreement in writing to submit present or future differences to arbitration and provided the agreement is a valid agreement in writing it makes no difference whether the provision for the submission of present or future differences to arbitration is unconditional or subject to a contingency, such as the exercise of an option by one of the parties. Woodall v. Pearl Assurance Co., (1919) 1 *K. (b) Specific Relief Act S. 19 — Mutuality —Principle does not apply in India.

The doctrine of mutuality which was one of the defences in English Law to an action for specific performance has been deliberately left out from the Specific Relief Act by the legislature and it is not applicable to India. 5 S. L. R. 61 Rel. on. [P 84 C 2; P 85 C 1]

(c) Contract Act, S. 2 (i) — Mutuality— Doctrine of—S. 2 (i) does not incorporate.

Section 2 cannot be invoked as a clause importing the doctrine of "mutuality" into the law of contract in India. [P 85 C 1]

Srikishindass H. Lulla —for Respondents 1.

Kimatrai Bhojraj — for Respondents 2.

Judgment —Mr. Kimatrai has pressed the following objections on behalf of respondent 2. He contends that there was no valid submission inasmuch as the arbitration clause in the agreement gave one of the parties only an option to have the dispute referred to arbitration and and not the other It is contended that in order to constitute a submission within the meaning of S 4, Arbitration Act, there must be be an unqualified agreement to refer.

Reliance is placed in this connexion on the judgment of the Bombay High Court in Burjor v. Ellerman City Lines Ltd (1) in which Macleod, C J, expressed the obiter opinion that if there had been an agreement to refer any disputes which might arise to the arbitration of named arbitrators at the option of one of the parties he would hesitate before holding that that was a submission within the proper meaning of the term.

It is contended that a condition precedent to a valid submission is that either party in case of a dispute arisiug on the contract is at liberty to take the necessary steps to get the dispute decided by arbitration.

(1) A. I. R. 1925 Bom. 449=49 Bom. 854.

The definition of "submission," however, is the same under the Indian Arbitration Act 9 of 1899 as under S. 27 Arbitration Act 52 and 53 Vict. C 49 and it was held by the Court of appeal in Woodall v. Pearl Assurance Co (2) that a clause in an agreement which provided that in the event of one of the parties viz, an insurance company requiring arbitration the award of the arbitrator was to be a condition precedent to any right of action in the assured constituted a valid condition precedent to the maintenance of an action.

It has been suggested that this was an obiter opinion and that the real matter for decision was whether defendant could repudiate liability under the policy on the ground that the assured had misdescribed his occupation and at the same time avail himself of the arbitration clause. A reference to the judgments, however, shows that although this was one of the contentions it was only one of them and the Court for the purpose of deciding the appeal construed the arbitration clause and held that it gave the insurance company an option to refer and then decided that notwithstanding this fact the agreement created a valid condition precedent to the maintenance of an action.

Section 4, Arbitration Act like S 27, Arbitration Act 52 and 53 Vict C. 49 seems to me only to require an agreement in writing to submit present or future differences to arbitration and provided the agreement is a valid agreement in writing it seems to me to make no difference whether the provision for the submission of present or future differences to arbitration is unconditional or subject to a contingency, such as the exercise of an option by one of the parties.

It is contended, that a one-sided option is an infringment of the doctrine of "mutuality." It was, however, pointed out by a Bench of this Court in Kewalram Ganshamdas v Donald Graham & Co. (3) that the doctrine of mutuality which was one of the defences in English Law to an action for specific performance has been deliberately left out from the Specific Relief Act by the legislature and that it is not applicable to India

It is lastly contended that under the provisions of S 2 (i), Contract Act, since the agreement to refer was enforceable by one of the parties thereto but not at the option of the other, it was a 'contract voidable at the option of the party on whom the agreement conferred no option. But S 2 (i), Contract Act says nothing of the sort The marginal note to the section is " Interpretation clause " and the section merely explains what is meant by a proposal, a promise, promisee, consideration for the promise, an agreement, reciprocal promises, void agreement, contract, and a voidable contract S. 2 cannot possibly be invoked as a clause importing the doctrine of " mutuality " into the law of contract in India I am of opinion that there is no force in the objection raised on behalf of respondent. 2

An application is now made on his behalf that the Court will under the power conferred by the proviso to S 9 (b), Arbitration Act, set aside the appointment It seems to me doubtful whether the proviso to S 9 (b) has any application The sole arbitrator was not appointed, in pursuance of Cl. (b), as required by the proviso, he was appointed in the exercise of a power created in the agreement. In other words, he was appointed in the exercise of an express power agreed to by the parties, and not in the exercise of a power implied by statute But even if the Court has power the present does not appear to be a fit case in which to exercise it

On 15th September 1928 Messrs. Srikisandas and Co, the pleaders of Messrs Chetoomal Bulchand wrote to respondent 2 informing them, that Messrs Chetoomal Bulchand appointed Bhai Thakurdas Mulchand as their arbitrator and calling on respondent 2 to nominate an arbitrator within 7 days. On 22nd September Messrs N G Dalal and Co, a firm of Bombay solicitors wrote in reply that it was not a question which required to be settled by arbitration and that their clients were not bound to do so On 4th October Messrs. Srikishindas and Co, wrote that their clients appointed their arbitrator as the sole arbitrator. On 19th October 1928 Mr. Chatar Beharilal, advocate of respondent 2 sent a telegram addressed to Chetoomal Bulchand stating that his clients appointed Dwarkadas of Kodhromal Jethanand as their arbitrator.

This was three days before the first hearing and 4 days before the award, and no application was made under the proviso to S 9 (b) to set aside the appointment of the sole arbitrator until 14th January 1929 nearly three months after the award. The only reason urged in support of the application is that respondent 2 was a " few days " late in appointing his arbitrator The correspondence, however, shows that he was a few " weeks " late I think it would be utterly unreasonable, on such a feeble pretext, to set aside an appointment long after the award was made The application is dismissed The award will remain filed with costs on respondent 2.

C. Lobo and Hakumatrai M Advani —for Plaintiffs

Dipchand Chandumal and Kimatrai Bhojraj—for Defendants

Judgment. — These are certain objections filed by the plaintiffs and the defendants respectively against the report of the Official Commissioner who was directed by order of Kennedy, A J C dated 22nd December 1925 to take accounts of the business of Arms and Ammunition carried on by the firm of A Haji Dossal and Sons from year 1907

At the hearing before the Official Commissioner disputes arose as to whether the accounts most be confined to the Arms and Ammunition business alone or whether the defendants should be made to account for dealings in other commodities The Commissioner made a reference to the Court and Barlee, A J C. on the 5th August 1926 gave directions as follows

(1) The Commissioner should take an account of all dealings in Arms and Ammunition into which the defendants can be proved to have entered up to the date of the dissolution of the partnership;

(2) He should take an account if their dealings in other commodities when such dealings were made through the Branch or were financed by money which came to them through the Branch, and

(3) That he should take an account of any transactions in goods other than Arms and Ammunition of which any mention is made in the books and documents of the Branch but may not consider evidence of any other transactions.

Subsequently the appeal against the judgment and decree of Kennedy, A. J. C. came on for hearing before the High Court And the High Court, in their judgment dated 13th June 1927 gave directions to the Official Commissioner to take account in the following words :

" We therefore add to the instructions of the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner (Kennedy, A. J. C.) the instructions that the plaintiffs are not entitled to any interest on the withdrawals by the defendants and that the conclusions should be made simply on the strength of Ex. 42 without any consideration of interest and in the second place they should be allowed nothing for rent, light, municipal rates and the like."

A direction was also added .

" That the Commissioner should go into the question of goodwill and decide what the goodwill of the business amounted to and award to the defendants 1/4th share of that goodwill with interest from the date of the dissolution of the partnership."

The lines on which the accounts of the business have to be taken have therefore to be sought in the directions given in those three orders by Kennedy, A J.C , Barlee, A J C and the High Court. Some of the directions are rather vague and prima facie not mutually consistent It is not easy to pick one's way through the labyrinth of the directions given by three different Courts on three different occasions And in this obscurity and confusion the leaders of the Bar have found their opportunity

At first I thought that the question was concluded by the directions in the judgment of the Court of appeal

" that the calculations should be made simply on the strength of Ex. 42 without any consideration of interest."

It appeared as though the Court of appeal regarded Ex 42 as the final settlement of accounts of the period covered by the statement and that the plaintiffs were therefore debarred from going behind that statement and reopening the account. Mr Lobo, however, argued that this passage in the judgment of the appeal Court must be read in its true context and so read the true construction is that that the appeal Court referred to the calculations of overdrawings alone and its remarks must not be construed as referring to any other items in the account.

As against this interpretation Mr. Dipchand argues that if the Court meant that the plaintiffs should be confined to Ex 42 with regard to calculations of overdrawings alone it would have said so and that there is no warrant for this interpretation of words in the manner suggested by Mr. Lobo. True that in this portion of the judgment the Court of appeal deals with interest and charges for rent, light, municipal rates alone and Mr Lobo's argument appears to be plausible On the other hand it must be remembered that Ex. 42 was a statement prepared by the plaintiffs themselves and produced at the trial as being a correct statement of the profits of the partnership on the footing that defendants had a four annas share. They now contend that that statement is not correct as it did not include the profits made by the partnership from the general business transacted by the Arms and Ammunition Department from the 5th May 1919 to the date of dissolution. It was on this basis they asked that they should be allowed to re-open the account from the 5th May 1919 to the date of dissolution And this contention prevailed with Mr. Barlee, A. J. C. when he formulated the three cannons for the guidance of the Official Commissioner

Whether it was open to the Official Commissioner at the taking of the accounts to allow the plaintiffs to resile from the account which they had themselves produced at the trial as the correct account is an open question I do not feel that I am called upon no decide it in view of the order of Barlee, A J. C. behind which I am unable to go.

But it is possible that the Court of appeal had this aspect of the case in their minds when they gave the directions which I have above set out. And if that was the intention of the Court of appeal, of course, I would be bound by that expression of intention and I would have to treat Ex 42 as a settlement of account till the period 1920 and the account for the remaining period up to the date of dissolution of partnership on 15th May 1922 will be the Potamel prepared by the Official Receiver after the institution of the suit.

In my own personal opinion, I do not think that the plaintiffs should be allowed to re-open the account and go behind Ex. 42 But as I have said the directions given by the three Courts are not very clear and it is possible for the array of the learned pleaders engaged in the case to successfully argue in the Court of appeal that my view of the position is incorrect and therefore I proceed to consider the several items objected to on their merits (Here the judgment proceeds to consider the objections one by one and proceeds) The items then around which the dispute centres in this Court is an item of shop rent at Rs 1,800, an item of interest on a capital of Rs. 75,000 which works out at Rs 4,500 and messing charges which amounts to Rs. 750 These three items added to the actual figures shown in the exhibits above referred to amount to a total of Rs. 18,000 from which deducting Rs. 3,400 the estimated expenditure at 2½% on the general business, Mr. Dipchand claims that the defendants should be awarded Rs 13,700.

Now, the defendant has been held liable to account for business done in arms and ammunition during this period under S. 259, Contract Act, as a partner malgre lui and at first sight it seemed to me that as he invested capital of his own in this business he should in equity be allowed to charge interest on the capital so employed in making up the profit and loss account of the business This view is supported by the observations of L J. Knight Bruce in Ex parte Chippendale (1) "I think" said the L. J. :

"that mercantile usage and the general course of trade dealings do where a partner in a trade had duly and properly advanced money of his own for the purposes of the partnership business so as to become justly a creditor in account with the partnership for the amount raise an implied contract for interest so as to entitle the partner advancing to have his account with the firm credited with interest accordingly, although his partners may not have authorized and may not have known of the transaction at least in the absence of any e press contract to the contrary."

I would have given effect to his view were it not that I find that nothing was claimed on account of interest before the Official Commissioner (Here the judgment discusses other objections to the Commissioner's report and proceeds.) The last set of objections to the Commissioner's report refers to the question of goodwill. The Court of appeal reversing the order of the learned trial Judge directed that the Commissioner should go into the question of goodwill and decide what the goodwill of the business amounted to and award to the defendants four-annas share of that goodwill with interest from the date of the dissolution of the partnership The learned Judges observed :

"The plaintiffs have been taking advantage of the whole of the goodwill of the firm by using the name and the other benefits derived from the continuation of the ammunition business, while defendants have had nothing of that advantage. In these circumstances we are of opinion that the defendants should obtain their share of the goodwill with interest thereupon from the date of the dissolution of the partnership."

Goodwill was defined in one of the earliest leading cases on the subject by

(1) [1853] Ch. 4 D. M. & G. 19, 36.

Lord Eldon in Cruttwell v. Lye (2) as being :

"nothing more than the probability that the old customers will resort to the old place. It is also that good disposition which customers entertain towards the house of business identified by the particular name or firm and which may induce them to continue giving their custom to it . . . . . That it is property is abundantly settled by authority."

This definition was found to be too limited for modern kinds or methods of business as it involves the ancient ideas that goodwill inhered in the premises where the business was conducted. After a period of vacillation and hesitation in the English Courts this matter came up for decision finally before the House of Lords in Trego v. Hunt (3) where Lord Macnaghten designated the goodwill as the very sap and life of the business, without which the business would yield little or no fruit, the result of the reputation and connexion of the firm which may have been built up by years of honest work or gain, by lavish expenditure of money. And Lord Davis in the same case said that the idea of goodwill and what is comprised in the sale of business has generally been developed and grown since the days of Lord Eldon. Following this decision Wood V. C. in Churton v. Douglas (4) observed that the goodwill of a business means every affirmative advantage, as contrasted with negative advantage that has been acquired in carrying on the business, whether connected with the premises of the business or its name or style and everything connected with or carrying with it the benefit of the business. The learned V. C emphatically observed in that case that the name of a firm is very important part of the goodwill

Mr. Lobo on behalf of the plaintiffs has contended that the name and style under which the firm of a Haji Dossul & Sons traded has had little or no saleable value because he argued that the plaintiffs need pay nothing for it as they were entitled to continue to trade under the same name and style even after dissolution ; that the defendants' offer through their pleader to pay a lakh for the goodwill including the name was pure bravado as they are not in a position to raise the money and a decree for more than a lakh is pending against them and that for a third party the goodwill would have no value as the defendants had already started a rival shop dealing in arms and ammunition opposite the present premises I venture to think that there is a fallacy underlying each of these alternatives. I demur to the proposition that the plaintiffs could after dissolution continue to trade under the name and style of a Haji Dossal & Sons on the ground that a Haji Dossul and sons were one unit in the partuership and I consider that the authority of Churton v Doughlas (4) on which Mr. Lobo relies does not support this proposition. As regards the defendants' inability to make a firm offer, the question is not so much the defendants' capacity to raise the money as what price it was worth the defendants' while to pay. And as regards a third party, the question has to be decided having regard to the probability of how far the competition by the defendants after the dissolution would be effective

Unfortunately there is very scanty authority either the English or the Indian Law Reports as to how the value of goodwill of a business has to be assessed. It is said that the English Courts have adopted an arbitrary rule of limiting the value of goodwill to one years' purchase of the net annual profits calculated on an average for three years . cf Davies v Hodgson (5) or that three years net profits represent the value of good-will : Page v Ratliffe (6). But it appears that the American Courts have not adopted any such arbitrary standard : Von Au v Magenheirmer (7) where an attempt was made to prescribe a rule for ascertaining the value of a goodwill by multiplying the average annual net profits for a suitable number of years with reference to the business But as was observed in 20 Harve v Law Rev 235, it would be difficult to deal with the question of value where it arises otherwise than to leave it to be determined as other matters of fact

Mr. Kimatrai on behalf of the defendants has expatiated on the great repute the firm had acquired not only in Karachi but more specially upcountry in Sind, Punjab and Baluchistan and even in far off Bengal and Southern India, the up-country sales of the firm amounting to a value 75% of the total sales. He has elaborated the point that the business which was taken over by the plaintiffs' firm as a derelict business in 1902 investing therein a capital of Rs. 15,000 only, was by the energy and enterprise of the defendants, by successful advertisement on which they spent on an average Rs 200 a month by surviving sale agencies for leading English firms and by their business acumen generally developed into an extremely prosperous business, and the net average profits which in the year 1902 amounted to Rs 22,620 progressively increased till in the year 1920 they amounted to Rs 59,045 Mr Kimatrai lays stress on the fact that the good name acquired by the firm during all these years is a very valuable asset that in a business like the business of arms and ammunition where expert knowledge, reliability and honesty are essential, nothing is more probable than that the old customers will, in the words of Lord Eldon resort to the old place and what is more that it has an attractive force which will bring in more custom. Mr. Kimatrai dwelt on the progressive rate of profits made by the firm without scarcely ever a set-back and had argued that the business of the firm had been established on such a sound and steady basis that it would have little or nothing to fear from competition.

To my mind the effectiveness of possible or probable competition should be one of the main determining factors in the valuation of good will, and in the present case this factor need not have been assessed at a hypothetical valuation because there were data which could have been gathered from the accounts of the plaintiffs' firm after dissolution to show how far the competition by the defendant had affected the plaintiffs' business. But curiously enough no attempt was made by the plaintiffs to produce their profit and loss accounts in the ammunition department after the dissolution nor by the defendants to compel the production of these accounts. Instead of this we have vague statements of witnesses like Dorabji, Byramji and Husseinbhoy salesmen in the rival ammunition firms who state vaguely that after 1922 there was a slump in the ammunition business that prices came down with a crash and that trade was killed and one of the firms had actually to close this department of the business.

It seems to me that if the plaintiffs wished to rely upon facts that business in arms and ammunition became very slack and the slackness was due as whole or in part to competition by the defendant, the best evidence on the point would have been their own books of account which they did not produce before the Official Commissioner. We have, however, a very important clue as to whether there really was a slump in the business after 1922 in the statement (Ex 41) produced by the plaintiffs themselves at the trial showing their turn over of rifles, revolvers, pistols, cartridges, gun-powder, percussion-caps and shots, from the year 1922 to the year 1925. Comparing this statement with the statement of turn over (Ex. 18) for the years prior to the dissolution it seems that far from there being a slump, there was a boom during this period and the average number of arms and ammunition sold during this period is considerably in excess of the average sold during the years prior to 1922. One of the plaintiffs' witnesses Byramji a salesman of Murray & Co, stated that the trade of that firm in arms and ammunition was practically killed by competition during this period. It is possible that one firm's loss was the other firm's gain and the plaintiffs' firm certainly judging from the turn over was none the worse for the competition.

Mr. Lobo argued on this aspect of the case that the turn over is no clue to the profits made and that the plaintiffs being a wealthy firm could afford to lay in a large stock and could sell at little or no profit. I venture to think that the plaintiffs, shrewd men of business as they are, would hardly carry on business in arms and ammunition on a philanthropic basis

Approaching the case from whatever point of view it seems to me that the competition whether by the defendants or by any of the rival firms in no way affected the business of the arms and ammunition department carried on by A. Haji Dossal & Sons; that the profits if anything were even greater after the dissolution than before and that the prosperous condition of this business must be ascribed to the goodwill acquired by the firm during long years of hard and honest work

Goodwill is generally valued at so many years purchase on the amount of profits, cf., Lindley on Partnership 9th Edn, 545. These annual profits are generally calculated on an average of three years In the present case the Official Commissioner has calculated them on an average of the years from 1908 to May 1922 and Mr. Lobo has argued that it would not be right to calculate the average of the last three year's profits as they were war profits. There is considerable force in this argument and I think the most equitable way of calculating profits here would be to take out the average of the profits for six years from 1914 to 1920. On this basis the average profits would amount to Rs. 46,086.

And for the reasons I have set out in the earlier part of this judgment I am of opinion that the valuation of the good will in this case should be made at three years purchase of the net annual profits equal to Rs. 1,38,258 of which 1/4th viz., Rs 34,564-8-0 should be apportioned to the defendants. (Here the judgment dealt with other objections and proceeded) Decree to be in terms of the Commissioner's order as modified by directions given by this Court. The decree to be shown to the learned pleaders on both sides before it is brought up for signature.

I do not think that this is a case in which instalments should be granted to the defendants. The amount adjudged due is on account of over-drawings by the defendants while the partnership was in force and is now ordered to be recovered from them as such over-drawings. It is contended that it is a large sum and if the defendants are compelled to pay at once it must cripple their business. There is nothing to show that the defendants are at the beam-end of their financial resources In any case the plaintiffs are entitled to recover in a lump the amount due to them as amouut due on accounts taken of the partnership. I, therefore, decline to award instalments nor do I think any time should be given to the defendants for the payment of this sum.

As regards costs the Court of appeal has directed that each party should bear their own costs right up to the moment the judgment of that Court was delivered. I make a similar order as to costs except with regard to the Commissioner's fee about which I have already passed orders The balance of the Commissioner's fee to be deposited by each party.

 (a) Penal Code, S. 499, Excep. 9—Wilful misrepresentation or misstatement without due enquiry cannot support plea of "fair comment."

There is a distinction between "fair comment" based on well-known or admitted facts and the assertion of unsubstantiated facts for comment. Where comment is made on allegations of fact which do not exist, the very foundation of the plea disappears. A wilful misrepresentation of fact or any misstatement which an editor could have discovered to be a misstatement if he had made proper enquiries cannot support the plea of "fair comment" as an editor must make due enquiries as to its truth before disseminating the statement of those facts. (English case-law Considered.) [P 91 C 1, 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 439 — Finding of fact will not be interfered unless unsupported by evidence.

It is not open to High Court to go behind the finding of fact in revision unless it is shown that the evidence on the record left no scope for the Courts below to come to that conclusion. [P 92 C 1]

Hatim Tyebji—for Applicant.

Rupchand, A. J. C.—The accused who is the editor of a local newspaper "The Alwahid" has been convicted by the learned City Magistrate of Karachi, under S 500, I P. C. and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 1,000 or in default to suffer simple imprisonment for six months. The appeal filed by him before this Court on its Sessions Court side has been summarily dismissed by the learned Ag. Judicial Commissioner. The accused has now come to us in revision.

The learned counsel has strenuously argued that the case of the accused falls within the purview of Excep. 9, S. 499, I. P. C. and that this was not a case which deserved a summary dismissal by the appellate Court The whole of the argument of the learned counsel is based on a misconception of the law pertaining to the main point at issue It loses sight of the important distinction which has been repeatedly pointed out between "fair comment" based on well known or admitted facts and the assertion of unsubstantiated facts for comment Where comment is made on allegations of facts which do not exist, the very foundation of the plea disappears

In Lefroy v Burnside (No 2) (1), the defendants, a Dublin newspaper asserted that the plaintiff who was the Manager of the Geen's Printing office in Ireland, had corruptly supplied Freeman's Journal with official information and surreptitious copies of official documents A plea of fair comment, stating that Freeman's Journal did somehow get official information earlier than the other papers, and that the defendant bona fide believed that such information could only have been obtained from the Queen's Printing Office, was held bad on demurrer

In Davis v Shepstone (2). The appellants were the owners of a daily newspaper called the "Natal Witness" in which they constantly attacked the official conduct of the respondent, the British Resident Commissioner in Zululand, asserting that he had himself violently assaulted a Zulu chief, that he had set on his native police to assault and abuse others etc They proceeded, on the assumption that the charges were true, to comment on the respondent's conduct in most offensive and injurious language and at the trial in Natal, on 4th September 1883, it was proved that the charges against the respondent were absolutely without foundation. A verdict was given for the plaintiff. On appeal to the Judicial Committee, the decision of the lower Court was affirmed and in delivering the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council, Lord Herschell, L. C observed at p. 190 as follows :

"There is no doubt that the public acts of a public man may lawfully be made the subject of fair comment or criticizm not only by the press, but by all members of the public. But the distinction cannot be too clearly borne in mind between comment or criticizm and allegations of fact such as that disgraceful acts had been committed, or discreditable language used. It is one thing to comment upon or criticize even with severity, the acknowledged or proved acts of a public man, and quite another to assert that he has been guilty of particular acts of misconduct."

In Joynt v Cycle Trade Publishing Co. (3) where the plaintiffs sued the defendants who were the proprietors and editors of a trade journal for libel Kennedy in summing up the case to the jury inter alia said :

"The comment must . . . not misstate facts because a comment cannot be fair which is built upon facts which are not truly stated, and further it must not convey imputations of an evil sort except so far as the facts truly stated warrant the imputation."

These observations were quoted with approval by Vaughan Williams L J. in that case at p. 298 when it came up for appeal and by Cozen Hardy M R in Hunt v Star Newspaper Co Ltd. at p. 317 (4) The learned counsel has invited our attention to the following passage in the judgment of Couch, J., in Howards v Mull (5) at p. 91 ;

"And where a person makes the public conduct of a public man the subject of comment and it is for the public good he is not liable for an action if the comments are made honestly and he honestly believes the facts to be as he states them and there is no wilful misrepresentation of fact or a misstatement which he must have known to be a misstatement if he had exercised ordinary care."

This passage lays down no different rule of law as it enjoins the defendant to make no wilful misrepresentation of fact or any misstatement which he could have discovered to be a misstatement if he had made proper enquiries

Now the charge against the accused was two-fold, namely, that certain allegations of fact which were false had been made against the complainant, and that the comment which was based on those allegations of fact was malicious.

The trial Court found as a fact that the allegations of fact were in the main untrue, and the appellate Court must be deemed to have been of the same opinion when it summarily dismissed the appeal. It is, therefore, not open to us to go behind the finding of fact of these two Courts in revision, unless the accused satisfies us that the evidence on the record left no scope for the Courts below to come to that conclusion. Not only is there ample evidence on the record in support of the findings of the Courts below, and including the unimpeachable testimony of Mr Smart, the then Collector of Karachi, but the language of the allegations of fact mentioned in one of the counts is such that there can be no doubt as to its being untrue and to have been made recklessly. This allegation is as follows :

"On the Moulvi complaining to the Collector Abdul Kadir (complainant) in order to show his pharaohism told all the shipping companies not to sell tickets to the Moulvi who tries to buy them but could not."

Now, not only it is difficult to believe that the complainant would dare to approach all the shipping companies with such request but it has been proved by the evidence of a responsible officer of of one of the principal shipping companies that the complainant never approached them with such a request. There is no allegation much less proof that the accused made any enquiries from any of the shipping companies to find out whether this allegation was true before he made it.

If the accused had realized the responsibilities which attach to the power of an editor in the dissemination of the printed matter and had acted as a cautious journalist would do, it was his duty to have made due enquiries before disseminating such a statement.

In the present case there is no scope for the plea that some of the allegations of fact which are not true were slight unintentional errors which might be excused, and we have no doubt that if the accused had exercised due care and caution some of the allegations should never have been made.

In view of the findings of two Courts that the main allegations of facts are untrue, the very foundation of the plea of privilege, or fair comment fails. It is therefore hardly necessary for us to go into the further question whether the comment based on such allegations was made in good faith. It would be sufficient for us to observe that the expressions "tyrannical" "unfeeling," "dead-hearted man."

"worthless Pharaoh who had out of personal animosity prevented a pilgrim from performing the indispensable religious duty of going to the Haj."

are expressions which prima facie take the case of the accused beyond the range either of fair and honest comment or comment worthy of a responsible editor of any decent and well managed newspaper

We accordingly, summarily dismiss this application.

Revn. Appln. No. 5 of 1926, Decided on 25th February 1929

(a) Civil P. C., S. 115—S. 115 applies to "jurisdiction" alone.

Section 115 applies to jurisdiction alone the irregular exercise or non-exercise of it and the section is not directed against conclusions of law or facts in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved. The refusal to issue a commission for the examination of a witness does not constitute a question in which jurisdiction was involved. A. I. R. 1924 Mad. 541, not foll., A. I. R. 1917 *P. (b) Civil P. C., S. 115—Order of refusal to issue a commission is not a "case."

The order of refusal to issue a commission does not appear to be a case decided within the meaning of S. 115, Civil P. C. 14 S. L. R. 28 ; 44 Bom. 619 ; A. I. R. 1927 Bom. 664 and A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 425, Rel. on.; A. I. R. 1927 Sind 264, Foll. [P 93 C 2]

Aston, A J.C—This is an application under S. 115, Civil P C, for the revision of an order by the learned A. J. C refusing to grant a commission to issue for the examination of a director in the defendants' company who was also a defendant in his personal capacity.

It appears that Mr Walton, the director was passing through Karachi and during his visit he had an interview with the plaintiff in the case on the subject of a lease. Mr. Walton who is a director of other companies proceeded to Calcutta and the defendant company Messrs. Spencer and Co., wished to examine him on commission in Calcutta.

The order passed by the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner was as follows :

"As the witness to be examined is a director of the defendant and is said to be in India on his tour, I cannot allow the application for commission. I shall be prepared to examine him de bene esse on any day he comes down here provided he gives intimation of the date of his arrival at least 8 days before."

It is contended by Mr Nadirshah that a party has a right to the issue of a commission : see Vidya Parna v. Shethamma (1) that a Court will not scrutinize an application of the defendant to be examined on commission with the same strictness as the application of the plaintiff, Akbar Ali Khan v. Herbert Francis (2) and that it will be a great hardship to require a defendant who is not ordinarily residing within the jurisdiction of the Court and who is permanently residing at a great distance from the Court either to attend Court at a great loss and inconvenience to himself or be virtually shut out of his defence : see Adami Khadi v. Isuf Ahmed Mulla (3)

It has, however, been argued by way of preliminary objection that an application for revision in the circum stances will not lie. This preliminary objection is based on two grounds firstly, that the question of jurisdiction is not involved in this case and secondly that the application made to the A. J C and his order thereupon was not a "case" which has been decided within the meaning of S 115.

As regards the first of these points, it was held by the Madras High Court in Vishwanathan Chetty v Somasundaram Chetty (4) that where a Court refused to grant a commission to examine the defendant the High Court can interfere under S. 115 It was, however, pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Balkrishna Udayar v Vasudeva Aiyar (5) that S. 115 applies to jurisdiction alone the irregular execise or non-exercise of it and that the section is not directed against conclusions of law or facts in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved.

I am of opinion that the refusal to issue a commission for the examination of a witness does not constitute a question in which jurisdiction was involved. The applicant's proper remedy it seems to me is to make the order against which he has filed his revisional application one of the grounds of appeal in the event of the suit being decided against him.

With regard to the second point relating to the meaning of a "case" in S. 115, it has been held by the Bombay High Court in Secy. of State v. Narsibhai Dadabhai (6) that the High Court will interfere under S. 115 where the question of jurisdiction is involved in an interlocutory stage. The Madras High Court in Balkrishna Udayar v Vasudeva Aiyar (5) were of the opinion that the word "case" in S 115 might include an exparte application In Municipality of Tando Adami v. Khair Mahomed (7) a Bench of this Court while expressing approval of the decision of this Court in Yusafally Alibhoy v. Haji Muhomed Haji Abdulla (8) set aside under S. 115, Civil P C., an interlocutory order by a lower Court refusing to amend a plaint.

As against these decisions it was held by this Court in the case above quoted viz, Yusafally Alibhoy v. Haji Muhomed Haji Abdulla (8) that a High Court will not interfere under S 115, Civil P. C against interlocutory orders. A similar view was expressed in Bai Rami v. Jaga Dhullabh (9) where the Court held the High Court will not interfere with interlocutory orders passed by the lower Courts in the course of a pending suit This was followed by Percival, J., of the Bombay High Court in Isa Adam v. Bai Mariam (10) and the similar view was expressed by the Full Bench of the Lahore High Court in Lal Chand Mangal Sain v. Behari Lal Mehr Chand (11)

I am of opinion that the preliminary objection must be allowed on both grounds.

The refusal to issue a commission does not appear to me to be an order in which the question of jurisdiction is involved and such an order is not in my opinion a case which has been decided within the meaning of S. 115. I am in

I would therefore dismiss this application with costs.

Percival, J. C —I quite agree.

During the course of the arguments reference was made to two cases to which I myself was a party and I see no reason now to differ from the view taken in these two cases. In the Sind case namely Mt Malanbai v. Nihal Chand (12) the exact point now before this Court came up for consideration and the conclusion of Mr Tyabji, A J. C. and myself was:

"no revision lies against an order of the trial Court dismissing an application for issue of a commission but such an order of dismissal may be made a ground of appeal against the final judgment."

That decision was in accordance with the ruling in Yusafally Alibhoy v Haji Mahomed Haji Abdulla (8) and the view taken by Mr Tyabji and myself was that there was no reason why we should disagree with that ruling. Mr. Tyabji observed there .

"It is urged before us that this decision is erroneous and opposed to the decisions of the other High Courts and that we should therefore refer that decision to a Full Bench so that it may be reconsidered. For the reasons that I have indicated it seems to me that this is not a proper case in which we should refer the matter to the Full Bench but that in the present case we should follow the decision in Yusafally Alibhoy v. Haji Mahomed Haji Abdulla (8)."

That judgment was delivered two years ago but the present position is much the same The decision of different High Courts are to some extent disprepant, some in favour of a mere liberal interpretation on S. 115 and others in favour of a less liberal interpretation So far as Sind is concerned, however, Yusufally Alibhoy v. Haji Mahomed Haji Abdulla (8) has not been overruled and I see no reason why we should not continue to follow that ruling

I agree therefore in the order dismissing the application with costs.

Insolvency No 60 of 1924, and Judl Misc. Appln. No 146 of 1928, Decided on 19th February 1929, by Official Receiver J C.'s Court, Karachi

The actual date of the order of adjudication is the terminating point for the purpose of limitation : A. I. R. 1925 Bom. 480, A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 361, (F. B.,) A. I. R. 1928 Rang. 148, and A. I. R. 1927 Sind 66, Foll. [P 95 C 2]

(b) Transfer of Property Act, S. 53—Suit for cancellation of an instrument of transfer can be brought by the creditor within three years from the date of the cause of action—Similar time is granted to a transferrer and to his receiver—Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 53.

Apart from the Provisions of S. 53, Prov' Ins. Act, which enable the Insolvency Court to declare certain transfers of property as void, it is open to any transferrer to sue in a Court of law for cancellation of a document of transfer of property executed by him on the ground that such transfer was not intended to be acted upon provided he files a suit within three years from the date when the facts entitling him to have the instrument cancelled or set aside become known to him. If the transferrer becomes an insolvent, there is no reason why the Official Receiver in whom the estate of the transferrer has vested or he himself acting under the instruction of the Official Receiver should not institute such a suit after his insolvency provided he does so within three years of the date of his cause of action. It is equally open to any creditor of a transferrer to file a suit within three years of the date of such transfer under S. 53, T. P. Act, if such transfer has been executed with the object of defrauding creditors. There is again no reason why such creditor or the Official Receiver acting for his benefit should not institute a suit under that section subsequent to the date of the order of adjudication. [P 96 C 1 2]

(c) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 53 —Operation of S. 53 is not intended to deprive party of the advantage of the provisions of Limitation Act by instituting a suit.

Legislature by enacting S. 53 did not impliedly intend to deprive the debtor or the creditor of their right to have transfers set aside by instituting a suit before an ordinary tribunal within the longer period of limitation. [P 96 C 2]

(d) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 4 —Where if suit instituted simultaneously with application under S. 4 would be time-barred the Court will not exercise its juris- diction under S. 4 except in special circumstances.

When the Insolvency Court is called upon to exercise its jurisdiction under S. 4 it would except under very special circumstances, refuse to exercise that jurisdiction where a suit instituted on the same date as the application made before it, is liable to be defeated by the plea of limitation, that is to say, it would not afford relief to the aggrieved party to resort to this section when the enforcement of such relief before an ordinary tribunal is statute barred. [P 96 C 2]

(e) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 53 —Relief under S. 53 statute barred— Special provisions of the onus of proof are inapplicable.

Section 53 casts a heavy burden on the transferee to prove his bona fides. If the relief of the Official Receiver under S. 53 is statute barred, it is not open to the Court to rely upon the special provisions of that section for the purpose of throwing the onus on the transferee to prove the bona fides of his transaction. While entertaining such an application under S. 4 of the Act, the Court will deal with the question of onus in the same manner as in an ordinary suit. [P 96 C 2. P 97 C 1]

(f) Transfer of Property Act, S. 53—Meaning of a fraudulent transfer.

A transfer of property is not made with intent to defraud, defeat or delay creditors within the meaning of S. 53 if its effect or object is to prefer one creditor to another, even if it is made with the intention to defeat an anticipated execution. What the section invalidates is a transfer which removes the whole or a part of the debtor's property from the creditor as a body to the benefit of the debtor : *A. I. Judgment.— This is an application under Ss 4 and 53, Prov. Ins Act, praying that the mortgage executed by the insolvent Motiram in favour of his brother Rai Bahadur Dayaram Sawney on 29th February 1924 be set aside as being without consideration, or in the alternative as being a fraud on the creditors

The mortgage was admittedly executed within about five months of the date of the presentation of the petition for insolvency of the firm of Lalchand Motiram of whom Motiram was a partner; but more than two years before the date on which the order of adjudication was passed

There is a divergence of judicial opinion on the question whether for the purpose of computing the period of limitation prescribed by S. 53, the date on which the order of adjudication was passed, or the date of the presentation of the petition for insolvency should be the terminus a quo. The Bombay, Lahore and Rangoon High Courts have adopted the view that the plain meaning of the words used in S 53 should be given effect to, and that therefore the actual date of the order of adjudication is the terminating point for the purpose of limitation, vide Nagindas Dayabhai v Gordhan Dayabhai (1) Hemraj v Krishanlal A I. R 1928 Lah. 361 (F.B.), Mg. Po v. Mg. Htein (2). The same view was, as far as I am aware taken by this Court under old Provincial Insolvency Act 3 of 1907, and has been adhered to uuder the present Act: see Official Receiver v. Tirathdas Mewaram A. I. R. 1927 Sind 66.

On the other hand, the Calcutta, Madras and Allahabad High Courts have taken a contrary view, and have held that S. 53 should be read with S 28 Cl (7) of the Act, that the date of the order of adjudication relates back to the date of the presentation of the petition for insolvency, and that the date of presentation of the petition is therefore the terminus a quo: Rakhal Chandra v. Sudhindra Nath (3); Rangiah v Appaji Rao (4); Sheonath v. Munshiram (5).

The point in issue is not free from difficulties. It has been said that the act of the Court in delaying the passing of the order of adjudication, whether it be due to the tactics adopted by a dishonest debtor or not, should not prejudice the Official Receiver and the creditors who attack the bona fides of a transfer made by the debtor. But there is equally no reason for holding that the delay in passing the order of adjudication, whether the same be caused by the dilatoriness of the creditors or not, should prejudice the unfortunate transferee.

Under S. 53 there is a heavy burden on the transferee to prove his bona fides. If there is delay in challenging the validity of a transaction, it is likely to prejudice him in proving his bona fides. This is especially so in places outside the Presidency Towns where there is a greater risk of evidence not being easily available if it is not recorded at an early date. It is therefore open to argument that the legislature has intentionally provided for a different terminating point in S 53 of the Act than that provided elsewhere

As at present advised, I am not prepared to differ from the view hitherto entertained by this Court which is in conformity with that taken by at least three High Courts The present application so far as it purports to be made under S 53 of the Act is therefore statute barred.

It has been argued that where an application falls within the purview of S. 53 of the Act, S 4 has no application whatsoever, and that, in any case, it will be an improper exercise of the discretion vested in the insolvency Court to entertain an application under that section when it is statute barred under another section of the same Act. I am not prepared to accept the whole of this argument as sound nor am I prepared to accept it in the form in which it has been put before me

Section 4 is a general section It confers jurisdiction on the insolvency Court to deal with all questions arising between the debtor's estate and strangers which would otherwise be triable by an ordinary tribunal, provided the insolvency Court considers it expedient or necessary to decide such questions for the purpose of doing complete justice between the parties or making complete distribution of the debtor's estate It is, however, to be noted that the section does not confer any arbitrary powers on the insolvency Court of deciding such questions in any manner it thinks fit, and in the absence of any express provision in that behalf the Court is bound to decide such disputes according to the same principles of law as an ordinary tribunal, though its procedure may to a certain extent be summary

Apart from the provisions of S 53 of the Act which enable the insolvency Court to declare certain transfer of property as void, it is open to any transferrer to sue in a Court of law for cancellation of a document of transfer of property executed by him on the ground that such transfer was not intended to be acted upon provided he files a suit within three years from the date when the facts entitling him to have the instrument cancelled or set aside become known to him. If the transferrer becomes an insolvent, there is no reason why the Official Receiver in whom the estate of the transferrer has vested or he himself acting under the instructions of the Official Receiver should not institute such a suit after his insolvency provided he does so within three years of the date of his cause of action.

It is equally open to any creditor of a transferrer to file a suit within three years of the date of such transfer under S. 53, T. P Act, if such transfer has been executed with the object of defrauding creditors. There is again no reason why such creditor or the Official Receiver acting for his benefit should not institute a suit under that section subsequent to the date of the order of adjudication.

It is doubtless true that S 53, Prov Ins Act prescribes a period of 2 years for the entertainment of an application to set aside certain transfers including those referred to above. But it cannot even for a moment be contended that the legislature by enacting this section impliedly intended to deprive the debtor or the creditor, as the case may be, of their right to have such transfers set aside by instituting a suit before an ordinary tribunal within the longer period of limitation prescribed by the Limitation Act. If that be so, I can see no reason why the same relief should not be afforded to them by the insolvency Court under S 4, Prov Ins. Act. Whether in the exercise of its discretion the insolvency Court will not assume jurisdiction vested in it under S. 4 of the Act and thereby withdraw the case from the ordinary tribunal is quite another matter.

I am prepared to concede that when the insolvency Court is called upon to exercise its jurisdiction under S 4, it would, except under very special circumstances, refuse to exercise that jurisdiction where a suit instituted on the same date as the application made before it, is liable to be defeated by the plea of limitation, that is to say, it would not afford relief to the aggrieved party to resort to this section when the enforcement of such relief before an ordinary tribunal is statute barred I have advisedly used the expression "except under very special circumstances" as it will presently appear.

I am also prepared to concede another point which is still of greater importance to the opponent and that is this Section 53, Pro Ins. Act casts a heavy burden on the transferee to prove his bona fides. If the relief of the Official Receiver under S. 53 is statute barred, it is not open to the Court to rely upon the special provisions of that section for the purpose of throwing the onus on the transferee to prove the bona fides of his transaction. While entertaining such an application under S. 4 of the Act, the Court will deal with the question of onus in the same manner as in an ordinary suit

Now the application of the Official Receiver is twofold. In the first place he represents the general body of creditors and applies that the mortgage be declared void under S. 53, T P. Act, This application was presented more than 3 years after the date of the mortgage and therefore ordinarily I should have been reluctant to exercise my discretion under S. 4 of the Act. But in the present case, there are certain special circumstances which make it proper for me to entertain the application on that ground as well One Pandit Harnamdas had attached the property of the insolvent Motiram in execution of his decree passed in Suit No 177 of 1926, which was transferred by this Court to the Senior Sub-Judge, Jhelum, for execution. On the application made by the opponent that attachment was raised The creditor then filed a suit under O 21, R 58, Civil P.C. for a declaration that mortgage executed by the debtor in favour of the opponent was void On Motiram being adjudged insolvent, the Senior Sub-Judge, Jhelum, passed an order dated 27th April 1927, holding that Pandit Harnamdas had no right to institute the suit and that the proper person to have the mortgage declared void was the Official Receiver This decision was given on the plea raised by the opponent He cannot blow hot and cold, and it is hardly open to him now to object to the Official Receiver proceeding with the present application as representing the said Harnamdas.

In the next place, the Official Receiver represents the debtor and applies that the mortgage be declared void on the ground that as between the debtor and the opponent it was never intended to be operative Even if it be assumed that the opponent asserted an adverse claim against the debtor in the execution proceedings, the present application being within 3 years of that date, the question of limitation hardly arises

On the merits, however, I am of opinion that the Official Receiver has failed to discharge the burden which would entitle him to relief under the ordinary law. The Official Receiver has established certain cogent facts which create a good deal of suspicion on the bona fides of the claim of the opponent; but they do not amount to sufficient proof. It is established that the opponent knew that the debtor and his brothers were in difficulties when he got the document executed in his favour but that is not enough There is evidence that he used to advance moneys to his brothers-in-law, and that they were indebted to him to a certain extent What their actual indebtedness was it is difficult to ascertain. The bandi produced by him is in no way above suspicion, and the debtors' books have not been produced. The Official Receiver is in the unfortunate position that he has to rely upon the evidence of the debtor whom he is prosecuting for perjury, and certain other offences committed by him against the insolvency law The debtor has given evidence (whether it be true or not), to support the case of the opponent. He has alleged that there was a partition between him and his brothers, and that in pursuance of that partition he was made to pay a sum of Rs 14,000-0-0 to the opponent and to secure the due payment thereof, he executed a mortgage on his property. This may or may not be true But on the materials before me, I am not prepared to hold that a certain sum not less than Rs 14,000-0-0 was due by the family to the opponent. If that is so, it was open to the opponent to hold the insolvent liable for the whole of that sum and to secure himself by getting a mortgage executed in his favour In Musahar Sahu v Hakim Lal (6), their Lordships have observed that:

"A transfer of property is not made with intend to defraud, defeat or delay creditors within the meaning of S. 53, Transfer of Property Act, if its effect or object is to prefer one creditor to another, even if it is made with the intention to defeat an anticipated execution. What the section invalidates is a transfer which removes the whole, or a part of the debtor's property from the creditors as a body, to the benefit of the debtor."

The fact that the insolvent executed the mortgage in favour of the opponent with the object of preferring him to Harnamdas or with the object of avoiding the anticipation of execution in Harnamdas's decree, is not sufficient.

The Official Receiver as representing the general body of creditors cannot therefore have the mortgage set aside unless he shows that it was executed without consideration and for the benefit of the debtor. He cannot for the same reason have it set aside as representing the debtor as mortgage was intended to be acted upon.

I must confess that if S 53, Pro Ins. Act had applied, a good deal might have been said in favour of the Official Receiver But his claim under that section being statute barred, I have no option but to hold that he has failed to establish a case for setting aside the transfer and that this application should therefore be dismissed

As I am not satisfied with certain statements made by the opponent in his evidence, I order that each party should bear his own costs.

First Appeal No. 113 of 1925, Decided on 1st February 1929.

 Contract Act, S. 74—S. 74 does not penalise party making concession to debtor by accepting smaller sum than due if paid in strict conformity to concession — Consent decree providing, in default of payment by defendant on certain date of smaller sum than due, defendant to pay larger sum claimed and due to plaintiff — Time is whole consideration of such contract and such decree cannot be penal.

Section 74 does not penalise a party who is prepared to make a concession in favour of his debtor by accepting a smaller sum than is due to him provided it is paid in strict conformity of the concession shown to him. [P 100 C 1 2]

Where a consent decree provides that in default of payment by the defendant on certain dates of a certain smaller sum of money than is claimed to be due, the defendant shall pay to the plaintiff the larger sum claimed and which is really due plus the costs of the suit with interest at 9 per cent per annum. Time is not only the essence of such contract but it is also its whole consideration and such decree cannot amount to a penalty which means something which the debtor is to pay over and above his original liability as a punishment : Thompson v. Hudson, (1869) 38 *L. Rupchand, A. J. C—This appeal arises in execution proceedings of a consent decree which provides as follows:

"1. That the defendant do pay to the plaintiff Rs. 5,000-0 0 on account of the entire claim and costs in two equal instalments, the first being payable on 15th January 1924, and the 2nd on 15th January 1925. That in case of default in the payment of any of the instalments the defendants do pay to the plaintiffs the whole amount of claim viz., Rs. 9,000-0-0 and costs of the suit amounting to Rs. 723-6 9 with interest at 9 per cent. per annum."

The trial Court held that the defendants had made default in payment of the first instalment, and that the payments made by them to plaintiff 3 of Rs 2,000-0-0 on 2nd February 1924 and Rs. 500-0-0 on 11th February 1924, towards the first instalment were not only out of time, but were not a valid discharge of their liability to pay the amount to the plaintiffs who were jointly entitled to receive the same, but held that as the decree provided for a penalty, it was open to the Court to relieve the defendants of such penalty. The defendants having paid the second instalment in time during the pendency of these proceedings, the Court ordered the defendants to pay an additional sum of two third of Rs. 2,500-0-0 with interest due thereon to plaintiffs 1 and 2 in full satisfaction of their decree.

The main point raised before us is whether the decree provides for a penalty. Now, there is a broad distinction between an agreement which provides that in default of payment of a certain amount on a particular date or dates, the defaulting party shall pay a much larger amount than is admittedly due by him, and an agreement which provides that in default of payment on certain dates of a certain smaller sum than is admitted to be due or is claimed to be due, the defaulting party shall be liable to pay the larger sum admitted or claimed to be due. In the former case, the provision for payment of the larger sum is clearly in the nature of a penalty. In the latter case, where the larger sum is admittedly due the agreement to enforce the payment of such sum does not come within the purview of that expression It would appear that where a larger sum is claimed, but not admitted, the question whether such larger sum was agreed to be paid in the event of default is a penalty or not would greatly depend upon the nature of such claim and on what transpired at the time of the agreement to accept the smaller sum in satisfaction thereof.

The leading English case on this point is Thompson v Hudson (1). In that case, H was indebted to T and S on several accounts to ascertain which three separate suits were pending against him. In one suit a final decree was made fixing the liability of H on one account and ordering him to pay by a day named. H wanted further time and it was agreed between him and T and S that the terms of the order as to payment should be varied, H agreeing not to appeal against the final decree already made, to admit the amounts claimed in the other two suits, and on a certain day to pay a fixed sum and to execute a mortgage, for securing payments in a particular manner of another sum, and T and S agreed thereupon to take a lesser sum than they claimed with a proviso that if H made any default they should be at liberty to recover their whole debt He carried out his agreement in part and made default in payment of the amount due by him according to the manner stipulated and on T and S enforcing payment of the full amounts claimed by them pleaded that the proviso in that behalf was a penalty which could not be enforced in equity. That proviso was in the following terms;

"In case Lord Downe, or the defendants shall not pay and secure the said sums to the plaintiffs in manner aforesaid, or if a good and satisfactory mortgage shall not be executed to the plaintiff for the said sum of £ 25,613 15s. and interest, or if the defendants shall fail in performing all or any of the stipulations on their part hereinbefore contained, then the plaintiffs shall be at liberty to recover the said principal sums, interest and costs decreed or claimed to be due to them in the said several suits, and to adopt all such proceedings in the said several suits or otherwise for aiding their recovery of their said several claims as they may be advised."

It was held that the plea that the said proviso was in the nature of a penalty could not be sustained. At p. 441 Lord Westbury has observed as follows:

"In answer to the questions which they were required to answer in the chambers of the Master of the Rolls they thought that it was very rational and very right to say, if a creditor, tells his debtor, 'provided you pay me half the debt, or two-thirds of the debt, on an appointed day I will release you from the rest' and will accept the money so paid in discharge of the whole debt, but if you do not make payment of it on that day, then the whole debt shall remain due to me and I shall be at liberty to recover it'. There would be no doubt at all that the proposition was both reasonable and accordant with common sense. But the principal has not been accepted by the two tribunals before which the case has been heard. "The Master of the Rolls appears to have thought that the residue of the debt in the case I have put would be converted into a penalty, and that the penalty could not be enforced. It is impossible to hold that money due by contract can be converted into a penalty A penalty is a punishment, an affliction, for not doing something. But if a man claims to be entitled to receive at a future time, on the default of his debtor, that which he is now entitled to receive it is impossible to understand how that can be regarded as a penalty. I have not, therefore, the least hesitation in stating that, if the Master of the Rolls is rightly reported, there was a strange confusion at the moment prevailing in his Lordship's mind, and that it could not have been present to him at the moment when he delivered his judgment that the rest of the debt still remained due by contract, and that what was due by contract could not be a penalty."

At p. 435 the Lord Chancellor has said:

"It is equally clear on the other hand that where there is a debt actually due, and at the time when the debt becomes due and is not paid, an agreement is entered into for granting to the debtor further indulgence, and the creditor is willing to allow him certain advantages and deductions from that debt as well as to extend the time for its payment, if adequate and proper security in the mind of the creditor be afforded him as his part of the bargain in respect of which he is to make these concessions then it is perfectly competent for the creditor to say: "If the payment be not made mode et forma as I have stipulated, then forthwith the right to the whole original debt shall revert to me, and it shall be open to me to proceed and to exercise all those powers which I have for compelling payment of the original debt, in other words, I am entitled to be replaced in the position in which I was when this agreement which has been broken was entered into. Therefore, as far as the law of the case is concerned, there can be no difficulty in the matter."

In this case H was disputing the validity of the final decree passed in one suit and the amount claimed in the other two suits, but in consideration of the agreement to pay a small sum on certain conditions he waived his right to file an appeal in the suit which was decreed and submitted to decrees for the sums claimed in the other two suits, and he was made to pay the said sums.

(1) [1869] 38 L. J. Ch. 431=4 H. L. 1.

In the later case of Ex parte Burden In re Neil (2) a creditor who had issued a debtor's summons in respect of a judgment debt of £344 agreed to accept a cheque for £105 and three bills of exchange for £50 each accepted by a third party, and on payment of the cheque and bills in due course to give a receipt in full settlement of the judgment debt, but that in default of payment of any or either of the cheque or bills, the creditor was at liberty to proceed for the full amount The Court consisting of James Cotton and Lush, L. J. J., unanimously held that the creditor was entitled to proceed for the full amount. Cotton, L J. expressed his view thus :

"It is said that the provision for the revivor of the original debt is in the nature of a penalty. I know of no case in which the equitable doctrine about penalties has been applied to a case in which a creditor agrees to reduce the amount of his claim on certain conditions but that on the failure of the debtor to fulfil any one of those conditions the original rights of the creditor shall revive, and in my opinion the doctrine ought not to be applied to such a case."

Lush, L. J., has expressed the same view in different terms as follows :

"Is there any equitable ground for relieving the debtor? It has been argued that the provision for the revivor of the debt is a penalty. I understand penalty to be something which a debtor is to pay over and above his original liability, as a punishment. But that is not so in the present case."

It would follow from both these cases that where a party claims to be entitled to receive a larger sum which is really due to him, in the event of default in payment of the smaller sum which he has agreed to take subject to certain conditions, the claim for money really due to him cannot be converted into a penalty which means something which the debtor is to pay over and above his original liability as a punishment, and no such question can therefore arise.

Now, it is no doubt true that S. 74, Contract Act, has done away with the distinction between a penalty and liquidated damages, but there is nothing in that section or in the illustrations thereto to show that it was ever intended to lay down any different law than was laid down in the two cases cited above, and to penalise a party who was prepared to make a concession in favour of his debtor by accepting a smaller sum than was due to him provided it was paid in strict conformity of the concession shown to him

Our attention has been invited to Mt. Nand Rani Kuer v Durga Das Narain (3), where a compromise decree provided that if the defendant paid to the plaintiff Rs. 1,000-0-0 immediately and Rs. 12,000-0-0 on or before 31st March 1923, the claim of the plaintiffs would be discharged in full, but that on failure to pay the above instalments, the plaintiff would be entitled to realize her full claim for Rs 20,989-9-0 with costs and future interest, the defendants had made default in payment of Rs 12,000-0-0 on the due date, the Court condoned the delay.

It appears that the attention of their Lordships was not drawn to the above decisions. The judgment is a short one and all that it says on this point is :

"On the other hand, it seems to be now settled that where the agreement is for the payment of money on a prescribed date, and that upon default of payment on that date money or land is to be forfeited, time is not of the essence of the contract."

Now, these observations are perfectly correct, and perfectly intelligible, if they are applied to a case where the party in default is made to pay a larger sum than is due by him. But with all respect, I fail to see how time could be treated to be a non-essential term in the contract in the case where the creditor agrees to forgo part of his admitted claim provided he gets the lesser sum on a particular date In such a case time is not only the essence of the contract, but the whole consideration of it. It is in consequence of the promptness of payment of a part of the debt at once that the creditor agrees to forgo the remainder, and it is not a case in which equity relieves against time, for if it did, it would be violating its rules, as per Master of the Rolls in Ford v. Earl of Chesterfield (4).

Our attention has also been invited to the case of Ram Gopal Mookerjea v. Samuel Masseyk and Thomas J Kenny (5) ; but in that case the point which their Lordships were required to adjudicate upon, was whether there had been any failure by the respondents in the substantial performance of the contract and if there had been any default to whom such default was attributable (p. 258). In that case the offer of payment had been made in time by the respondents but it was urged before their Lordships that that offer was no valid offer on three grounds. first, that the offer did not include the interest which ought at that time to have been paid, second, that the person to whom money was offered had no authority to receive money on behalf of the appellant, and third, that the respondent was bound to seek out the appellant on the date of payment and to tender him the exact amount and interest then due (p 259) As to the first objection their Lordships observed that the omission to include interest arose from a misapprehension of the ambiguous words of the agreement, and that such omission was not the reason why the money was refused. As to the second objection, their Lordships observed that they were by no means satisfied that the person to whom the money was tendered had no authority to receive the money As to the third, it was said that there seemed to have been uncertainty on both sides as to the place where the ikrarnamah was to be produced and the money paid. After discussing the evidence their Lordships held that they were satisfied that there was a bona fide endeavour on the part of the respondent fairly to perform his agreement.

The case of Ford v. Earl of Chesterfield (4), was cited before their Lordships as good authority but an attempt was made to distinguish it on the ground that in the case before their Lordships a third person had undertaken the liability of the debt and to incur the penalty. But the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council is silent on that point. It cannot therefore for a moment be suggested that the principle laid down in Ford's case was considered as inapplicable to India.

The case of Rai Balkishindas v. Raja Run Bahadursing (6), is an authority for the proposition that a penal clause contained in a consent decree may be relieved by the Court, though it does not so expressly decide, and proceeds upon that assumption. But it goes no further and if carefully analysed, it, on the contrary, helps the plaintiffs to a certain extent. In that case certain instalments were allowed on certain conditions. Art. 2 of the solehnamah provided for payment of interest at eight annas per cent. and further provided for the amounts paid being appropriated in a certain manner and how they were to be paid. The third article which is the important one ran as follows :

"If the first instalment be not paid on 30th Bhadon 1281 Fasli, the two consecutive instalments be not paid, then the plaintiff shall have the power to take out execution of the decree and realize his entire decretal money with interest at the rate of one rupee per cent. per mensem from defendants and their properties In case of default, the decree-holder shall be entitled to take out execution, and realize interest on the entire decretal money from the date of such default to that of realization, at the rate of one rupee per cent. If the first instalment be not paid on 30th Bhadon 1281 Fasli, then the decree-holder shall have the power to realize the principal with interest at the rate of one rupee per cent. per mensem from the date of this solehnamah, to which your petitioners, defendants, shall have no objection. If at any time within the term defendants desire to pay any sum over and above Rs. 30,000 0-0 the plaintiff shall have no objection to receive the same"

In dealing with the effect of these different clauses in the decree, at p. 165 it is said .

". . . their Lordships are of opinion that the construction of the decree was substantially correct, though they do not concur with the High Court that the payment of a double rate of interest was in the nature of a penalty. The solehnamah was an agreement fixing the rate of interest, which was to be at the rate of 6 per cent under certain circumstances, and 12 per cent. under others."

And at p. 170 it is said :

"It is scarcely necessary to refer to the argument that the stipulation for payment of interest at 12 per cent. per annum upon the whole decretal money was a penalty from which the parties ought to be relieved. It was not a penalty, and even if it were so, the stipulation is not unreasonable, inasmuch as it was a mere substitution of interest at 12 instead of 6 per cent. per annum in a given state of circumstances."

It would, therefore, appear that the mere fact that a higher rate of interest was provided by a consent decree, would not necessarily render the payment of such higher rate a penal rate. Different clauses of the decree must needs be construed as a whole; Bissessar Das Daga v. Emanuel Vas (7). If both the clauses of the decree in suit are construed together, it would appear that it was intended to provide that there was to be a decree for the whole amount due with interest and costs, but that if Rs 5,000-0-0 was paid in certain instalments no further sum was to be recovered and that it proceeded on the admission that the sum claimed was really due to the plaintiffs

No attempt has been made to prove that Rs. 9,000-0-0 was not the sum really due or that the claim in suit was exaggerated and so excessive that the respondents could not possibly have agreed to a decree for that amount except on the basis of the excess over Rs. 5,000-0-0 being by way of a penal provision for non-payment of the amount really due by the defendants on the dates stipulated by them. On the contrary, it would appear that the sum of Rs 9,000-0-0 was approximately the amount justly due by the defendants and that the defendants were securing a substantial concession by agreeing to pay the sum of Rs 5,000-0-0 promptly. A reference to the pleadings makes it abundantly clear that the minimum sum which the plaintiffs bona fide believed to be due was Rs 9,000-0-0. They had asked for a decree for this amount or such further sum as was found due to them. The respondents were the accounting parties and had suppressed their books A commissioner had been appointed to ascertain what amount should be decreed to the plaintiff, and there was a chance of the defendants being made to pay more than Rs 9,000-0-0 Lastly the defendants 2 were minors, and the Court's sanction was duly obtained before the compromise decree was passed It is hardly believable that the Court agreed to be a party to a consent decree which rendered the minors liable to a penalty of paying about Rs. 5,000-0-0 on a just claim of an equal amount, unless the amount justly due was paid in two equal instalments within a period of about eighteen months from the date of the decree which was 15th May 1923. If, on the other hand, it is borne in mind that as the defendants were agriculturists and the recovery of the money under the provisions of S. 29, Deccan Agriculturists Relief Act, would mean any amount of delay in its recovery, the plaintiffs were prepared to make a substantial reduction of the amount due provided the defendants paid the sums agreed upon on the stipulated dates. I am of opinion that on a true construction of the decree read as a whole, and in the light of the other circumstances of the case, the decree was not a penal decree and that it could not therefore be relieved against, and the decree of the lower Court cannot therefore be maintained. The defendants have paid Rs. 2,500-0-0 to plaintiff 3 and have deposited a further sum of Rs. 2,500-0-0 in Court. The share of the plaintiff 3 in the full amount decreed is over Rs. 3,000-0-0 The defendants are therefore entitled to full credit for Rs 2,500-0-0 paid to plaintiff 3, the plaintiffs being at liberty to settle their equities inter se.

I hold that plaintiffs 1 and 2 are entitled to proceed with the execution application under O. 21, R. 15, Civil P. C., for recovery of the full amount of Rs. 9,000-0-0 and costs as provided in the decree less Rs 2,500-0-0 paid to plaintiff 3 and Rs 2,500-0-0 and such further sum as has been deposited in Court with interest at the stipulated rate, such interest being charged on the sums actually due from time to time I would accordingly allow this appeal and order the learned Judge below to deal with the execution application according to law and in the light of the above findings. Taking into consideration all the circumstances of this case, I would order that each party should bear his own costs throughout.

Judgment.—This is a suit in forma pauperis. The plaintiff is the widow of one Raghunath Nagji. She claims in this suit certain past maintenance and a declaration that she is entitled to future maintenance which should be made a charge on the joint family property and that she is entitled to reside in the family house Defendant 1 is her husband's brother Defendants 2 and 3 are his sons. Defendants 5 to 7 are the cousins of defendant 1 and their sons Defendants 8, 9 and 10 are widows belonging to the same family. The plaintiff has based her case on the plea that all the defendants form members of a joint Hindu family and possess joint family property which has descended to them from a common ancestor, and that, therefore, she is entitled to a decree against all of them. The plaintiff has further claimed the return of her ornaments valued at Rs. 3,000. The defendants have inter alia contested her claim on several grounds Their case is that defendant 1 and his cousins severed their joint family tie in the year 1906 and that after that date they messed and lived separately and carried on a separate business. In 1913 they executed a deed of release reciting the family history up to that date. According to that deed of release defendant 1 alone is liable to maintain the plaintiff.

From 1923 to 1924 or thereabouts, defendant 1 and the other defendants continued as tenants-in-common of certain ancestral properties In that year defendant 1 and his cousin Tejsi who carried on business in partnership sustained heavy losses. They received monetary help from the defendants Tikamji and Khimji and in consideration of such help they executed a deed of conveyance transfering their right, title and interest in the family property, which had up to that date remained undivided in favour of Tikamji and Khimji. The defendants deny that she deposited any ornaments with them, and say that the plaintiff is in possession of those ornaments and other property from which she can maintain herself and that her right for maintenance, if any, is against Doongersi only, and that she can not claim any relief against any of the other defendants or against the family property which has been validly transferred

The following issues have been raised by the Court

(1) " Was there on or about 3rd December 1906, a partition of joint family property as alleged in para. 6 of written statement of defendants 4 to 10 ?

(2) Has the family dwelling house referred to in para. 10 of the plaint become the sole and absolute property of defendants 4 and 6 for reasons alleged in para. 8 of the written statement of defendants 1 to 10 by virtue of alleged conveyance of 31st May 1922 ?

(3) What is the effect of the aforesaid two transactions on plaintiff's right of maintenance and residence ?

(4) Is the plaintiff entitled to a right of residence in the house referred to in para. 10 of the plaint ?

(5) Is the plaintiff entitled to receive maintenance and if so, at what rate and from whom ?

(6) What amount, if any, is the plaintiff entitled to recover on account of arrears of maintenance and from whom ?

(7) What amount, if any, is the plaintiff entitled to recover and from whom on account of her pilgrimage, funeral and other death expenses ?

(8) What is the amount of debts, if any, which the plaintiff has incurred ?

(9) Is the plaintiff entitled to a charge on the property mentioned in para. 10 of the plaint on account of various sums claimed by her ?

(10) Did the plaintiff deposit ornaments mentioned in the schedule to the plaint or any of them with defendants 4 to 6 and what is the value thereof ?

(11) If so, what relief is she entitled to in respect of them ?

(12) What relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled to ?

(13) General."

There is hardly any dispute about the facts which have been conclusively proved by documentary evidence. It appears from the recitals contained in the deed of release that one Umersi died about 60 years ago. He had seven sons, namely, Morarji, Nagji, Thakursi, Veiji, Ramji, Anandji and Jethabhai. Morarji, died about 22 years ago leaving his son Tikamji defendant 4 in the suit. Tikamji's son is Moolji defendant 5. Nagji died about 32 years ago leaving two sons Rughnath and Doongersi.

Rughnath died about 25 years ago and the plaintiff is his widow. Doongersi is defendant 1 and his two sons are defendants 2 and 3 Thakursi died about 45 years ago leaving a son Jivraj, who separated from his brother prior to 1906 and whose heirs are not on the record. Velji died leaving no issue. Ramji left two sons Tejsi and Jadhowji. Tejsi died in 1925 leaving a widow defendant 10, and a son defendant 7 Jadhowji died about 20 years ago leaving his widow Jivibai, defendant 9. Anandji died about 25 years ago leaving as his widow defendant 8. Jethabhai died about 22 years ago leaving a son Khimji defendant 6.

After the severance of the joint family tie between the different branches of the family, Doongersi and Tejsi carried on business in partnership in Khataoo Makan Cloth Market in the name of Nagji Umersi, while Khimji and Tikamji carried on business in partnership in sundries in the name of Morarji Umersi, and also in cloth in the same name The release deed Ex 10/1 expressly provides that Doongersi has been and shall continue to pay Rs. 10 per month to the plaintiff for her maintenance. It has been proved by the evidence of Doongersi and the rent-book kept by him on behalf of himself and his tenants-in-common, that from 1906 to 1913 the amount of maintenance paid by him to the plaintiff was debited to his own personal account. He states that he likewise maintained the plaintiff up to 1922 when his business failed, and the entries for that period were in a book kept by Tejsi which is missing. For the purpose of proving that even after the execution of the release deed the defendants continued separate, entries have been put in from the account of the parties from 1913 right up to 1924, to show that the firm consisting of Doongersi and Tejsi had monetary dealings with the firm of Tikamji and Khinji, and that in 1924 Tikamji and Khimji helped Tejsi and Doongersi with large sums of money, a part of which they borrowed from the banks. On 30th May 1922, Doongersi and Tejsi executed a sale deed for the sum of Rs. 1,35,000 conveying half share in the properties owned by them as tenants-in-commons, to their cousins Tikamji and Khimji. It has been proved from the entries in the books that over and above this amount for which they sold their half share they are liable to Tikamji and Khimji for a further sum of about Rs 35,000. Against this mass of evidence, we have only the word of the plaintiff that all the defendants continued as members of the joint Hindu family up to the date of suit and continued to maintain her out of the joint funds. It is, therefore, abundantly clear that the plaintiff can not succeed on the case as set up by her in the plaint Her suit for maintenance as against the joint family property is, therefore, liable to be dismissed in limine.

Certain points have, however, been urged on her behalf. I shall deal with them though they do not strictly arise on the pleadings It is contended in the first place that as the plaintiff's husband died at a time when all the defendants formed members of a joint Hindu family, her claim for maintenance and residence was a charge upon the family property, at least in the sense that it was incumbent upon the members of the different branches of the joint family property to maintain her so long as they remained joint and at the time of partition either to make due provision for her maintenance or at any rate to obtain her consent to a partition which made no such provision but provided that only one member of the joint family should maintain her. My attention has been invited to the case of T. Subbarayadu Chetti v. T. Kamalavalli Thayaramma (1), and to the passage of West and Buhler at p. 791, which has been referred to in that case. Now there can be no doubt that so long as the family continues to be joint, a widow of a coparcener has to look up to the manager of the family for her maintenance. It is therefore open to her to enforce her right against any part of the joint family property in the hands of such manager In that sense her right is enforceable against the whole family property and against every member of the family who claims a joint interest in such property. Where she has instituted a suit for a declaration that her right of maintenance should be made a charge on the property before partition, the doctrine of lis pendens would apply, and any partition which takes place subsequent to the institution of her suit cannot affect her right It is no doubt true that in the above case their Lordships did not proceed on the doctrine of lis pendens but on certain general principles discussed therein But it is worthy of note that the learned Chief Justice was careful in stating that he preferred to deal with the facts of that case which had actually arisen and that he was not prepared to go into the further question as to the effect of a partition taking place before the institution of a suit by the widow for a declaration of her right of maintenance and residence. That case is therefore no authority for the proposition that there is an obligation upon the members of the joint family belonging to different branches to make due provision for the maintenance and residence of the widow of a coparcener of one of the branches. The passage in West and Buhler reads as follows :

" Other liabilities, that is provision for the maintenance or portions of persons not entitled to shares, may be distributed by agreement amongst the cosharers. But the estate at large is liable at least in the hands of the members of the family making a partition and coparceners who desire to limit their responsibilities must obtain the assent of the persons mentioned. "

Though this passage is entitled to great weight, it does not expressly provide that the responsibilities of one branch continue for the maintenance of the widows of another branch. Further-more it does not appear to be supported by any authority either from the Hindu texts or from the case law. If this passage is intended to mean that coparceners belonging to different branches continue to be responsible for the maintenance of widows and of persons who are entitled to a share belonging to another branch, unless they make adequate provision for them or obtain their consent, I am of opinion that it cannot be accepted as sound law, and is one which is likely to lead to anamolous results. For instance where a coparcener dies leaving a widow and a son, it is somewhat difficult to see how his brothers can compel the son to make separate provision for the maintenance of the widow as a condition precedent to effecting a partition on pain of rendering themselves liable to the widow at a future date in the event of her son getting bankrupt. Again it is difficult to see how coparceners belonging to one branch can be compelled to make provision for the maintenance of a person who is congenitally deaf and dumb and who is living jointly with his own brother, both brothers belonging to different branches, and to run the risk of maintaining such person in the event of his brother becoming a bankrupt notwithstanding the fact that the partition effected by them was absolutely fair and square It is hardly necessary to develop this point any further as it would appear that the plaintiff knew for no less than 18 years that Doongersi had separated from his cousins and she remained content to receive her maintenance from him It is not open to her now to contend that as her assent was not obtained to the partition, the members of the different branches continue to remain liable for her maintenance. If she objected to the arrangement made for her, it was her duty to have sued for declaration of her rights at once and probably her maintenance would have been made a charge on the share of Doongersi in the ancestral property. Not only did she remain silent but received increased allowance from Doongersi in subsequent years She is clearly estopped from falling back on the members of other branches after Doongersi has become a pauper

The next point urged is with regard to her right of residence. My attention has been invited to a passage in Gour's Hindu Law, p. 481, S 84, and the commentaries thereon. It has been argued that as the plaintiff was living in the family house up to the date of the sale to the knowledge of Tikamji and Khimji, her right of residence cannot be defeated by the sale to them of the right, title and interest of Doongersi. On the other hand, my attention has been invited to a decision of this Court on its High Court side in the case of Thanwerdas v. Mt. Vani (2), which has been followed with approval by this Court on its High Court side in Kawalmal v. Issribai, A. I. R 1926 Sind 135 In the case of Thanwerdas, Pratt, J. C , said :

" The right of residence is therefore a right to a provision for residence and is included in the general right of maintenance. Like the right of maintenance it is an equitable and not a legal right . . . It is an equity binding on the conscience of the coparceners, but it may be defeated by bona fide alienation which is not so justified or which is merely a pretext to shuffle off the obligation of maintenance. In the case of an improper alienation the equity is enforceable against the alienee under the same conditions that apply to any other equity i. e., the transferee takes subject to the equity unless he has taken for value and without notice of the right. This is the law laid down in Lakshman v. Satyabhamabai (3) and now codified in S. 39, T P. Act."

Whatever may be the law in force outside Sind, I am bound to give effect to this ruling. If the right of residence of the plaintiff is included in her general right of maintenance, it would appear that unless it could be proved that the transfer by Doongersi of his interest in the family property was a mere pretext to shuffle off the obligation of her maintenance or was not otherwise bona fide, she has no right of residence either. If that be so, there is no doubt that in this case there is no question that the alienation was in no way brought about with the object of defeating her rights. It was a bona fide alienation made at a time of great need when on account of the fluctuation in exchange, Doongersi and Tejsi had suffered heavy losses in their trade and were obliged to transfer their property to avoid insolvency It is no doubt true that Doongersi still continues to live in the family house and receives an allowance of Rs 100 from Tikamji and Khimji who are both well off But Tikamji and Khimji have done this out of charity, and as a matter of fact, out of the same motives they have throughout the suit offered to maintain the plaintiff but under the evil advice of her brother she has refused to accept their offer and has insisted upon her legal rights, if any, being declared by the Court. Every endeavour made in Court to make her realize her position has failed, and though I regret very much that my decision might result in her having to depend for her maintenance on the charity of others, I am afraid I cannot help it I hold that she has no right to reside in the family house as no part of it belongs at present to Doongersi. The plaintiff's right to her maintenance by Doongersi depends on his being in possession of ancestral property If the plaintiff failed to sue for a charge being created on such property before it was sold in payment of Doongersi's debts, the plaintiff is without any remedy and her suit must fail. She has claimed maintenance at the rate of Rs. 100 per month and has claimed certain other large sums of money. As evidence has been led on those points, I propose to deal with them.

It appears that though up to 1913 the plaintiff received only a sum of Rs. 10 per mensem from Doongersi, her maintenance was increased from time to time and in 1924 it was increased to Rs. 25 per month. The cost of living is at present somewhat less A sum of Rs. 20 per month would at present be ample for her, she is expected to cook for herself, and though one of the witnesses said that she would require a person to buy foodstuffs for her and that this would cost her Rs 10 per month, I am inclined to the view that she can easily arrange to get her foodstuffs without any such charge The witnesses called on her behalf seemed to be inclined to exaggerate the cost of expenses, but on the whole I am inclined to the view that Rs. 20 would be sufficient for her maintenance. I am also inclined to the view that she would require Rs 5 more to secure a room for herself to live in.

With regard to her claim for expenses of pilgrimage, I think there is no evidence to show that there is any obligation on a widow to go on pilgrimage more than once. She has admittedly been to pilgrimage on one occasion, and therefore she is not entitled to a further provision in that behalf

With regard to provision being made for her funeral caste feast, I think it is clear from the evidence that this is not obligatory and that she is not entitled to the same

With regard to the return of her ornaments, it is sufficient to observe that except her own word, there is no evidence to prove that she handed over ornaments to any of the defendants and they have denied receipt thereof I hold that she has failed to prove that she entrusted the ornaments to the defendants. I shall now proceed to record my findings on the issues:

Issue 1 —In the affirmative;

Issue 2:—In the affirmative;

Issue 3:—The effect of these two transactions is that the plaintiff's right, if any, for maintenance was against the property allotted to defendant 1 at the partition and that all that she is entitled to in respect of her claim for residence is a fair allowance for getting on rent a house to live in,

Issue 4:—In the negative.

(3) [1877] 2 Bom. 494.

Issue 5 :—The plaintiff is not entitled to receive maintenance as her suit is for maintenance and subsequent to the sale by Doongersi there is no evidence to show that there is any part of the ancestral property from which she could receive an allowance. (Part 2) :

That if she has any right to receive any maintenance including residence, it is at the rate of Rs. 25 per month and from defendant 1 ;

Issues 6 to 8 :—As there is no property in the hands of defendant 1 and as the plaintiff has no right to fall back on the property of defendants 3 and 4, no finding is necessary on these issues.

Issue 9 :—In the negative ;

Issue 10 :—In the negative ;

Issue 11 :—In the negative ;

Issue 12 :—The plaintiff is entitled to no relief

Issue 13 :—The plaintiff's suit is dismissed.

As the defendants do not press for costs, I make no order as to costs

Misc Appeal No. 33 of 1925, Decided on 22nd January 1929.

Civil P. C., Sch. 2, Rr. 1 and 2—Court has no jurisdiction to refer disputes on award made by arbitrator outside Court so as to modify award.

When an award is made by arbitrator outside Court and afterwards an application is made to the Court under R. 20 to file the same, the Court has no jurisdiction to refer the disputes on the award to arbitration so as to modify the award inasmuch as it cannot itself do so, but has either to order the award to stand filed and to pass a decree in accordance with it or to order that the application to file an award be dismissed A. I. R. 1925 P.C. 299, Rel. on. [P 109 C 1]

Judgment.—The facts of this case are somewhat complicated. It appears that there were several disputes between three different sets of parties referred to as Banias, Othas and Pirs The Othas and the Pirs claimed to be owners of certain agricultural land. They had disputes inter se as to their respective shares. Pending settlement of those disputes the Othas had leased an eight anna share in the land to the Banias and the Pirs had likewise given a lease of the remaining eight annas share to them. Some of the Othas executed a mortgage in favour of the Banias. They also borrowed certain money not secured by any mortgage. The litigation between the Othas and the Pirs resulted in the Othas getting six annas and ten pie share in the land. Thereafter they disturbed the possession of the Banias and subsequently transferred their six annas and ten pie share which they had succeeded by establishing in litigation to the Pirs At that time the lease of the Banias was still continuing and the Pirs were anxious to get back the land and to have the unexpired portion of the lease cancelled. On the other hand, the Banias were anxious to get compensation for disturbance of possession and also further compensation for the cancellation of the lease. They also wanted payment of their secured and unsecured claims, against the Othas The parties entered into one single reference for settlement of all those disputes in favour of one Walabdas who passed an award dated 29th January 1923.

According to that award he ordered that the unexpired period of the lease be cancelled and awarded a sum of Rs 15,000-0-0 from the Othas and the Pirs jointly as compensation both for disturbance of their possession during the continuance of the unexpired period of the lease which was cancelled He also passed an award against the Othas for Rs. 3,500-0-0 in respect of the mortgage and for Rupees 5,000-0-0 in respect of the money claim. An application was made by the Banias to the Court under Sch 2, R 20, Civil P C., for filing the reference and the award and for a decree being passed in terms thereof Several objections were filed to the maintainability of the application and the validity of the award. On the date fixed for hearing all the parties except one Ibrahim, defendant 3 in the case who is an "Otha" put in a petition to the Court asking that their disputes be referred to the arbitration of Messrs. Gopaldas and Motiram who were acting as pleaders for them in those proceedings. This petition is in the ordinary form as prescribed and inter-alia recites as follows

"The parties who are all interested in the disputes have agreed to refer the matter to the arbitration of Messrs. Gopaldas and Motiram, pleaders, who will have power to confirm, modify, or alter the award in any manner they think just and proper. Defendant 3 is given up for the purpose of this reference."

On that petition the Court passed the following order

"Parties agree to the reference. Suit is referred to arbitrators. Award due on 25th August (1911)."

The arbitrators passed an award holding that the first award be filed subject to certain modifications namely that the amount of Rs 15,000-0-0 Rs. 3,500-0-0 and Rs 5,000-0-0 be reduced to Rs. 8,200-0-0 3,200-0-0 and Rs. 2,750-0-0 respectively. They also allowed certain instalments to the Othas and the Pirs which were different from those provided in the first award Several objections were filed against this second award which have all been disallowed and the Court has passed a decree in terms of the first award as modified by the second award. It is against that decree that the Pirs have come to us in appeal. Now one of the main objections urged on behalf of the Pirs is that assuming that a petition to file an award under R. 20, Sch. 2, Civil P. C., is a suit within the meaning of R. 1 of that Schedule and that disputes arising in proceedings filed under the provisions of R. 1, the only award which the arbitrators could have passed in pursuance of the mandate issued to them by the Court was either to hold that the first award was valid and the decree should follow thereon or to hold that the application to file the reference and the award should stand dismissed. It has been urged that notwithstanding the wide powers conferred on the arbitrators by the parties to alter or amend the 1st award, the arbitrators had no jurisdiction to exercise such powers while acting under the reference issued by the Court and the Court had likewise no jurisdiction to order that the 1st award as modified by the arbitrators do stand filed in these proceedings.

Now no doubt it lies ill in the mouth of the Pirs to raise this objection when they find that the second award is not so beneficial to them as they expected But the objection raised by them relates to jurisdiction of the Court and of the arbitrators to pass a decree in terms of the modified award and if that objection is well founded, we are afraid, we must give effect to it. Now the question of the scope of the authority of an arbitrator appointed by the Court under the provisions of R. 1 of Sch. 2, recently came up for consideration before their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Ram Protab Chamria v. Durga Prosad Chamria (1) In that case a suit had been brought on the original side of the Calcutta High Court, praying for a dissolution of a family partnership and accounts During the pendency of that suit, the parties to the suit and one other person entered into an agreement for the settlement of all matters in dispute amongst themselves, that is to say, not only matters in suit but certain other subsidiary matters. They further agreed to accept whatever the arbitrators might decide with respect to the said disputes In pursuance of that agreement they applied to the Court for an order of reference and praying in effect that the matters alluded to, in the agreement, arrived at, by them outside Court should all be referred to the arbitrators in accordance with its terms. On that petition, the Court passed the usual order to the effect that all matters in difference and others between the parties to the suit be referred to the persons named as arbitrators in the petition. The arbitrators sent in an award in Court which dealt with matters which were the subject matter of the suit and also other matters. The award was held to be "otherwise invalid" within the meaning of Cl. 15 of the schedule. In dealing with the effect of the order of reference made by the Court and the jurisdiction of the arbitrators to make an award in pursuance thereof their Lordships have said :

"In their Lordships' judgment the decision of this appeal really turns upon the effect of that order properly interpreted. It was an order made in pursuance of Ss. 1 and 2 of Sch. 2 to the Civil P. C., 1908, and in the exercise of a power thereby given to the Court to refer to arbitration matters in difference in a suit defined by itself in the order of reference. It is incumbent upon arbitrators acting under such an order strictly to comply with its terms. The Court does not thereby part with its duty to supervise the proceedings of the arbitrators acting under the order. An award made otherwise than in accordance with the authority by the order conferred upon them, is, their Lordships can not doubt, an award which is "otherwise invalid" and which may accordingly be set aside by the Court under S. 15 of the same schedule."

If we examine the facts of the present case in the light of these observations what do we find? Had the disputes not been referred to arbitration the only legal order which the trial Judge could have passed was either to order the award to stand filed and a decree be framed in accordance therewith or to order the application to file the award be dismissed. It was not open to the trial Judge to vary the award, or to modify the award and pass a decree in terms of the modified award. If that be so, can it be said that the trial Judge had jurisdiction to issue a mandate to the arbitrators giving them jurisdiction to adjudicate upon points which he himself could not adjudicate in view of the nature of the proceedings which were then pending before him? If he had no power to do so the consent of the parties either made outside Court or contained in the petition filed before the learned Judge asking him to refer the disputes to arbitration was of no avail It is to be noted that the mandate issued by the learned Judge to the arbitrators is that the " suit is referred to them" that is to say, the points in dispute in the suit and nothing more. That the award can be modified or that it should be modified in that suit was not a point in dispute in the suit.

We think that the award cannot, therefore, be maintained as a valid award made in pursuance of the limited mandate issued by the Court to the arbitrators. It was argued in the lower Court that the award should be treated as an award made in pursuance of an oral reference made outside Court and be accepted as an adjustment of the disputes of the parties under O. 23, R. 3, Civil P.C. This argument also found favour with the learned Judge below. He has said :

" assuming the agreement to be invalid as a reference it can still take effect as an agreement or lawful compromise by parties to abide by the decision of a third party."

He has relied upon the case of Rajkumar Lal v. Bulak Miyan (2), where the reference and the award in respect of certain execution proceedings were upheld as an adjustment. It would appear that in that case the judgment-debtor was arrested in execution proceedings on 8th January 1916, but he was released on his furnishing security On 7th February 1916 the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor put in a joint petition stating that the disputes between them have been referred to three persons named in the petition. On 18th February 1916 these persons gave an award to the effect that the judgment-debtor should pay Rs 83 to the decree-holder on the following day, and in the event of the decree-holder declining to accept it, the money be deposited in Court On the following day the decree-holder put in a petition asking that the proceedings in execution might be pressed. The judgment-debtor then offered to pay the sum of Rs. 83 in Court and contended that the decree-holder could not recover anything more than that amount

Now the facts as stated above are quite consistent with the reference and the award having been made outside Court If that be so, there was no objection to the award being pleaded as an adjustment and no question would arise as to its being in excess of the mandate issued by the Court The only point discussed in the case is whether the award could be pleaded as an adjustment in execution proceedings The obvious answer to the argument of the learned Judge is that the arbitrators have not proceeded on an alleged oral reference outside Court but on the mandate issued by the Court and that it is, therefore, not open to any of the parties to plead that it is so based , and we are not prepared to treat the award as based on any such oral reference. It is worthy of note that though the award which was the subject matter of the appeal before their Lordships of the Privy Council was a fair and equitable award and there was a prior agreement in writing dated 11th May 1922 outside Court which was made between the parties to the suit and other parties who were not parties to the suit that the disputes between them be referred to arbitration, still no attempt was made to support the award on the ground that the prior agreement and the award constituted a valid adjustment of the suit.

In view of our finding on this main objection it is not necessary for us to go into the question whether the disputes arising in proceedings instituted under R. 20, Sch. 2 could be the subject of a valid reference under R 1 or not and we wish to express no opinion on that point or on the further question whether in the circumstances of the present case respondent Ibrahim was a party interested in the subject-matter of the reference and could be given up for the purpose of the reference. It is no doubt true that a good deal is to be said in favour of the Banias. They have been kept out of their money for a long time and were it not for the fact that the Pirs and the Othas consented to refer the points in dispute to the pleaders of the parties and expressly empowered them to modify or alter the award, the objections filed by them against the first award would have been disposed of about four years ago. It has been urged and not without some reason that the Othas and the Pirs wanted a reduction of the amount awarded against them by way of equitable relief and that it was for that purpose that they induced the Banias to refer but subsequently raised certain technical objections in order to put off payment and to get further reduction and that they should not be permitted to do so We are afraid that we cannot accede to this argument. All that we are prepared to do to help the Banias is to give directions so as to safe-guard their interests in the event of the Court holding that the first award was a valid award and one which should be filed under R. 21. We are told that the stay of execution of the decree was disallowed and it is likely that the Banias have been able to recover a portion of the amount due to them. If that is so we think that one of the conditions which we should impose is that the Othas and the Pirs should not get restoration of this money without giving security and that in the event of such security not being furnished the amount, if restored by the Banias should remain in Court pending the disposal of the objections to the first award. The other direction which we propose giving is to request the Judge below to dispose of the objections to the first award at as early a date as possible.

We have noticed that defendant 3 was given up in consequence of the second award. He is not now before us. We do not, therefore, wish to say any thing which might prejudice him. But we have no doubt that the learned Judge after due notice to defendant 3 will consider whether he still continues to be on the record for the purpose of the first award. With regard to costs, we think it is a fit case in which we should mulct the Pirs and the Othas with all costs throughout. We accordingly set aside the decree of the lower Court and direct the lower Court to proceed with the objections filed to the first award and we order that the Pirs and the Othas except defendant 3 should pay all costs of the lower Court and this Court upto date.

Dipchand Chandumal—for Appellant.

Kimatrai Bhojraj—for Respondent.

Rupchand, A. J C — The facts leading up to this appeal are somewhat as follows . The plaintiff-respondent obtained a decree against the defendant-appellant for Rs.5,500 odd on the strength of certain hundis executed by him in their favour. The defendant in his own turn filed a suit against the plaintiff for settlement of partnership accounts and valued his suit for the purposes of Court-fees at Rs 5,100. The second suit is pending in the Court of the First Class Sub-Judge, Shikarpur The plaintiff applied for execution of his decree for Rs. 5,500 and on certain statements made ex-parte, he was able to induce the then presiding Judge to issue a warrant against the defendant without notice. The defendant then put in an application purporting to be one under O 21, R 40 and S 151, Civil P. C, requesting the Court to stay the warrant pending an inquiry into his pauperism. He alleged that besides his claim for settlement of partnership accounts against the plaintiff on which he expected to get a decree for a very large sum he had no other property and was not in a position to pay the decretal debt On that application, the learned Judge passed the following ex parte order :

"Issue notice to the other side. Pay costs. Hearing 12th December 1927. If security for appearance is given, warrant to be stayed."

At a subsequent hearing, the learned Judge recorded some evidence adduced by the defendant and then adjourned it to 1st May 1928. On that day his successor passed the following order :

"Pleaders of the parties heard. O. 21, R. 40, Civil P. C. does not apply because no notice under O. 21, R. 37, Civil P. C., has been issued nor the judgment-debtor has been arrested under a warrant of this Court. Under O. 21, R. 29, Civil P. C., I order that security be given of the decretal amount within 7 days when proceedings will be stayed."

Now it is against that 2nd order that the present appeal has been filed. The first point argued by the learned pleader is that the learned Judge had no jurisdiction to review the order passed by his predecessor which operated as res judicata He has relied upon the ruling in Hook v. Administrator General of Bengal (1). The obvious answer to that argument is that the first order was an ex parte order issued without hearing the opposite party and that it could not therefore operate as res judicata.

The next argument urged by him is that O. 21, R. 40, Civil P. C., provides only for two cases where the Court can hold an enquiry into pauperism of a debtor: first, where a notice is ordered to issue and the judgment-debtor appears in answer to that notice, and 2ndly, where a warrant is issued and the judgment-debtor is brought under arrest in execution of the warrant. It is said that there is a third case where a judgment-debtor against whom a warrant is issued applies to the Court for an enquiry into his pauperism after the issue of a warrant against him without notice and before he is arrested as in the present case and that there is no express provision in that behalf the provisions of S. 151 apply. But again this argument is not based on any substantial foundation. In such a case it is open to the judgment-debtor to surrender himself in Court and then move the Court to be released pending proof of his poverty. That being so there is no occasion for invoking the provisions of S. 151, Civil P. C.

We are not prepared to hold that the learned Sub-Judge was in error in holding that in the circumstances of this case where the appellant had not surrendered himself in Court the provisions of O. 21, R. 40 applied or that S. 151, Civil P. C. could be invoked. It is still open to the judgment-debtor, if so advised, to surrender himself before the learned Sub Judge and to move him to pass an order under Cl. (3), R. 40, O. 21, Civil P. C.

The third point urged by the learned pleader is that the learned Judge was in error in asking for full security to be given under O. 21, R. 29. Now again there is in the first place no appeal provided by the Code against that order and in the second place, it was discretionary with the learned Judge to order that security should be given for the full amount of the decree and no grounds whatsoever exist for our holding that the learned Judge had so improperly exercised his discretion as to call for an interference. The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal No. 7 of 1926, Decided on 24th January 1929.

Compromise—Plaintiff, uncle of defendant passing deed of gift of property to him—Suit brought to cancel deed compromised providing plaintiff should recover property if he paid certain sum to defendant and if not his rights over property should cease—Such compromise supersedes deed of gift.

A plaintiff, who was the uncle of the defendant, passed a deed of gift of property in his favour on condition of his receiving maintenance. A suit brought to cancel the deed was settled by a compromise which provided that if the plaintiff paid certain amount to the defendant, he should recover the property and become its owner, and that if the money was not paid, he should cease to have any right over the property.

Held, that the compromise superseded the deed of gift and a suit brought for maintenance on the strength of the gift deed was not maintainable. [P 112 C 2]

Dipchand Chandumal—for Appellant.

Srikrishindas H. Lulla—for Respondent.

Judgment.—In this case, the plaintiff, who is the uncle of the defendant, passed a deed of gift in favour of the defendant and it is contended that one of the terms of the deed of gift in respect of the house was that the defendant should maintain the plaintiff. The suit in the original Court was for maintenance being Rs. 1,000. The Joint Sub-Judge of Shikarpur decreed the suit in favour of the plaintiff. On appeal to the District Judge this decree was reversed on the ground that there had been a suit to cancel the gift, and that suit had been settled by a compromise which in superseded the deed of gift The compromise provided that the plaintiff should pay Rs. 2,125 to the defendant within five months: and that if he paid this amount he should recover the property from the defendant and become the owner thereof. But if he failed to pay the amount within five months, the defendant was to remain the absolute owner of the house in question and the plaintiff's rights were to cease. It is true that in the first Court the question of the compromise superseding the gift was not expressly brought out. At the same time, the third issue was:

"Whether the suit is not maintainable on the strength of the gift deed." If therefore, it is held that the compromise superseded the deed of gift, it follows that the suit was not maintainable. In regard to the compromise the learned District Judge has observed as follows:

"It was clear on the terms of that compromise that no future rights or obligations based on the gift deed were kept alive between the parties beyond what was provided in the compromise itself. There is not a word about future maintenance for the plaintiff even if he failed to pay the stipulated amount, and in case the defendant became the absolute owner of the property. To my mind it is clear that the effect of that compromise was to render the original deed of gift simply non-existent, and to make the mutual rights of the parties dependent solely on the terms of that compromise between them."

It is contended by the learned pleader for the appellant that the effect of the compromise was simply that, if the money was not paid, the defendant should remain the owner but that at the same time he should remain liable to maintain the plaintiff. It seems to me that this is a contention that the compromise should stand good, and that at the same time part of the deed of the original gift, should stand good; which contention cannot be accepted. It appears therefore that the view taken by the learned District Judge is correct. The suit was for cancellation of the deed, and the plaintiff with his eyes open agreed to cancel the deed, and the simple agreement was that, if certain money was paid, he should obtain the house in question, and that, if the money is not paid, he should cease to have any right over the house. I agree therefore that the view taken by the learned District Judge, that the compromise superseded the deed of gift, and that the plaintiff is not entitled to maintenance. It appears, however, that the plaintiff has to a certain extent suffered hardship, as the defendant, who is his nephew has failed to maintain him. It may be noted that in the deed of gift it was not directly stated that the maintenance should be paid, but it contained a moral obligation that the defendant should pay the maintenance. For these reasons, we are of opinion that this appeal should be dismissed, but that each party should bear his own costs throughout. The order of attachment is cancelled.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 267 of 1928, Decided on 13th February 1929, against order of Special First Class Magistrate.

(a) Criminal P. C, S. 250—Omission to record reasons even in summary trial is irregularity not cured by S. 537.

The mere fact that a Magistrate is trying a case summarily does not justify his omission to record the complainant's objections to an order directing compensation and that such an omission is not a mere irregularity which can be cured by S. 537 : 8 S. L. R. 25, Rel. on. [P 113 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 250 — To pass an order under S. 250 the final opinion of the Court should be that the case was false and frivolous or vexatious, not that the explanation was unsatisfactory.

Section 250 shows that the Court must first be of the opinion that a case is either false and frivolous or vexatious to justify him in calling upon the complainant to show cause why he should not pay compensation. It is necessary after hearing complainant's explanation that he should still be of the opinion that the case is either false and frivolous or vexatious. To pass an order under S. 250 Court's final opinion should be that the case was false and frivolous or vexatious not that the explanation was unsatisfactory. [P 113 C 2 ; P 114 C 1]

P. U. Vaswani—for Applicant.

C M Lobo—for the Crown.

Percival, J. C—This is a revision application against the order of the Special First Class Magistrate, under S. 250, Criminal P C., directing the complainant in this case to pay a sum of five rupees to each of the accused as compensation.

The complaint was one under S. 323, I. P. C., but the evidence of the two witnesses whom the complainant had called did not support him and the accused was no doubt rightly discharged under S. 253, Criminal P. C. Then the learned Magistrate called on the appellant to shew cause why he should not be dealt with under S. 250, Criminal P. C. The Magistrate thereupon observed that the explanation given by the complainant was not satisfactory, and then he passed an order under S. 250, Criminal P. C

Now it is laid down in S. 250, Cl. (2) that in explaining why an order should not be passed under S. 250. No doubt that has to be interpreted in the light of the circumstances of each case ; but in this case it appears that the complainant had given some explanation as to why the case had not been proved, viz., he wished to put in a report and call for the Medical Officer to give evidence regarding his injuries Even if the learned Magistrate was justified in refusing to call for further evidence it appears to me to be right that he should have explained in his order why he did not consider that the explanation was satisfactory. Merely to say that the case is false and then that the explanation is not satisfactory does not give the revisional Court sufficient grounds for finding whether there are good grounds for the order of compensation or not. In the somewhat peculiar circumstances of this case I think that, although the order of discharge was correct, it was not right that an order should have been passed under S. 250, Criminal P. C. The order is accordingly set aside and the compensation, if paid, should be refunded.

"the Magistrate shall record and consider any cause which the complainant may show"

Aston, A J C.—I agree. The procedure laid down in S 250 should in my opinion, be strictly followed, and I am of opinion that the mere fact that a Magistrate is trying a case summarily does not justify his omission to record the complainant's objections to an order directing compensation and that such an omission is not a mere irregularity which can be cured by S. 537 : see the cases cited in Sohani, 12th edition, p 621. I agree with Hayward Judicial Commissioner's judgment in Minhomal v. Emperor (1). Quite apart from this S 250 shows that the Court must first be of the opinion that a case is either false and frivolous or vexatious to justify him in calling upon the complainant to show cause why he should not pay compensation It is necessary after hearing complainant's explanation that he should still be of the opinion that the case is either false and frivolous or vexatious. In the present case the learned Magistrate appears to have been of the opinion that the case was false and either frivolous or vexatious ; he called upon the complainant for his explanation and his opinion then was that the complainant's explanation was unsatisfactory. This does not appear to me to be a sufficient ingredient to enable the Court to pass an order under S. 250. His final opinion should have been that the case was false and frivolous or vexatious, not that the explanation was unsatisfactory.

On the merits it appears to me that the application made by the complainant with regard to the letters of his witness demanding money throw a considerable doubt on the evidence of his witnesses, which was not of much value either for the prosecution or for the defence. There remained the evidence of the complainant against that of the accused. There were ample grounds for discharging the accused for want of sufficient evidence, but the record does not seem to me to disclose any ground for treating the case as false and frivolous or vexatious.

 Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, S. 17, Proviso—In mortgage suit for sale of mortgaged property Court appointing receiver to collect rent and profits of property pending sale — Mortgagor becoming insolvent and Official Assignee claiming rents and profits for benefit of general body of creditors in preference to mortgagee — Mortgagee has right to money being paid to him in case sale proceeds of property being insufficient to pay off mortgage debt and Official Assignee has no right to claim money on behalf of general body of creditors in preference to mortgagee.

Where in a suit for sale of property based on an equitable mortgage, the Court appoints a receiver to collect the rents and profits of the property pending its sale and afterwards the mortgagor becomes insolvent and the Official Assignee in whom his estate vested claims the profits in the hands of the receiver for the benefit of the general body of creditors in preference to the mortgagee, the mortgagee has a right to the mesne profits in the possession of the receiver being paid to him in satisfaction of his mortgage in the event of his succeeding in the suit and the sale proceeds of property being insufficient to pay off his mortgage debt and the Official Assignee has no right to claim the rents and profits on behalf of the general body of creditors in preference to the mortgagee, since his title cannot be superior to that of the insolvent : A.I.R. 1924 Cal. 600, Harris v. Trumans, (1882) 9 *Q. T.G. Elphinston—for Official Assignee.

Dingomal Narainsing—for Mortgagee.

Judgment.—This application raises an important question of law. In Suit No. 236 of 1927, which was instituted by the Punjab National Bank Ltd., for sale of the property mortgaged to them by Moolji Morarji by way of equitable mortgage, I appointed a receiver of the rents and profits of the mortgaged property pending its sale Since then Moolji Morarji has been adjudicated as an insolvent and the Official Assignee in whom his estate has vested has claimed the rents and profits in the hands of the receiver for the benefit of the general body of creditors in preference to the Bank. This claim has been made on the ground that the appointment of the receiver was for the preservation of the rents and mesne profits of the property pending suit and nothing more. I am afraid I cannot accept this argument as sound. There may be some doubt as to the power of the Court to appoint a receiver in a suit for sale of property based on a simple or an equitable mortgage. But if once it is conceded that the Court has such power and acts under it, it follows as a matter of course, that the property which comes into the possession of the receiver in pursuance of that order is in custodia legis and that his possession is that of a stakeholder for and on behalf of the parties to the action according to their respective titles thereto and their rights therein : Devijendra v Joges (1). What then is the title or the right of the mortgagee to the mesne profits in the possession of the receiver ? He has not only a mere right that the money be preserved pending the settlement of the controversy in suit and the sale of the mortgaged property but he has a further right to the same being paid to him in satisfaction of his mortgage in the event of his succeeding in the suit and the sale-proceeds being insufficient to pay off his mortgage debt. Until satisfaction of the claim of the mortgagee in the suit in which a receiver is appointed, neither the mortgagor has any right to effect a transfer nor any creditor of the mortgagor having a money decree in his favour has any right to effect an attachment of the money in the hands of the receiver so as to prejudice the right of the mortgagee to appropriate it towards the balance of the amount due to him after the sale of the property. Were it otherwise, the appointment of a receiver could easily be rendered nugatory by the debtor delaying the disposal of the suit by various devices and in the meantime either transferring his interest in the money in the hands of the receiver or by helping his other creditors to have it attached.

Now speaking generally the Official Assignee or the Trustee in bankruptcy takes the estate subject to the same equities as those to which it is subject in the hands of the bankrupt i. e. all such property as he does not take by a title superior to that of the bankrupt. Harris v. Truman (2), Ex parte Holthausen (3), Williams on Bankruptcy, Edn 13, p 235. There is nothing in the Insolvency law as in force in India or England to give the Official Assignee a superior title to that of the bankrupt over the money in the hands of a receiver duly appointed by the Court. On the contrary, the proviso to S 17, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, corresponding to Cl. (2), S. 7, English Bankruptcy Act of 1914, declares in express terms that the order of adjudication shall not affect the power of any secured creditor to realise or otherwise deal with his security in the same manner as he would have been entitled to realise or deal with it if that section had not been passed. The learned counsel for the Official Receiver has been unable to satisfy me that there is any magic in the passing of an order of adjudication so as to deprive the mortgagee of his rights over the mesne profits and to confer them by operation of law on the general body of the secured creditors Nor are there any equities in their favour. If the claim of the mortgagee is well-founded, the delay of the Court in adjudicating upon it should not prejudice him, nor should the order of the Court permitting the mortgagor a certain time, not exceeding six months, to pay off the mortgage amount enable the mortgagor not only to withhold payment of the interest which accrues due during that period, but to claim that the rents of the mortgaged property, recovered by the receiver during the said period, be applied to purposes other than the payment of interest due on the mortgage. In Punjab National Bank Ltd., Karachi v. Moosaji (A. I. R. 1927 Sind 230,) I held that the Court had power to appoint a receiver in mortgage suits, and that the provision of law empowering the Court to allow a certain time to the mortgagor to pay the amount due by him had not the effect of enabling the mortgagor to retain possession of the property upto such date.

That decision was not taken to appeal. The learned counsel has said nothing to make me change my view, and unless that decision is upset by the High Court, I have no option, for reasons already stated, but to hold that the Official Assignee has no claim to the money in the hands of the receiver. I, therefore, disallow the application of the Official Assignee, however, in view of the importance of the question involved, I permit the Official Assignee to appeal against this order if he is so advised.

Judgment—This is an application made by one Ramchand Nanumal, a Signaller at Badin Railway Station who alleges that on 2nd June, 1928, he was on duty at the gate when one Mr. Assudomal, an Abkari Inspector's Naik, delivered to him a wrong ticket. The applicant pointed out to the Abkari Inspector's Naik that it was a wrong ticket and asked for the fare. The latter declined to pay the fare and rushed through the gate. Thereupon the applicant made a complaint to the police. The police, however, took no action. A complaint was filed by the applicant in the Court of the First Class Magistrate, Badin, charging Mr. Assudomal under Ss. 332 and 504, I. P. C. The learned Magistrate ordered a preliminary enquiry. Mr. Assudomal had the applicant challaned in the same Court on charges under Ss. 323 and 342 I. P. C., and S. 120, Railways Act. On 8th August 1928, the police filed a complaint against Ramchand, in the Court of the First Class Magistrate, Tando Mahomed Khan, charging the applicant under Ss. 182 and 211, I. P. C., with regard to the complaint which the applicant had made to the police against Mr. Assudomal. The applicant thereupon applied to the First Class Magistrate, Tando, requesting him to stay proceedings pending result of the preliminary enquiry in his complaint against Mr. Assudomal or to grant a stay with a view to enable the applicant to obtain an order from this Court. It may be pointed out in this connexion that a criminal Court has no power after it is seized with a case to stay proceedings. Proper course is to grant postponement from time to time: cf. Murugan v. Gutha Rami Naidu (1). The learned First Class Magistrate, Tando, granted the applicant's alternative prayer and stayed the case with a view to enable him to approach this Court.

In dealing with the present application before us, it is clear that under the old law sanction for prosecution was not required from a Court when a false complaint was made to the police. There was an exception, however, to the rule that no sanction was necessary under S. 195 (1) (b), Criminal P. C., where a false complaint was made to the police, for this only held good, if a subsequent complaint was not made to a Magistrate. In Tayabullah v. Emperor (2) the Calcutta High Court held that where a complaint to the police was followed by a complaint to the Court based on the same allegations and the same charges and such complaint was investigated by the Court, the sanction or complaint of the Court was necessary for the prosecution of the complainant in respect of a false charge made to the police: see also Brown v. Ananda Lal Mullick (3) following Tayabullah v. Emperor (2). Since the Criminal Code was amended, sanction by the Court has been superseded by a complaint in writing by the Court, it is the Court or some Court to which it is subordinate itself which makes the complaint. It has, therefore, been held in Samir v. Sajidar Rahman (4) that where a complaint to the police is followed by a complaint to the Court, the person who made the complaint cannot be prosecuted except on the complaint of the Court. There is a ruling to the same effect by the Madras High Court in Murugan v. Gutha Rami Naidu (1) and in Rambrose v. Emperor (5). In the latter case, it was also pointed out that where an accused commits an offence which comes both within the purview of Ss. 182 and 211, I. P. C., the latter section includes an offence under the former section. Accused under such circumstances should be prosecuted under S. 211, I P. C., on the complaint of the Court according to the provisions of S. 195 (1) (b) and not under S. 182, I. P. C., merely on the complaint by a public servant concerned. Taking the Judgment. — This is an application under S. 25, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, asking us to set aside the decree passed by the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court, Sukkur, against the applicants for a sum of Rs. 196-8 0.

It appears that the applicants had a dispute with one Mt. Rizikbai, defendant 4 in the case. The opponent, Mr Pribhdas, was her pleader and had to receive a sum of Rs. 150 from her as his fees. A compromise was arrived at between the applicants and Rizikbai under which Rizikbai gave up her rights to certain property which was the subject matter of the litigation on certain terms and conditions. One of the terms was that the applicants will pay to the opponent the sum of Rs. 150 being the amount of fees due by Rizikbai to him. The whole compromise was brought about with the help of the opponent and he was present when it was signed. It was on the basis of that compromise that he filed the present suit against the applicants for recovering Rs. 150 and interest due thereon impleading at the same time Rizikbai as a co-defendant

The main plea raised by the applicants was that as there was no privity of contract between them and the opponent and as the applicants received no consideration from the opponents he could not sue the applicants.

Now it is well-settled that in India consideration need not move from the promisee and the rule of English Law enunciated in the case of Tweddle v. Atkinson (1) has no application here. The only point in issue, therefore, is whether the opponent could sue on the agreement made between the applicants and Rizikbai under which the applicants promised to pay to the opponent his fees. The answer to this question depends on whether the agreement between the applicants and Rizikbai was intended to secure to the opponent a benefit as a cestui que trust. If so he was competent to sue in his own right to enforce the trust Khwaja Muhammad Khan v Husaini Begum (2).

In the present case the opponent was present when the agreement was made and it would appear that he had assented to it though his presence or assent were in no way essential : Dwarka Nath v Priya Nath (3). Indubitably the learned Small Cause Court Judge had jurisdiction to decide the point whether the opponent was a cestui que trust or not, and even assuming that he had committed an error of law in deciding it that in itself would not be sufficient to warrant our interference. We must be satisfied that such error has resulted in a failure of justice There has been no such failure of justice here. The applicants were attempting to get out of their liability by raising a technical plea which could easily have been met by transposing Rizikbai who was already on the record as a co-plaintiff. This application, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Criminal Revn Appln No 23 of 1929, Decided on 15th April 1929.

Stamp Act, S. 69 Cls (a) and (b)—Person's admission that he at licensed vendor's request made endorsement on, and entries in sale register in respect of stamps sold is not evidence of abetment of offence of breach of R. 11 framed under S. 74 — Penal Code S. 107.

Admission of a person, who is not a licensed vendor that he, at the request of licensed vendor, made endorsement on and entries in sale register in respect of, stamps sold by the latter is not sufficient evidence to hold that he abetted the offence of a breach of R. 11, framed under S. 74, within the meaning of S. 107 Penal Code. [P 119 C 1]

Khanchand Gopaldas—for Applicant.

C M. Lobo—for the Crown.

Judgment—One Mahomed Yusif a licensed vendor of stamps who is not now before us and the applicant Nenumal were jointly tried before the First Class Magistrate, Mirpur Khas, for certain offences alleged to have been committed by them under S 69, Cls. (a) and (b), Stamp Act read with S 109, I P. C The prosecution case was that the applicant sold certain stamps supplied for Government to Mahomed Yusif, and made endorsements under his own signature on stamps sold by him, though he himself possessed no license It was further said that Nenumal had also made entries of such sales in the sale register supplied to Mahomed Yusif by Government contrary to the rules framed by Government under S. 74 Stamp Act. R. 11 of the rules framed under S. 74 of the Act inter alia reads as follows:

"(1) Every ex-officio or licensed vendor shall with his own hand write on the back of every stamp embossed or engraved on stamped paper which he sells its serial number, the date of sale the name and residence of the purchaser, the value of the stamp in full in words, and his ordinary signature; at the same time he shall make corresponding entries in the register to be kept by him in the following form,"

The applicant is a petition writer; and at one time he possessed a license to sell stamps and so did one Pessumal who was his partner The present prosecution was filed by the revenue authorities on a complaint made to them by Pessumal who alleged that Mahomed Yusif had permitted the applicant to sell stamps on his behalf, and to make the necessary endorsements on the stamps and entries in the register. At the trial the prosecution failed to prove that the applicant had sold stamps himself but there was his own admission that he had made an endorsement on a stamp Ex. 26 which was sold by Mahomed Yusif and that Mahomed Yusif had put his signature below that endorsement He also admitted hat he had made entries Exs. 41 and 41-a in the sale register in respect of that stamp and two other stamps which were not produced and were said to have likewise been sold by Mahomed Yusif. On these admissions, the learned Magistrate found that the applicant was not guilty of the offence of selling stamps contrary to the rules but had abetted an offence said to have been committed by Mahomed Yusif, namely the offence of failing to make the endorsement on Ex. 26 and making the entries Exs 41 and 41-a in the sale register. He accordingly convicted Mahomed Yusif of the principal offence of failure to comply with R. 11, such failure being made punishable under S. 69, Stamp Act, and he convicted the applicant of abetting the said offence and sentenced each of the accused to pay a fine of Rs. 250.

In appeal the learned Sessions Judge, Hyderabad, confirmed their convictions and sentences. In dealing with the case of the applicant all that he has observed is as follows:

"As regards Nenumal it is urged that since he was not a licensed vendor he could not be penalized for breach of R. 11. Nenumal has in fact abetted the breach of R. 11 by a licensed vendor and can therefore be held liable for abetment under S. 109, I. P. C."

Three points have urged on behalf of the applicant:

(a) That the joint trial of the accused for a number of distinct offences exceeding three was bad.

(b) that there was no obligation upon the licensed vendor to make the entries in the sale register in his own handwriting and lastly,

(c) that the making of an endorsement on a stamp sold by a licensed vendor or the making of entries in the sale register by the applicant does not amount to the offence of abetment We propose to deal with the last point only as it goes to the very root of the conviction of the applicant and as Mahomed Yusif is not before us we do not consider ourselves called upon to deal with points (a) and (b).

Now the only reliable evidence on the record on which the conviction of the applicant is based is his own admission that he made the endorsement Ex. 26 and the entries Exs. 41 and 41 (a). This admission is consistent with his having made them at the request of Mahomed Yusif In the absence of any further evidence there was no scope for the plea that the applicant had abetted the offence of a breach of R. 11, within the meaning of S. 107, I. P. C. On that admission this applicant could not be said to have either instigated Mahomed Yusif or to have engaged with Mahomed Yusif in a conspiracy or intentionally aided or abetted Mahomed Yusif in not complying with R. 11. We, accordingly, set aside the conviction and sentence passed against applicant and order that the fine if paid be refunded

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 14 of 1929, Decided on 13th February 1929.

Penal Code, S. 405—Return of deposit to brother of depositor with best intention and absence of moral turpitude does not amount to criminal breach of trust.

The return of a deposit to the brother of a depositor under circumstances indicating the best of intention and an absence of moral turpitude, may render a person civilly liable to the depositor but does not amount to criminal breach of trust as that offence involves moral turpitude. [P 119 C 2]

Motiram Idanmal—for Applicant.

C. M. Lobo—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an application for revision of an order of the learned Judicial Commissioner summarily dismissing the applicant's appeal and confirming the conviction of the applicant under S. 406, I. P. C. and a sentence of fine passed on him by the learned Special First Class Magistrate, Karachi. The facts in the case briefly are that in or about December 1925, the complainant says that he deposited a sum of Rs. 300 with the accused requesting him to keep the money and to return it to him when he wanted it. Some three years later he made a demand for the return of the money and the reply of the accused was that he had returned it to him and that he had handed it over to his brother Ibrahim. The learned Magistrate held that the accused did hand over the money entrusted to him to Ibrahim, the brother of the complainant, with the best of intentions and without any moral turpitude, and sentenced the accused to pay a fine of Rs. 300 (three hundred rupees) or in default to three months simple imprisonment.

The defence to the case was that the transaction was a deposit and not a trust and secondly that he had returned it to Ibrahim the brother of the complainant in the presence of the complainant. The learned Magistrate in his judgment has not discussed the defence that the money was not "entrusted" but was "deposited." Where money is given to a person in business the transaction may amount either to a loan or to a deposit or to a trust. In the present case the complainant's own allegation was it was "deposited" and in the notice which he sent to the accused, his pleader stated that in the event of the money not being paid within 24 hours, a suit would be filed. The circumstances seem to me to point to the fact that the transaction was a deposit. The return of a deposit to the brother of a depositor under circumstances indicating the best of intentions and an absence of moral turpitude, might render a person civilly liable to the depositor, but I cannot conceive of the act amounting to criminal breach of trust. The offence of criminal breach of trust involving as it does an intention to cause "wrongful" gain or "wrongful" loss is in my opinion an offence which involves moral turpitude. It is not an offence, which can be committed with the best of intentions. I would therefore set aside the conviction of the applicant and order the fine, if paid, to be refunded. Bail bonds cancelled.

Ahmed Nur Mahomed Khatri—Respondent.

First Appeal No. 159 of 1925, Decided on 24th October 1928, against decree of Addl. Judicial Commissioner

Civil P. C., O 41, R 20—Appellant omitting to implead necessary respondents to avoid Court-fee—Appeal is incompetent and parties should not be added under R. 20.

The plaintiff had obtained a preliminary mortgage decree against two out of three defendants for the whole of his claim, and appealed against the decision making only defendant 3 a respondent for making him liable for his share, on payment of proportionate Court-fee.

Held, it was not open to him to ask for payment by defendant 3 of a part of the same claim over again and the only mode of affording him relief if any was by re-opening the preliminary mortgage decree. This could not be done without defendants 1 and 2 being parties to the appeal. Therefore the appeal as constituted was incompetent and the discretionary powers of adding parties under O. 41, R. 20, should not be used as the appellant to avoid Court-fee deliberately omitted them.

Dingomal Narainsing—for Appellant

E. V. Costellino—for Respondent

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit filed by the plaintiff-appellants against his uncle and two nephews for recovery of a sum of Rs. 38,000 said to be due on certain mortgages executed by the uncle in favour of the plaintiff-appellant. The first Court held that those mortgages were binding on the uncle and one of the nephews and dismissed the suit against the other nephew who is respondent in this appeal. For purposes which are best known to the appellant but which may well be surmised, he filed this appeal only against the respondent. And in para. 24 of his memorandum of appeal he stated as follows:

"That no personal decree is sought against respondent Ahmed and as properties in question will hardly be worth even Rs. 20,000 and as by the judgment only one-fourth share belonging to Ahmed has been excluded the Court-fee for the purpose of this appeal is paid on one-fourth the value of the property, namely, Rs. 5,000."

A preliminary objection has been raised on behalf of the respondent that this appeal as constituted is incompetent. We think that this objection is well-founded and should prevail.

The plaintiff has obtained a preliminary mortgage decree against defendants 1 and 2 for the whole of his claim. It is not, therefore, open to him to ask for payment by defendant 3 of a part of the same claim over again and the only mode of affording him relief if any is by re-opening the preliminary mortgage decree. This we cannot do without defendants 1 and 2 being parties to the appeal. It has been argued that we should exercise our discretionary powers under O. 41, R. 20, Civil P. C. and add defendants 1 and 2 parties to the appeal. We are afraid we cannot accede to this request. In the first place, there are no grounds for the exercise of our discretion. The plaintiff intentionally dropped defendants 1 and 2 from this appeal with the object of avoiding Court-fee and refused to pay additional Court-fee though his attention was drawn to it by the Registrar at the time he presented his memorandum of appeal. With open eyes he took the risk of his appeal being opposed at the hearing on that ground and cannot now complain against the consequences, which have ensued. In the next place, the plaintiff has by his subsequent conduct made it impossible for this Court to come to his help. In his anxiety to realize his security at an early date, he obtained a final decree against defendants 1 and 2 and brought to sale their right, title and interest in the mortgage property with the result that if the preliminary decree be varied at present by permitting the mortgagors to pay the decretal amount within such time not exceeding six months as the appellate Court might fix, the right, title and interest of defendants 1 and 2 in the property is not available for redemption. It has been argued that the plaintiff is the purchaser of the shares of defendants 1 and 2 in the property and that he is prepared to relinquish his rights therein but there is no provision of law under which we can compel the defendants or any of them to accept such relinquishment. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

(a) Sind Courts Act (12 of 1866), S. 16—If pleader or barrister fails to keep fee-book or ledger showing sums deposited by client for expenses and sum expended on his behalf, High Court is justified in taking serious notice of his conduct under its disciplinary jurisdiction.

It is the duty of a pleader or a barrister to keep a fee book and a ledger showing every sum deposited by the client for expenses and sum expended on his behalf, and failure to do this duty on the part of any pleader or barrister will justify High Court in taking serious notice of his conduct under its disciplinary jurisdiction. 5 *S. (b) Sind Courts Act (12 of 1866), S. 16—"Misbehaviour" is not limited to professional misconduct, but includes general misconduct also.

"Misbehaviour" in S. 16 is not limited to professional misconduct, but can be extended to general misconduct as well. [P 123 C 2]

Per Rupchand, A. J. C.—The Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind has unlimited jurisdiction to deal with every kind of misbehaviour, professional or otherwise of a pleader though such jurisdiction will undoubtedly be exercised for the very object with which it has been conferred, namely, the preservation of the purity of the Courts and the proper and honest administration of the law: 11 *S. (c) Sind Courts Act (12 of 1866), S. 16—Failure to keep fee-book or ledger of clients' money is professional misbehaviour because that will be considered disgraceful and dishonourable by pleaders of repute and competency.

Per Rupchand, A. J. C.—Professional conduct of a pleader must be judged by the rules and standard of his profession and if a pleader has done something which would be reasonably regarded as disgraceful and dishonourable by pleaders of good reputation and competency he is guilty of professional misconduct. Further a pleader becomes more disgraceful and calls for a more severe punishment, when he is guilty not only of an unwritten rule of professional conduct, but where such rule has been enacted and laid down by the Rules of Association to which he has the honour to belong and where one of the conditions on which he has obtained his license to practice as a pleader is that he shall undertake to submit to such written rules of conduct. [P 124 C 2, P 125 C 2]

Applying this test the failure by a pleader to keep a fee-book or a ledger containing the account of clients' money for a number of years which is a breach of Rr. 35 and 36 of the Rules of the Karachi Bar Association, is an act of professional misbehaviour because that would be considered disgraceful and dishonourable by pleaders of good repute and competency *Ex-parte Law Society In Re. *Per Rupchand, A. J. Per Rupchand, A. J. C.—Where the accusations against a pleader are of a criminal nature, it is not in every case that criminal conviction is a sine qua non to the exercise of the disciplinary jurisdiction of the High Court. A broad distinction has to be drawn between the acts done by the pleader in his professional capacity or in the presence of the Court, and acts not done in such capacity and not in the presence of the Court. It is only in the latter case when the acts charged are indictable and are fairly denied that the Court will not proceed against the pleader in the exercise of its disciplinary jurisdiction, until he has been convicted and will not compel him to answer on oath to a charge for which he may be indicted. 47 Cal. 1115 and other cases relied on; *A. Per De Souza, A. J. C.—The Court which under S. 16 (3) has power to remove or to suspend from practice for misbehaviour any person admitted to be a pleader, has by necessary implication, power to define by judicial decision or otherwise what constitutes misbehaviour and to lay down canons of good behaviour, departure from which may constitute misbehaviour. The rules framed by the Bar Association with the approval of the Court must be regarded as laying a standard of good behaviour to which pleaders should ordinarily conform. But it does not necessarily follow that a breach of all or any of these rules would call for the exercise of the High Court's disciplinary jurisdiction. The rules are exhortatory but not punitive.

T. G. Elphinston—for the Crown

O. Sullivan—for Opponent.

Kalumal Pahlumal, Amicus Curiæ.

Percival, J. C.—Mr. L, a Barrister-at-Law and pleader of this Court of eleven years' standing, has been called upon to show cause why he should not be dealt with under the disciplinary jurisdiction of this Court for certain acts of misbehaviour. We have heard Mr. O'Sullivan on behalf of Mr. L., the Government Pleader for the Crown, and Mr Kalumal, a Senior Pleader, of this Court, as amicus curiae, selected by the Committee of the Karachi Bar Association.

The enquiry arose out of an application of one Jeewansing on behalf of whom Mr. L appeared in a Small Cause Court case. The complaint was enquired into by Mr. Rupchand, Additional Judicial Commissioner of Sind, and in the course of the inquiry certain further complaints against Mr. L's conduct came to light. Finally seven charges were drawn up against him, of which the first two were the following:

(1) That he has failed to keep a register of "fees settled, the amount settled, and the name of the client" as required by R. 35, Rules of the Bar Association. for a number of years preceding 1st January 1927 and

(2) that he has failed to:

"keep a ledger showing every sum deposited by such client for expenses and sum expended on his behalf"

as required by R 36, Rules of the Bar Association

Mr. O'Sullivan on behalf of Mr. L, admits that these two charges are made out He contends, however, that they are trifling matters, having regard to the facts that no fraud on a client in respect of fees has been proved in this case. He further contends that the rules of the Bar Association are ultra vires and should not be enforced against members of the Bar who do not wish to follow them. I am of opinion that, for the purpose of this enquiry it is unnecessary for this Court to decide whether all the rules of the Association, which have been already approved by this Court under S. 16. Sind Courts Act 1866, are binding on the members of the Bar. Because it has already been laid down in Varanbai v. M. Pleader (1) that:

"It is recognized as the duty of a solicitor (and this applies to a pleader also) to keep a clear and accurate account of all moneys received by him for and on behalf of his client and to keep such moneys apart from his own."

a view with which I entirely agree. In this province a Barrister performs the functions of a solicitor also "The only question therefore, is that of the seriousness with which the omission to keep a fee book and a ledger of sums deposited should be regarded. On this point it is noticeable that the leaders of the Bar themselves take a serious view of this delinquency The learned Government Pleader is emphatic in the contention that the non-keeping of a fee book and of accounts in respect of his professional work shows that a pleader must be dishonest, a view that is supported by Mr. Kalumal On these two charges alone, therefore, serious notice can be taken of the conduct of Mr L

Turning to the other five charges against Mr L. they refer chiefly to alleged false statements made by Mr. L in the course of the inquiry held by Mr Rupchand As most of these allegations of false statements by Mr. L depend on word against word, particularly on the word of Jeewansing against that of Mr. L, I do not think that they should form the basis of disciplinary action. Reference, however, must be made in particular to the replies given by Mr. L to Mr Rupchand in connexion with the question whether he kept a fee book or not. The examination by Mr. Rupchand of Mr. L runs as follows .

"This letter is mine marked D I say that I did not keep a fee book for some years. I don't remember now for what years I did not keep the fee book "

Q. Please try to remember and say for what years you did not keep the fee books ?

A. (He takes two minutes to answer and says) Since long I gave up my office and so I don't know when I stopped keeping the fee books

Q How many years ago you gave up your office ?

A. I don't remember.

Q Had you any office this year ?

A. No.

Q Why did you keep a fee book this year ?

A. In the Small Causes Court a question was put to me whether I kept a fee book. I can't say if this was one year or two years ago And after that I thought of keeping a fee book Before that also I kept a fee book Besides the two books produced by me I may have other books. I can't say ; my books are at Lahore.

Q. Did you keep a fee-book last year ?

A. I don't remember. When the question was put to me in the Small Causes Court, I kept a fee book. I had a fee book six months ago. I made entries in a fee book during the month of November and December 1926 I can't say if I made entries in a book for the month of October 1926 I don't know where that book is ?

Mr. L. in fact produced an alleged fee book, beginning from January 1927 which to say the least of it is a suspicious document. It would have been better if Mr. L had stated straight out from the first that he kept no fee books at least between 1922 and 1926, instead, of prevaricating in the manner shown above. Apart, therefore, from any other alleged false statements made by Mr. L, it is clear on the face of it that he has prevaricated in the above mentioned deposition.

Taking this view of the case I am of opinion that there are sufficient grounds to take action against him According to this view of the case it is unnecessary to enter into a discussion as to whether a criminal charge should have been, or should be, brought against Mr L. in respect of perjury and forgery, before disciplinary action is taken Nor is it necessary to refer to the various rulings of the High Courts on the subject, except to the case of Re Enquiry against Mr. M Pleader (2) a Full Bench ruling of this Court, where the whole subject of disciplinary action in Sind was fully discussed It is there laid down among other things that "misbehaviour" in S 16, Sind Courts Act, 1866 is not limited to professional misconduct Having regard to all the facts of the case I am of opinion that Mr L should be suspended from practice for a period of one year from the date on which the order of interim suspension was passed against him, and that he should surrender his sanad to the Registrar of this Court.

Aston, A. J. C.—I concur with the learned Judicial Commissioner and Mr De Souza and have nothing further to add.

(2) [1918] 11 S. L. R. 81=44 I. C. 336=19 Cr. L. J. 322 (F. B.).

Rupchand, A J C.—Mr. L. a barrister-at-law and a pleader of this Court of eleven year's standing had been called upon to show cause why he should not be dealt with under the disciplinary jurisdiction of this Court for certain acts of mishaviour The acts complained of which are referred to in the report under consideration as seven different charges fall in two groups Charges 1 to 4 and the first alternative of charge 5 relate to acts of commission or omission prior to this enquiry The second alternative of charge 5 and charges 6 and 7 relate to acts said to have been done in the course of this enquiry. The learned counsel for Mr L. has raised several interesting questions of law and fact. I shall deal with them in the order in which they have been urged. Referring to charges 1 to 3 the learned counsel has strenuously argued that they refer to a breach of the rules of the Bar Association and do not amount to misbehaviour within the meaning of S 16, Sind Courts Act, which is limited to professional misconduct properly so-called.

This point was exhaustively dealt with in the Full Bench case of this Court in Re Enquiry against Mr. M. Pleader (2) where after a review of the whole case law on the subject Pratt, J C., observed .

"There can be no doubt, therefore, that the jurisdiction extends not only to professional misbehaviour but to general misbehaviour. A similar construction has been put by the Bombay High Court on the almost identical words occurring in S. 56, Bombay Pleaders' Regn. 2 of 1827, Government Pleader, Bombay v. Annaji Narayan Deshpande (3) and by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court on S. 14, Legal Practitioners Act, 18 of 1879, Le Mesurier v. Wajid Hossain (4). "

This point has now been settled and been placed beyond doubt by the authoritative decision of the Privy Council in Shankar Ganesh v. Secy of State (5) where their Lordships have laid down that the words "any other reasonable cause" in S 13 (f), Legal Practitioners Act, 1879 (as amended by Act 11 of 1896) "is not confined to acts done in a professional capacity."

In my opinion the expression "misbehaviour" is at least as, if not more, comprehensive than the expression "any other reasonable cause" This Court has therefore in my opinion, unlimited jurisdiction to deal with every kind of misbehaviour of a pleader though such jurisdiction will undoubtedly be exercised for the very object with which it has been conferred, namely, the preservation of the purity of the Courts and the proper and honest administration of the law

It is not necessary for me to go into this matter any further as the acts of misbehaviour complained of concern the conduct of Mr L in discharge of his professional duties and, therefore, fall within the purview of the professional misconduct as opposed to misconduct or misbehaviour in matters not so connected. It has been argued that a breach of the rules to keep a fee book or a ledger of clients' accounts is not professional misconduct but in Ex parte Law Society-In re A Solicitor (6) it was very pertinently said that professional conduct of a solicitor must be judged by the rules and standard of his profession and that if a solicitor has done something which would be reasonably regarded as disgraceful and dishonourable by solicitors of good repute and competency he is guilty of professional misconduct. These observations equally apply to a pleader of this Court who is inter alia called upon to perform the same function and is as much an officer of the Court as a solicitor in England.

The first question, therefore, is whether the failure by the pleader to keep a fee book or a ledger containing the accounts of clients for a number of years is such conduct as would be considered disgraceful or dishonourable by pleaders of good repute and competency? My answer to this question is positively in the affirmative If any assurance was wanted on that point, we have had that assurance both from the learned Public Prosecutor who is the present recognized leader of the Karachi Bar and from Mr. Kalumal another leading lawyer who has been heard amicus curiae as the nominee of the Bar Committee. In the course of his arguments the learned Public Prosecutor very rightly said that it was hnmanly impossible for an honest practitioner to carry on his business without keeping such books This argument is based on a solid foundation It cannot be disputed that it is in very rare cases that a pleader receives his full fee at the time of his engagement and that in every civil proceeding where costs are allowed to a successful party the pleader is required by the rules of the Court to file a certificate in Court stating on his honour that he has not agreed to receive a fee less than that prescribed by the Rules of the Court and in the event of his having agreed to receive a fee below the taxable fee he is required to disclose such fee to enable the taxing master to allow lower fee This rule was enacted with the object, (a) of preventing pleaders from receiving a back fee in event of success and (b) of preventing a successful party from recovering from the opponent as taxed costs a fee in excess of that agreed to be paid by him to his pleader. A failure to keep a fee book opens a wide door to fraud. It, inter alia, enables a pleader to break the rules of the Court without compunction or fear of detection The consequences of a failure to keep a ledger of a clients' moneys are even more serious Court proceedings last for years. During their continuance a pleader receives money from his clients in small bits and spends it equally in small bits as process fee, copying fee, stamp fee and the like extending in some instances to a period of as many as five or six years. However small the practice of a pleader may be it is impossible for him to rely upon his memory for rendition of accounts or to expect that a rendition of accounts by him unsupported by entries from his books will be acceptable either to his clients or to the Court in the event of dispute. In Varanbai v. M , Pleader (1) while dealing with a similar point Fawcett, A. J. C., said:

"It is recognized as a duty of a solicitor to keep clear and accurate accounts of all monyes received by him for and on behalf of his client and to keep such moneys apart from his own (Encyclopediae of the Laws of England, Vol. 11, p. 590), and it is important that conduct, which is a breach of the relations of confidence and trust which should exist between the client and solicitor or in this country client and pleader—should not be allowed to pass unnoticed by a Court which is authorized to deal with cases of misbehaviour."

In my opinion the conduct of a pleader becomes more disgraceful and calls for a more severe punishment, where he is guilty not only of unwritten rule of professional conduct but where such rule has been enacted and expressly laid down by the Rules of the Association to which he has the honour to belong and where one of the conditions on which he has obtained his license to practice as a pleader is that he shall undetake to submit to such written rules of conduct

The third charge depends on a breach of the written Rules of the Association pure and simple which require a pleader to accept a fee of not less than Rs. 10 in any Court case and stands on a slightly different footing It has been argued that a breach of this rule is not so serious or objectionable as to call for the exercise of our disciplinary jurisdiction.

It is necessary, therefore, to critically examine the object with which this rule, which has the approval of the Court, was enacted. Its main object is to prevent unhealthy competition between members of the Bar, and to require that no member shall receive a fee below the prescribed minimum which is commensurate with the work a pleader is required to do. This rule is subject to two valuable exceptions. It is open to a pleader to accept no fee at all in any particular case without disclosing that he has done so, or to accept in any special case with the permission of the Court a fee less than that prescribed under the rules. Receiving of inadequate fees is indubitably detrimental to the interests and the dignity of the Bar as a whole and to the interests of the clients themselves. Receiving of inadequate fees often results in the pleaders' failure to attend at the hearing on acount of his being obliged to take many more engagements than he can attend to In order to protect the interests of the junior members of the Bar and to help them in getting a fair share of the work, the rule requires the senior members to accept a fee of not less than Rs. 30 in any case A surreptitious breach of these rules is, in my opinion, certainly dishonourable and is committed with the evident object of securing by unfair and improper means work which would otherwise be given to other and more competent members of the Bar and disentitles the delinquent to a claim to his official badge of respectability and trustworthiness.

The first two acts of misconduct have been admitted and act 3 has been denied. With all due deference to my learned brothers on the evidence I am constrained to hold that the denial is not true The evidence given by Jeewansing on solemn affirmation that he agreed to pay a fee of Rs. 4 and not more finds ample support from the surrounding circumstances. The claim in suit was only Rs 33 for provision supplied and if Mr. L's explanation that he was engaged only for the purpose of obtaining instalments is accepted, it is somewhat difficult for me to believe that Jeewansing agreed to pay a fee of Rs. 10 for the purpose of securing instalments in a suit for Rs. 33 only. Again apart from the fact that the explanation of Mr. L does not appear to me to be true, I am not prepared to hold that Jeewansing agreed to pay Rs 10 as the fee for this case. The entry in the fee book produced by Mr L, is to say the least extremely suspicious and unreliable Our attention was specifically drawn to the petition made by Jeewansing and it was argued and not without good reasons that Jeewansing's petition had been drawn up by a lawyer and that as Jeewansing had made no definite statement in the petition that he had agreed to pay a fee of Rs. 4, only we should not attach any weight to his subsequent evidence.

The petition, however, specifically mentions that full fee agreed upon had been paid. There is no dispute that the amount paid to Mr L was in this case not more than Rs 4 It would, therefore, appear that according to Jeewansing the sum paid by him represented the full fee agreed upon. It was argued that the word of Jeewansing should not be accepted in preference to that of Mr. L But Jeewansing was cross examined and there was nothing in his demeanour to make me consider that his evidence on this point was false. Furthermore, as pointed out above his evidence on this point is amply corroborated by the surrounding circumstances I hold that Mr. L. agreed to receive a fee of less than Rs. 10 from Jeewansing

As a corollary to the above finding the answer to the first alternative in charge 4 must be in the affirmative Except the fact that the entries in the fee-book of 1927 are of a highly suspicious nature and the further fact that Mr. L. has not produced fee books for the prior period there is no other evidence to prove that the fee book for 1927 was written for the occasion My finding, therefore, on the second alternative referred to in the charge is in the negative The learned Public Prosecutor has frankly stated to the Court that the failure of Mr L to attend to the Small Cause Court case was equally consistent with his having committed an error of judgment and that he did not, therefore, press the fifth charge. This charge has consequently been struck off and there is nothing further to be said about it.

The sixth and seventh charges relate to the conduct of Mr L. during these proceedings and are pertinent to the question of punishment only The learned counsel has attacked the report on both these charges on the grounds of an irregularity and an illegality in the proceedings He has urged that the proceedings under S. 16 of the Act are in the nature of criminal proceedings and that the rules of procedure applicable to criminal trials apply pro tanto to these proceedings. In answer to this objection I cannot do better than quote the observations of Mookerjee, J , in Emperor v Rajani Kanta Bose (7) which are as follows.

> In my opinion, it is plain that the proceeding is not of a criminal nature, see Government Pleader v Bhagubhai (8), though, as pointed in Nando Lal Roy v. Baser Ali (9) and Nallasivan Pallai v. Ramlingam Pillai (10), it is undoubtedly a judicial proceeding. It was ruled in the cases of In re Hardwick (11) and In re Eede (12) that as the Court in making an order striking a solicitor off the rolls for misconduct does so in the exercise of its disciplinary powers over its own officers and not in the exercise of its criminal jurisdiction, an appeal lies from such order to the Court of Appeal. . . . . The true position appears to be that these proceedings are neither civil suits nor criminal prosecutions In the matter of Janak Kishore (13).

They are special proceedings resulting from the inherent power of the Courts over their officers. Their object is to preserve the purity of the Courts and the proper and honest administration of the law. The purpose of suspension and disbarment is to protect the Court and the public from legal practitioners who, disregarding the sanctity of their office, pervert or abuse the privileges annexed to the responsible office they have secured from the Court. The form of proceedure, consequently, is not of controlling importance, so long as the essentials of fair notice and opportunity to be heard are present. In re Ganapathy Sastri (14)."

The argument that the fifth charge was defective and should be struck off is without any foundation This charge must be read as part for the report which makes it abundantly clear what it meant. The objection that the letter of the Small Cause Court Judge should have been proved formally by calling him as a witness is, in my opinion, equally futile Mr. L knew that the letter of the learned Judge was being used against him and that it had been exhibited. On remand he was given an opportunity of getting copies of such documents as were placed on the record without his knowledge. At any rate he knew then of the existence of this document and the use which it was being put to. It would have been most unusual for the Court to summon the learned Small Cause Court Judge to give formal evidence in support of what he had written to this Court, unless Mr. L. had expressed a desire to cross examine him. His failure to do so was, in my opinion tantamount to an assent on his part to the document being treated as evidence and, in my opinion, it is too late for him now to argue that it should be expunged from consideration. The exclusion of this letter does not help him either.

The sixth charge is as follows.

"That the explanation submitted by him to the Registrar of this Court in his letter of 5th February 1928, is false and unworthy of a member of the honourable profession.

In the letter Mr. L has, inter alia, stated as under "That I was engaged by the applicant.... for Rs. 10 to get him instalment in Suit No. 113 of 1927..... and he said that he had no defence."

This statement is sufficient to condemn him from his own mouth It is not disputed that at the first hearing of the Small Cause Court case Mr. L. did not state to the Court that his client wanted instalment and that on the contrary stated to the Court that his client's defence to the action was that the claim was denied If his explanation to this Court is true it was unworthy of him as a member of the honourable profession to raise a false defence contrary to instructions, and which he knew to be false, whatever his motives may have been, whether it was to secure the balance of his fees or to harass the plaintiff to agree to instalments. If, on the other hand, his explanation to this Court is false it is equally unworthy of the high position he enjoys. I would, therefore, hold that this charge requires no further proof whatsoever.

The most serious objection raised is that inrespect of the seventh charge. It is argued that as Mr. L was in the position of an accused person, it was not competent for him to make any statement on oath, that his being put on oath was illegal, and that therefore, he was at liberty to make untrue statements without running any risk not only of being criminally prosecuted for perjury but also of being punished under the disciplinary jurisdiction of this Court Reliance has been placed on the case of Kotha Subba Chetty v. Queen (15) for the proposition that no charge of perjury could ever be maintained in such a case With all respect, I am not prepared to accept this view. Their Lordships' judgment is very short and is not supported by any authority. It is also not clear from their Lordships' judgment whether the pleader had given perjured evidence voluntarily or under compulsion. If an enquiry under the disciplinary jurisdiction of this Court is not a criminal enquiry, S. 342, Cl. (4), Criminal P. C., has no application whatsoever Our attention has not been invited to any other statutory provision prohibiting the person against whom a judicial enquiry is proceeding from being put on oath or being made to answer questions relevant thereto

Section 2, Evidence Act, extends the provisions of that Act to all judicial proceedings. S. 118 declares that all persons shall be competent to testify the facts in issue unless they are non compos mentis or otherwise incapable of understanding questions or giving rational answers. Ss. 121 to 131 protect certain witnesses from answering certain questions. These sections do not apply to the present case S. 132 in clear and express terms provides that no witness shall be excused from answering questions in issue in a judicial proceeding on the ground that such question may criminate or tend to criminate him or that they will expose or tend to expose him to a penalty of forfeiture of any kind The only protection afforded to him by the proviso to that section is that the answers given by him shall not be used against him in a criminal proceeding other than a prosecution for giving false evidence by such answer.

The maxim nemo teonetur seipsum accusare does not apply here to the same extent as in England and permits of a person being put questions which tend to expose him to a penalty or punishment other than a punishment in a criminal case. It also permits of such a person being prosecuted for perjury if, in order to avoid such penalty, or for other reasons he commits perjury I am prepared to concede that it is extremely undesirable that a pleader should be compelled to answer questions on oath in an inquiry against him and then be prosecuted for perjury for giving false answers to such questions As at present advised I am not prepared to go any further than that Reference to the decided cases shows that a legal practitioner often files an affidavit of his own in explanation of the allegations made against him and I am certainly of the opinion that where he voluntarily offers to file an affidavit or offers to go into the witness box for the purpose of disproving the allegations made against him he has a right to do so. Under the English Evidence Act, 1898, 61 & 62 Vic. Ch. 36, even a person accused of a criminal offence is permitted to offer himself as a witness at his own trial, and renders himself liable for perjury if he is guilty of it. There is no reason why a pleader who voluntarily and deliberately commits perjury for the purpose of avoiding punishment in disciplinary proceedings should not likewise be dealt with. It is true that in the present case Mr L. did not expressly volunteer to give evidence and that after Jeewansing's evidence was over he was put on oath inadvertently by the Court. But he did not protest against giving evidence or claim any privilege and the Court did not apply its mind whether he should be compelled to answer questions or not If he had objected either to his being put on oath or to answering any particular question it was open to the Court to draw an adverse inference against him. Having raised no protest, it is not open to him to urge that as he was improperly put on oath (assuming that to be the state of law) the answers given by him if found to be false should not be taken into account in determining whether his conduct is worthy of being a member of the honourable profession to which he belongs.

In the end it was faintly suggested that the seventh charge should not be taken into consideration until and unless Mr. L had been prosecuted in a criminal Court for the offence of perjury. Reliance was placed on In the matter of Chandi Charan Mitter (16), Emperor v. Rajendra Kumar Dutt (17) and Emperor v Satish Chandra Singha (18). None of these cases lays down that where the accusation against the pleader is in the nature of a criminal offence his conviction in a criminal Court is a sine qua non to the exercise of the disciplinary jurisdiction of this Court Each case must depend on its own merits In dealing with this point a broad distinction has been drawn between the acts done by the pleader in his professional capacity or in the presence of the Court, and acts not done in such capacity and not in the presence of the Court. It is only in the latter case when the acts charged are indictable and are fairly denied, the Court will not proceed against the pleader until he has been convicted and will not compel him to answer on oath to a charge for which he may be indicted In the matter of Chandi Charan Mitter (16), Anon. (19), Anon. (20), Anon. (21) and Stephens v. Hill(22)

"But in all cases where an attorney abuses the process of the Court of which he is an officer, and his proceedings are of such a nature as tend to defeat justice in the very cause in which he is engaged professionally, I never heard that, because by possibility he may have thereby exposed himself to be indicted as a cheat or for a conspiracy, he is to be permitted to remain on the roll, and if the cases in Queen's Bench be carefully examined, it will be found that no such rule exists. Such a rule would be extremly injurious ; for in no case could any remedy be had against the attorney, unless the client would first prosecute him to conviction, until which time he could not be struck off the roll or prevented from practising. Where, indeed, the attorney is indicted for some matter not connected with the practice of his profession of an attorney, that also is a ground for striking him off the roll, although in that case it cannot be done until after conviction by a jury. Now, with respect to the merits of the case before us, I cannot conceive how any attorney employed to prosecute or defend a suit in a Court of justice can be justified in using any influence directly or indirectly, for the purpose of preventing a witness who has been subpoenaed by his adversary from coming forward to give evidence. The present charge is, therefore, one of a very serious nature, as the proceeding complained of would, if unchecked, be an easy way for any attorney to win his causes , and is it to be said that no remedy can be had unless he is first indicted, and that the Court has no power to at once strike him off the roll ? If an indictment is to be first preferred, the point at issue in it might, from its very nature, be one of which a jury would not be the best judges, and more proper to be determined by the Court, who are always the fittest tribunal to decide on complaints of technical misconduct, and to determine not only the degree of severity which ought to be resorted to but the proper cases for the exercise of that mercy which they are ever ready to extend where they see just ground for it."

In the present case false statements were made in the course of the enquiry against Mr L and the proper tribunal to judge of the severity or otherwise of the punishment to be inflicted on him is this Court. Such false statements are generally taken into account in determining the punishment to be inflicted upon the delinquent. As authority for that proposition it would be sufficient to refer to the case of Ex parte Law Society, In re A Solicitor (6) referred to above

The learned counsel has appealed to us for a lenient view of the case. He has urged that Mr. L. is not the only black sheep in the fold who has broken the rule with regard to the minimum fee to be accepted by pleaders. This is probably true to a certain extent. But the same thing cannot be said in respect of failure by him to keep a fee book and a ledger of his clients' account or his conduct in misleading the Court and untrue answers Taking, however, into consideration all the circumstances of the case I agree with the learned Judicial Commissioner whose judgment I have had the privilege of listening to, that Mr L. be suspended from practice for a period of one year from the date on which the order of interim suspension was passed against him and that he do surrender his sanad to the Registrar of this Court forthwith

De Souza, A. J C—I concur with the judgment delivered by the learned Judicial Commissioner I should like to add one word about the devious course taken by the proceedings in this enquiry in consequence, no doubt, of no rules of procedure having been extended to this Province beyond the general provisions of S. 40, Legal Practitioners Act 18 of 1879, which enacts that no pleader, mukhtiar or revenue agent shall be suspended or dismissed under this Act unless he has been allowed an opportunity of defending himself before the authority suspending or dismissing him. The proceedings were initiated on a petition made by one Jeewansing Budhasing on 29th January 1927, to the Judge of the Court of the Small Causes at Karachi complaining, first, that Mr. L was guilty of wilful neglect to appear in Court without any justification after receipt of full fees at the hearing of a suit which had been filed against him by one Locumal and thus liable to be dealt with under the provisions of S 13, Legal Practitioners Act 18 of 1879, and, secondly, that Mr. L was also further guilty of unprofessional conduct as he obtained one eight annas Court-fee stamp from the applicant Jeewansing by making a false representation that the same was required for filing a vakalatnama when no such vakalatnama was required to be filed as Mr. L. is an advocate.

As this complaint referred to proceedings that took place in his own Court, it was competent to the learned Small Cause Court Judge under the direction of the Judicial Commissioner, as S. 14 of the Act has not been extended to Sind, to make an enquiry into the allegations made by Jeewansing and if in his opinion a prima facie case had been made out against Mr L. to submit his proceedings to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind for such action as the Court might deem fit to take in the exercise of its disciplinary jurisdiction. If this had been done a good deal of this Court's time would have been saved The learned Judge of the Small Cause Court, however, merely forwarded Jeewansing's petition to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner and the learned Judicial Commissioner after calling for Mr. L's explanation and sending the papers to the Small Cause Court Judge for any remarks which he might wish to make thereon, referred the matter for enquiry to one of the Judges of this Court, Mr. Rupchand, A J. C. Mr. Rupchand after examining the petitioner Jeewansing and after recording the statement on oath of Mr. L came to the conclusion that besides the allegations made in Jeewansing's petition there were several other acts of misconduct disclosed against Mr L, in the course of the enquiry and on 8th June 1927, he submitted the proceedings to the Judicial Commissioner formulating nine distinct charges of misconduct against Mr L. The Judicial Commissioner directed that the matter be heard by Full Bench

When the matter came on for hearing before the Full Bench on 27th June 1927 Mr. O'Sullivan, counsel for Mr. L., contended that he had no notice of any of the charges contained in Mr Rupchand's report save the two charges made in Jeewansing's petition. In these circumstances it was open to Mr. O'Sullivan to ask the Full Bench to confine itself to the charges of which Mr. L, had notice and to disregard the other charges, and I think the Full Bench following the decision of a Full Bench of the Patna High Court In the matter of Jugal Chandra Mazumdar (23) would have had to accept Mr. O'Sullivan's contention and acquit Mr. L., on those charges

Mr O'Sullivan, however, contented himself with asking an opportunity to meet the further charges which he said had been suddenly sprung upon him and the Full Bench accordingly remitted the enquiry to Mr. Rupchand for taking Mr. L's explanation on the added charges. No further evidence was tendered or taken after the remand. Mr L on 29th August 1927, put in a statement denying these charges, which Mr. O'Sullivan intimated was not to be regarded as an explanation but rather in the nature of a statement, adding that his explanation will come in with his arguments which he will advance before the Full Bench. I may add that in the course of the hearing before the Full Bench Aston, A J C., threw out a suggestion that there was a multiplicity of charges framed against Mr. L which might possibly embarrass his defence and, if possible, some of the charges should be deleted.

Accordingly, on 29th August 1927, Mr. Rupchand submitted the amended report formulating seven distinct charges against Mr. L which have now come up for hearing before the Full Bench. It is curious to note that the two charges made by Jeewansing in his petition which originated the enquiry have been abandoned, the charges of misappropriating annas eight being dropped in the amended report as it practically depended upon Jeewansing's word as against Mr. L's word and the charge of wilful neglect to put in appearance at the hearing of the suit in the Small Cause Court not being pressed by the learned Government Pleader as Mr L's default is quite consistent with a bona fide mistake. It comes to this then that the misconduct under enquiry before the Full Bench is misconduct that came to light in Mr L's defence in the course of the enquiry.

In In the matter of Parbati Charan Chatterji (24) it was laid down by the Allahabad High Court that misconduct must be made out by the admission of the party concerned or on evidence to the satisfaction of the Court. And in the leading case In re An Attorney (25) a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court consisting of Jenkins, C. J. and Stephen and Chaudhuri, JJ, laid down that :

"where there was a positive sworn denial of the misconduct by the attorney coupled with an explanation which was not demonstrably false, even a strong case of suspicion would not justify disciplinary action against the attorney on a summary proceeding "

(23) [1916] 20 C. W. N. 1016=34 I. C. 645=17 Cr. L. J. 229 (F.B.).

(25) [1913] 41 Cal. 113=19 I. C. 933=14 Cr. L. J. 305.

To the same effect are the observations of the Bombay High Court in Government Pleader v Raghanath S. Sule (26) where it was held that the enquiry is of a quasi criminal character and the Court must have strict proof of the professional misconduct imputed.

Now, with regard to the first two charges, viz., first, that he failed to keep a register of fees settled, the amount settled and the name of the client as required by R 35 of the Rules of the Bar Association for a number of years preceding 1st January 1927, and, second, that he failed to keep a register showing every sum deposited by each client for expenses and the sum expended on his behalf as required by R. 36, Rules of the Bar Association, there is an admission by Mr. L. that he is guilty on those charges. With regard to the other charges, however, I venture to think that there is no evidence legally admissible against Mr. L. which would justify a finding that he is guilty on those charges. On charge 3 that Mr. L agreed to receive low fees in contravention of R 32 (b), Rules of the Bar Association, there is nothing beyond the word of Jeewansing against the word of Mr L. and on charges 4 to 7 regarding the alleged false entries made in the fee book produced by Mr L. or in the alternative the fabrication of the fee book and the alleged perjury said to have been committed by Mr. L. In these proceedings there is nothing beyond the report made by the learned Judge who held the enquiry and is now one of the Judges constituting the Full Bench before whom the alleged perjury and forgery are said to have been committed and the fee book produced for our inspection, suspicious looking, no doubt which we are asked to say is a forgery but which Mr L. solemnly swears is a genuine document. As was pointed out by Jenkins, C. J., In In re An Attorney (25) the role of prosecutor and Judge thus thrust upon the Full Bench is invidious and one to be deprecated

As regards misconduct charged in charges 1 and 2 to which Mr. L. pleads guilty, Mr. O'Sullivan argued that they were in the nature of a trivial breach of one of the Rules of the Bar Association which he contended is not enforced in any other Province in India. In developing his argument Mr. O'Sullivan contended that the only power to make rules which the Court of the Judicial Commisssoner possessed were the powers under S. 16, Cl. (1), Sind Courts Act "to make rules for the qualification and admission of proper persons to be pleaders" When once those rules are framed he argued the Court was functus officio and any other rule purporting to be made and sanctioned by the Court under this section for the conduct of pleaders after admission was ultra vires But it seems to me that the Court which under S 16 (3), Sind Courts Act, has power to remove or to suspend from practice for misbehaviour any person admitted to be a pleader has by necessary implication, power to define by judicial decision or otherwise what constitutes misbehaviour and laying down canons of good behaviour, departure from which may constitute misbehaviour. The rules framed by the Bar Association with the approval of the Court must, I think, be regarded as laying a standard of good behaviour to which pleaders should ordinarily conform. But it does not necessarily follow that a breach of all or any of these rules would call for the exercise of the Court's disciplinary jurisdiction The rules are exhortatory but not punitive. They refer to matters of varying degrees of gravity with varying sanctions attaching to them. In some cases censure by the Committee is considered a sufficient punishment (see R 28) in others suspension or expulsion from membership of the Bar Association. And, in extreme cases a report to the Judicial Commissioner.

Mr. Kalumal a representative of the Committee of the Bar Association who argued the case as amicus curiae claims for these rules a much higher sanction. He referred to the terms of the sanad conferred on a pleader on admission to the Bar and argued that every pleader by the mere fact of accepting his sanad agrees to be bound by the conditions endorsed on the sanad which among others include a promise to be a member and submit to the rules both of the Bar Association of the District and of the Karachi Bar Association. He contended there was here a contractual obligation imposed upon the pleader or at any rate an obligation of honour to resile from which was dishonourable and unprofessional and called for disciplinary action from the Court. Mr. Kalumal could hardly have been serious when he advanced this argument I presume that the contracting parties here contemplated are the Court of the Judicial Commissioner on the one hand and the aspiring candidate for the Bar on the other. Obviously these contracting parties are not in a position to deal at arm's length. Ex hypothesi the conditions imposed in the sanad would be ultra vires. If so, the result will follow that the grant is valid and the conditions void.

Mr. L has pleaded guilty to the two charges of failing to keep a register of fees settled, the amount settled and the name of the client and to keep a register showing every sum deposited by such client for expenses and the sum expended on his behalf. It is true that no dishonesty is alleged or proved in consequence of his failure to keep these books and the plea of guilty cannot be construed as anything beyond an admission that he has failed to conform to Rr. 35 and 36, Rules of the Bar Association Mr. O'Sullivan asks us not to take any more serious view of this case than that there has been a technical breach of a Rule of the Bar Association. But in this Province the rule has been held to possess a much higher sanction and that a violation of it constituting as it does a breach of the relation of confidence and trust which should exist between pleader and client amounts to "misbehaviour" which calls for disciplinary action : vide Fawcett, A. J. C., in Varanbai v M, Pleader (1).

Still in view of the absence of any allegation or proof of dishonest conduct in consequence of the failure to keep regular accounts I was inclined to take a lenient view of the case but I agree that the prevarications and subterfuges to which Mr L. resorted in conducting the defence aggravated his original offence. I, therefore, concur in the order proposed by the learned Judicial Commissioner.

Rupchand, A. J. C —This is an appeal against the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge, Larkana, convicting the accused under S 211, Part 2, I P. C., and sentencing him to nine months rigorous imprisonment There is hardly any dispute about the facts and the only question argued before us in one of law.

It appears that on or about 15th August 1927 the accused sent two petitions one addressed to the Assistant Superintendent of Police and the other to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Larkana making serious allegations of trespass and theft against certain relatives of his The petition addressed to the Assistant Superintendent of Police was dealt with by the Inspector of Police. He found that the allegations made by the accused had no foundation. He accordingly applied to the District Superintendent of Police for sanction to prosecute the accused. On 11th October 1927 he obtained a sanction from the District Superintendent of Police to prosecute the accused and on 21st October 1927 he lodged the present complaint under S 211, I P. C before the First Class Magistrate, Larkana, who committed the case to the Sessions.

The petition addressed by the accused to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was in similar terms except that it was headed as a complaint and contained the names of witnesses whom the accused wished to examine. It also bore the usual court-fee stamp of eight annas It was received by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on 16th August. He took no action upon it until 24th October 1927 when he is said to have passed some order which is not before us

Now in the Sessions Court it was urged on behalf of the accused that as the accused had made the alleged false charge against his relatives simultaneously to the police and the Sub-Divisional Magistrate S. 195, (1) (b) was a bar to his prosecution by the police and that the only complaint on which he could be tried and convicted would be one filed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate.

In dealing with this point the learned Sessions Judge has said :

"The sanction (Ex. 5), therefore, was granted and the proceedings before the Committing Magistrate were started under that sanction prior to the date on which the Magistrate took cognizance of the complaint (Ex. 7) to him. The Magistrate came to know after 25th October 1927 that action upon the police complaint was already taken and the accused was proceeded with before the Committing Magistrate Nothing, therefore, remained for the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to do in the matter and his second sanction was obviously not necessary."

On behalf of the accused, it has been argued that the observations of the learned Sessions Judge are contrary to the provisions of S 195 (b) and the case law on the point Reliance has been placed on Tayebullah v. Emperor (1), Brown v. Anandalal Mullick (2), Sheikh Samir v. Sajidar Rahman (3), Ramchand Nanumal v. Emperor (4), Marugan v. Gutha Rami Naidu A. R. 1928 Rang. 243, Mahomed Yassin v. Emperor (5) On the other hand, it has been contended on behalf of the Crown that the petition sent by the accused to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was not a complaint as it was not personally presented and that as no attempt was made by the accused to proceed with it S. 195 (1) (b) had no application I am afraid I cannot accept either of the contentions of the learned Public Prosecutor as sound.

Section 4, Cl. (h), Criminal P C., defines a complaint to mean an allegation made either orally or in writing to a Magistrate with a view to his taking action under the Criminal Procedure Code that some person whether known or unknown had committed an offence.

This section does not prescribe that the complaint should be made to the Magistrate in person and that it may not be posted to him or that if it is posted it is not a complaint at all. Our attention has been invited to S. 200, Criminal P. C, which provides that a Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence on a complaint shall at once examine the complainant upon oath and reduce in writing the substance of his examination

But again that section requires the Magistrate to examine the complainant without delay after he has taken cognizance of it, and does not prevent the Magistrate from calling upon the complainant to appear before him on a date to be fixed by him.

Clause (a) dispenses with the necessity of examining the complainant on oath where the complaint is not being dealt with by the Magistrate taking cognizance of the offence himself but is being transferred by him to another Magistrate.

Clause (aa) likewise dispenses with the necessity of examining the complainant where the complaint is filed by a public officer, in his official capacity or where the complaint is filed by the Court.

In both these instances it would appear that it is not essential that the complaint should be presented in person by the complainant and the fact that it is not so presented, does not render it the less a complaint under the Code.

A careful reading of that section therefore points rather to the conclusion that for the purpose of vesting the Magistrate with jurisdiction to take cognizance of a case on a complaint made to him it is not essential that such complaint should be presented to him by the complainant personally. Kettar Mohan Mitter v Emperor (6) and Chote Maharaj v. Emperor (7) are cases where more letters addressed to a Magistrate which complied with the ingredients of S. 4, Cl. (h) were held to be complaints.

The petition in the present case not only falls within the definition of that section but is headed and duly stamped as such. In my opinion it was intended to be filed as a complaint and no sufficient grounds have been shown to us that it should not be treated as such.

The fact that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate took no action on it until after the filing of the present case by the police or the further fact that the accused has shown no anxiety to proceed with his complaint in Court, were in my opinion equally insufficient to vest the Magistrate before whom the present complaint was filed with jurisdiction to proceed with it after he had been apprised of the fact that the accused had made a complaint to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on the same facts as disclosed by him in his petition to the police.

Section 195 (1) (b) reads as follows :

"No Court shall take cognizance of any offence punishable under any of the following sections of the same Code namely Ss. 193, 194, 195, 196, 199, 200, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211 and 228 when such offence is alleged to have been committed in or in relation to any proceedings in any Court except on the complaint in writing or such Court or some other Court to which such Court is subordinate."

It requires the complaint of the Court not only in respect of certain offence committed in the proceedings in the Court but in relation to any proceedings in the Court

The expression "in relation to any proceedings" is very general and is wide enough to cover a proceeding in contemplation before a criminal Court though the proceedings may not have commenced when the offence was committed: cf. In re Vasudev Ramchandra Joshi (8).

Where a person is put on his trial under S 211, I. P C. in respect of an alleged false accusation by him against another it is a question of fact to be decided in the particular circumstances of that case whether that person made such false accusation in contemplation of proceedings which he intended to take in a Court or not. Where the accused has made a false accusation at the same time in two documents one a petition addressed to the Assistant Superintendent of Police and the other a complaint posted to a criminal Court it may be fairly presumed that he did so with the object of moving the criminal Court to take proceedings. The offence committed by him, therefore, falls within the purview of the expression "in relation to criminal proceedings" within the meaning of the above section.

The cases referred to by the learned pleader for the accused, all lay down that where a false information given to the police was followed by a complaint to the Magistrate on the same facts and the same charge the sanction of such Magistrate under the old S. 195 and a complaint in writing by such Magistrate under the present amended section was essential. It has also been held that it was immaterial whether the complaint subsequently presented by the accused had been actually proceeded with or not: see Shaikh Mahomed Yassin v. King Emperor (4).

Our attention has not been drawn to anything in S. 195 (1) (b), Criminal P.C., to suggest that it has no application to a case where the Magistrate has not proceeded with the complaint before him whether it be suo motu or on account of the indifference of the complainant in prosecuting his complaint, and I am not prepared to interpolate into this clause a condition precedent that it is not to come into operation unless the Magistrate has proceeded with the complaint before him and that if he has not done so for any reason whatever this clause shall not come into operation.

I think that as soon as the police officer in charge of the present case came to know that a complaint had been filed in respect of the same alleged false charge before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate it was his duty to have moved the learned Magistrate to file a complaint on behalf of the Court and on that being done he should have allowed his own complaint to be dropped.

In my opinion the whole trial is bad and the conviction and sentence of the accused cannot be maintained

As this appeal succeeds on a technical ground I would leave it open to the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate to file a complaint in respect of the same offence if he thinks it desirable specially in view of the serious allegations made by the accused against persons who are alleged to be respectable. Before doing so, he will no doubt afford an opportunity to the accused of being heard

Order.—This is an application under S. 4, Provincial Insolvency Act, by the Official Receiver in whom the property of certain insolvents vests for a declaration that a house at Amritsar in the Punjab is the property of the insolvents The insolvents raise the objection that the Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the application and that if it has jurisdiction it should not entertain it. It is argued that under S. 5 of the Act, the Courts have the same powers under the Act, as they have under the Civil Procedure Code and as this Court has no territorial jurisdiction at Amritsar the only Court which would have jurisdiction under Art. 16 (d), Civil P. C. would be the Amritsar Court. S. 5 is, however, stated to be subject to the other provisions of the Provincial Insolvency Act, and clearly the provisions as to the place of suing in the Civil Procedure Code do not apply to proceedings under the Provincial Insolvency Act, as S. 11 which gives the Court its jurisdiction in insolvency matters is not at all in accordance with those provisions. Moreover the whole of the insolvent's property whether within or without the territorial jurisdiction of the Court vests under S. 28 (2) in the Court or its Receiver. Proceedings under S. 4 are, therefore, not restricted to the decision of the title and property within the territorial jurisdiction of the Court and the Court in the present case has jurisdiction It is argued that the matter cannot properly be decided in this Court on evidence taken on commission but the inconvenience, if any, will be the same for both parties. Moreover, to refer the Official Receiver to a suit would mean a great delay and would be unjust to the creditors. The application, is, therefore, entertained and the commission should now issue.

If the pauper purposely delays in bringing the legal representatives of the deceased opponent on the record within a reasonable time it is within the discretion of the Court to punish him by rejecting his application either under the provisions of O 33, R 9 (a) read with S. 141 treating his failure to bring the legal representatives on the record within the time allowed by the Court as vexatious or improper conduct on his part in the course of the proceedings or under the provisions of S. 151 as an abuse of the process of the Court. [P 136 C 2]

Judgment — I think the learned Second Registrar was right in holding that an application for bringing on the record the legal representatives of a deceased opponent in an application for permission to sue in forma pauperis is not governed by the provisions of Art. 177, Lim. Act Before the Court grants permission to the applicant to file a suit in forma pauperis, there is no suit before the Court, and before the application to sue in forma pauperis is granted, there is no plaintiff and no defendant The parties to the application are referred to as the applicant and the opponent. On the very face of it O. 22, Civil P. C., deals with applications to bring on record the legal representatives of parties to a suit dying during the pendency of the suit, and therefore, reading the provisions of O. 22, Civil P. C., with those of Art. 177, Lim. Act, there can be no doubt that that article applies to suits, and that this is so is also abundantly clear from the provisions of O 22, R 4, Civil P. C, which provides the penalty for such non-joinder as the abatement of the suit There being no suit before the Court there could be no abatement. Mr. Jamiatrai has contended that S. 141 makes the provisions of the Code applicable to applications which are not suits and that O. 22, Civil P. C., and Art. 177 Lim. Act, should, therefore, apply to applications to sue in forma pauperis But all that is said in S 141 is that the procedure provided in the Code in regard to suits shall be followed as far as it can be made applicable in all proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction Therefore, though no doubt the precedure laid down in O. 22, Civil P. C requiring a plaintiff to bring on the record the legal representatives of a deceased defendant may apply to applications which are not suits, it does not follow therefrom that the penalties provided in O. 22, R 4, Civil P. C or the period of limitation prescribed for making applications under O. 22, Civil P. C. can without any express provision in that behalf, be said to apply to applications which are not suits In Janardhan Vithal v Anant Mahadev (1) a somewhat similar plea under Art, 171-B, Sch. 2, Act 15 of 1877 corresponding to Art 177, present Limitation Act, was held not to apply to a forma pauperis inquiry It has been suggested that in the absence of a penalty being imposed on a pauper, it would be open to him to delay bringing the legal representatives of a deceased opponent on the record for an ultimated time to the serious prejudice of the respondent. I do not think the Court is so powerless. If the pauper purposely delays in bringing the legal representatives of the deceased opponent on the record within a reasonable time, it is always within the discretion of the Court to punish him by rejecting his application either under the provisions of O 33, R. 9 Cl. (a), Civil P. C. read with S. 141, Civil P. C., treating his failure to bring the legal representatives on the record within the time allowed by the Court as vexatious or improper conduct on his part in the course of the proceedings or under the provisions of S 151, Civil P. C. as an abuse of the process of the Court I therefore, see no reason to interfere with the order of the learned Second Registrar and hold that the applicant do pay costs of this hearing.

Held that though the delay was not due to prosecution and the case was not one in which bail should have been granted but as it was not a case of urgency the High Court would not interfere in revision as there were no orders or application from the Government in this respect for obtaining which there was sufficient time for the prosecution 1 *S. C. M. Lobo—for the Crown.

T. G. Elphinston—for Opponent

Percival, J. C. — This is a revision application by the Public Prosecutor for Sind asking this Court to revise the order of the learned Sessions Judge, Larkana, granting bail to certain persons who have been committed for trial to the Sessions Court of Larakana under S. 366, I. P. C.

The facts as regards bail are briefly that these accused, eight persons in all, were committed for trial to the Sessions Court under S. 366. The bail application originally came before the Sessions Judge of Larkana (Mr. Dialmal Doulatram) on 20th October 1928, and he passed an order refusing to grant bail. A revision application was then made to this Court which was summarily dismissed. The sessions case, in which these men were concerned, however, was delayed owing to the fact that a subsequent connected case was brought under Ss. 302, 368 and other sections against Wahidbux Bhutto and other persons. The persons concerned in the present application are servants of Wahidbux Bhutto, who is a big zamindar and an M. L. A. Subsequently another application was made to the learned Sessions Judge of Larkana, who is now Mr. Master, and he also rejected the application on 25th January 1929. A further application was again made to Mr. Master, and finally in his order dated 23rd February 1929 the learned Sessions Judge released these persons on bail, on the ground of the delay which was occurring before the Sessions case against the present applicants could be taken up in the Sessions Court.

The learned Public Prosecutor has applied to this Court on the ground chiefly that the delay in the case is not due to the Crown, and that, if these accused are allowed to remain on bail, the witnesses will be tampered with; para 7 of his application runs as follows

"That the learned Judge's order is utterly and entirely unjustified, and is causing and will continue to cause grave prejudice to the Crown and is calculated to defeat the ends of justice. The opponents are the servants of Wadero Wahidbux Bhutto, who is himself along with others being prosecuted for offences under Ss. 368, 302, etc., I. P. C. The opponents and their master have used and are continuing to use every effort to tamper with the witnesses, both in the above case and in the case now pending before the Special Magistrate, Larkana."

Now, after hearing the learned Public Prosecutor and the learned counsel for the accused, I must say, speaking for myself, I should not have passed the order passed by the learned Sessions Judge on 23rd February 1929. It seems to me that the order passed by Mr. Dialmal Doulatram on 20th October 1928 so well explains the position that it is desirable simply to quote it as showing the reasons against the grant of bail. He said in his judgment as follows:

"This is hardly the stage and it is not the practice of this Court to deal with the merits of the case at this stage. When, however, the best arguments of the applicants rest upon a consideration of the merits, some remarks appear unavoidable. The learned Magistrate has given reasons that a prima facie case was made out against the accused so that they be tried before this Court. I agree with the conclusion of the learned Magistrate. That the accused are closely connected with Wahidbux Bhutto cannot be denied. The accused themselves have mentioned in their statements how they are connected with him. That he is an influential zamindar and an M. L. A, also cannot be denied. The complaint made is that the evidence has been tempered with. I am of opinion that the complaint of the learned A P P appears justified. To enlarge the accused on bail would be to encourage further tampering and consequent failure of justice. It is obvious that the woman has not yet been produced. The offence charged is a non-bailable one and although this Court has considerable discretion to enlarge on bail persons accused of such offences in the circumstances of this case, discretion will be wisely exercised by refusing the bail."

Now that order very satisfactorily disposes of the whole question, except as regards delay occurring in the other case which is proceeding against Wahidbux and others. And as regards that case the main argument advanced by the learned Public Prosecutor is that the delay is primarily due to the accused themselves and not to the Public Prosecutor. After hearing the Public Prosecutor and the learned counsel on the other side I am disposed to agree with the learned Public Prosecutor on this point. However, at the same time we have to remember that this matter has now come before us in revision While therefore one may not accept the view taken by the learned Sessions Judge and prefer the view taken by his predecessor Mr. Dialmal, still it is a different question when we have to decide whether to remand these accused person to jail, when they have been already enlarged on bail. I do not accept the contention of the learned counsel for the accused that this Court should not interfere in bail applications of this nature except on an application by Government, because such cases can be distinguished from cases in which there is no urgency, and in which it is desirable that the order of Government should be obtained. For instance one of the cases cited was one in which a District Magistrate proposed that certain words used by a Sessions Judge in his judgment should be expunged Now in a case of this character there is no urgency. It is right therefore for the Court in such a case to take action only on a reference by Government. But in bail applications the position is different. At the same time it is desirable for the Public Prosecutor to apply for the orders of Government in cases in which there is sufficient time to do so. In this instance there was time for the learned Public Prosecutor to obtain the order from Government, and it does not appear from the record that Government themselves have displayed any special desire for the accused to be remanded to prison. We know only that the application is "that under instructions from the District Magistrate, Larkana" There is also another slight difficulty in this case, namely that the delay that is occurring is in the case against Wahidbux Bhutto and others. So, assuming that Wahidbux Bhutto and other accused are unduly delaying the case against them, still it cannot be shown directly that the present accused are responsible for that delay.

Accordingly, though I do not agree myself with the view taken by the learned Sessions Judge and prefer the view taken by his predecessor, still, in the circumstances of the present case, it is not desirable to interfere with his order at present. It will be open to the learned Public Prosecutor, if he wishes to do so, to take the orders of Government, to apply to this Court again, not only in respect of the present accused but also in respect of Wahidbux in the other case, as Wahidbux is on bail in that case.

One remark is made by the learned Sessions Judge in his judgment, which, I think also should be mentioned, as I do not agree with it. His observation is :

"Besides the considerations of the cases cited by Mr. Lobo will not apply to the present case when the Sessions case has been adjourned sine die at the request of the prosecution and when it is not known when it will be eventually taken up by this Court, and when there is an intense desire on the part of the prosecution to lock up the applicants as under-trial prisoners for an indefinite period."

Now it seems to me that that remark is hardly justified. The accused have been committed to the Sessions for trial for an offence punishable under .S. 366, I P. C., a nonbailable offence, and I am of opinion that it is the clear duty of the Public Prosecutor to ask that they should be kept in prison, unless there are special reasons why they should be released on bail. I think it would have a very bad effect, if the view is adopted that, because an accused person delays the trial of the case against him, therefore there is reason for him to be released on bail

However, having regard to all the facts of this case, as indicated above, I think it is not desirable to interfere at present with the order of the learned Sessions Judge.

In the course of the argument in this case, however, the learned Public Prosecutor also drew attention to the delay which was taking place in the case against Wahidbux Bhutto, which, as indicated above, is closely connected with the present case. The learned counsel for the accused in this case argued that no reference should be made to that case, because the accused are not before us I, however, do not agree with his suggestion. The two cases are closely connected, and it is on account of the delay which is occurring in the other case that the learned Sessions Judge enlarged the accused in the present case. So it is necessary for the purpose of the present application to consider whether those proceedings are being unduly protracted. Now the learned Public Prosecutor in the course of his arguments observed that :

"The committal proceedings in that case are being protracted beyond all limit. Witness Ex. 34 examination-in-chief 152lines, the cross-examination begins at about line 165 and extends up to line 770, witness Ex. 37 examination in chief is 260 lines, cross examination goes on to line 1120. The Mukhtiarkar of Tatta was called as a formal witness. Examination in chief is 199 lines, his cross-examination goes on to line 630. etc."

Now I do not wish to express any opinion on the question whether the Magistrate should or should not commit that case to the Sessions That is a different matter and is not before us. But it seems to me that it is only right and proper to make a few observations regarding the cross-examination of witnesses in that case, which, as indicated above, is intimately connected with the application which is now before us Now I have had considerable experience as a Sessions Judge in the Presidency proper, and I never came across a case in which there had been prolonged cross-examination in the Committing Magistrate's Court. It is hardly necessary to repeat. what is well known, namely, that the Magistrate in committal proceedings has only to find out whether there is a prima facie case for committing to the Sessions or whether there is no prima facie case. I am of opinion. that, for the purpose of finding whether there is a prima facie case or not, it is not necessary to extend the cross examination of a witness to 750 lines or so. It appears to be a speciality of Sind that committal proceedings are treated almost as a regular trial, and the proceedings are very greatly protracted It seems to me that this long cross examination of the witnesses in the committal preceedings against Wahidbux cannot be justified. In the committal proceedings the Magistrate has simply to find whether there is a prima facie case for committal or not I think, therefore, that the learned Magistrate will be well advised to prevent any further cross-examination which will not help him in arriving at the simple decision at which he has to arrive, namely whether there is a prima facie case for committal or not With these remarks, I would dismiss the application

Barlee, A J. C —I would reject this application for two reasons: firstly, I think that we must be careful not to weaken the rule laid down in the case of Emperor v. Shah Nawaz Bachal (1), that when a District Magistrate is dissatisfied with an order made by the Court of Sessions, his proper course is to communicate with the Local Government so that the High Court may be moved in the regular way. It is true that in exceptional circumstances, we have power to interfere whatever the source of our information, and at first, when I saw the papers of this case I thought that this was perhaps a case where interference would be justified Bail matters are often urgent and irreparable damage may be caused to the public interests by an ill advised order of release. But, on looking into the facts, I am not convinced of the urgency of the matter The order complained of was made on 23rd February and it does not appear to me that any particular effort has been made to treat the case as urgent Further the accused have been at large for four weeks and I think no real damage is likely to occur at this stage if the accused are not locked up again They have had time to approach the prosecution witnesses ; and in any case, whether they are in prison or free, the defence will have no difficulty in tampering with the witnesses if they are open to influence. It does not appear, then, that the help of this Court is so urgently required as to justify departure from the ordinary rule.

My second and principal reason is that it seems to me inequitable to insist on locking up these accused while the man, who is said to be their leader, and who is accused of a much more serious offence is on bail. It is true that a prima facie case has been made out against these accused while Wahidbux is still before the Committing Magistrate. But this is scarcely a ground for a distinction between the cases, as the law permits and even directs the arrest of persons accused of serious crime save in exceptional circumstances, and does not wait for a prima facie case to be made. I find it hard to distinguish against the agents in favour of the principal and I feel that it would be inequitable to treat them differently. It cannot be that they are more likely to tamper with evidence and the only possible ground for distinction which I can think is that they may, but he cannot possibly, disappear But this is not a reason put forward by the learned Public Prosecutor. I would say, however, that whilst I can find no reason for making this case an exception to the rule in Shah Nawaz Wd. Bachal I do not wish it to be understood that I agree with the order of the learned Sessions Judge. This case and its companion case against Wahidbux Bhutto are very important from a public point of view, and it must be recognized that the police have had to contend with very great difficulties. In such circumstances Magistrates and Sessions Judges should recognize difficulties of prosecution and should avoid, if possible, adding to them I therefore agree with the order proposed by the learned Judicial Commissioner

Chandumal Assanmal and others—Defendants.

Suit No. 790 of 1927, Decided on 26th February 1929.

(a) Limitation Act, Art. 116 — Mortgagor promising to pay interest every month —Mortgage-deed providing that on failure to pay such interest mortgagor shall pay principal and interest before expiry of mortgage period whenever mortgagee would demand—Cause of action arises from default to pay monthly interest and not at expiry of mortgage period—Limitation Act Art. 75.

Where in a mortgage-deed the mortgagor promises to pay interest at the end of every month and the deed further provides that in case of default to pay such interest, the mortgagor shall return the principal as well as interest before the expiry of the mortgage period, whenever the creditor would demand the same, the cause of action arises on the day on which default in paying monthly interest is made and time runs from that day and not when the mortgage period expires: *A. (b) Limitation Act—Interpretation.

There is no warrant for importing into the Limitation Act the provisions of a special English statute of limitation such as Ss. 3 and 4, Real Property Lim. Act, 1833 [P 143 C 2]

(c) Limitation Act, Art. 75—Mere laches on mortgagee's part in instituting suit is not proof of waiver—Transfer of Property Act, S. 112.

Mere laches on the part of the mortgagee in not selling the mortgaged property or instituting a suit for the recovery of the amount due to him within the period of limitation, is not tantamount of waiver and the mortgagee has to prove express waiver 5 Cal. 97, Foll. [P 144 C 2]

Tulsidas Ammamual—for Plaintiff.

G. A. Kikla—for Defendants.

Judgment.—The only plea raised in this suit is one of limitation. The mortgage bond executed by defendants 1 to 6 in favour of one Amanmal is dated 6th May 1920 It provides inter alia as follows:

"(We have) settled the interest thereof i. e. Rs. 100 at the rate of one rupee per cent per month. We shall pay this interest monthly . . . . . and return the principal amount in 12 months' time . . . . . If we continue to pay the interest punctually as agreed upon then the creditor will remit us four annas per cent. per month, out of the interest. But if we fail to pay it at the stipulated time, then the creditor is not bound to give us any discount nor shall we claim it. If, however, we do, then such claim on our part is and will remain void and ineffectual and we shall return the principal and interest amount before the expiry of 12 months whenever the creditor above named will demand the same."

By a deed of assignment dated 21st May 1921, Amanmal assigned his rights in the mortgage-deed to one Jiamal. Jiamal is dead, and his son is the plaintiff. He has sold the property in exercise of the express power of sale given to the mortgagee under the deed of mortgage, and has now filed this suit for recovery of the deficit resulting therefrom, but has limited his claim to a sum of Rs 5,000 only. Defendants 2 to 6 have been given up as they have been adjudicated as insolvents.

The defence of defendant 1, who is the only defendant on the record is that as there was a failure to pay interest in the very first month, the whole amount became payable at once, and that therefore under Arts. 65, 66, 68 and 80, whichever Article may be applicable, read with S 116, Lim. Act, this suit should have been brought within six years of the date on which the amount became payable under the mortgage bond, that is to say, on or about 21st June 1926, and as the plaint is dated 5th May 1927, the plaintiff's claim is barred by limitation. Mr Tulsidas has relied upon the case of the Official Receiver v. Hussain Lal Mahomed (1) in support of his contention that notwithstanding such failure to pay interest the period of limitation commenced to run from the expiry of 12 months when the amount was made repayable. In that case the mortgage-deed inter alia provided as follows.

"I shall repay the principal amount within two years and the creditor shall receive the same when I do so . . . . But if I fail to pay the fixed interest in any month punctually at the stipulated time as above, then there will be a breach of this promise, and in that event I shall pay back all the money together with interest in respect of which default is made when he demands even before the expiry of the above period."

My learned brother Lobo who tried that case held on the evidence that interest had been paid up to a certain date, that such payment revived limitation under S. 20, Lim. Act, and that the suit was therefore within time. He, however, made certain obiter dicta which are in favour of the plaintiff. With all respect I am not prepared to agree with the view taken by him. The learned Judge seems to have proceeded upon certain passages appearing in the judgments of Pratt, J. C. and Crouch, A. J. C. in the case of Vishindas Vadhuram v. Hotomal Ditomal (2) but in my opinion those passages have no application and that case as also the prior rulings of this Court on which it proceeded support the contrary view.

The earliest reported case is that of Jethanand v Lalamal (3). That was a case of an instalment decree which provided;

"If the defendant fails to pay any instalment, then he shall pay the whole balance at once . . . . But it shall be optional to the plaintiff to recover the entire amount at once or by instalments if there is default in payment of any instalment."

Crouch, A J. C., in delivering the judgment of the Bench said:

"Mr. Rupchand contends that the cases relied on by the lower Court do not cover the case where a creditor has a clear option given him by the decree. But as pointed out in Jadabchandra Baksh v. Bhairab Chandra Chuckerbutty (4), no distinction can be drawn between a case in which it is provided that on under payment of an instalment the whole amount shall become due and in which it is provided that on non-payment of an instalment the whole amount may be claimed. The proviso being for the benefit of the creditor the presumption is that he does not waive it, and the defendant may well consider the whole amount to be due from the time the creditor has a right to enforce it: see Hemp v. Garland cited in Sitab Chand Nahar v. Hyder Malla (5)."

In Kimatrai v. Wadero Sher Mahomed (6), the instalment mortgage bond in suit contained a clause in the following words:

"If I make any default I will be liable to pay the remaining amount at once and even then it will be in the power of the mortgagee to let the money remain with me or not."

It was contended before the Court that the last words "even then it will be in the power &c." amounted to an independent contract for the recovery of the instalments as previously provided in addition to the optional contract for the payment of the whole amount in default of payment of the instalment. This contention was negatived on the ground that clear words would be necessary to establish such a contract and it was held that the date of default in payment of the instalment was the starting point of limitation under S. 75, and that mere abstinence on the part of the creditor not to sue was not proof of waiver so as to affect limitation. In Vishindas v. Hotomal (2) the agreement provided as follows:

"The agreement is that within 12 months from this day we shall repay the principal amount to the lender. Interest on the above sum is fixed at the rate of eight annas per mensem from today .... If we fail to pay interest in any month, then we shall pay the creditor two months' interest together. Should we fail to pay the principal sum on due date as stipulated above, or monthly interest, or two months' interest together to the creditor then in that case the creditor aforesaid is at liberty to file a suit immediately and to recover the whole of the above amount with interest at the rate of one per cent per mensem until satisfaction."

The learned Judges held that time began to run when the default was made in the payment of interest, and that the clause which gave the creditor liberty to file a suit in no way affected the question Pratt, J. C pointed out that if the stipulation as to default were so worded that it does not come into operation unless and until the obligee elects to enforce it, then there is, as pointed out in Kimatrai v Waderao Sher Mahomed (6) an alternative contract But the phrases "is at liberty to file a suit for the whole amount" and the like do not impose any election. They merely imply that the whole amount is payable on demand and no distinction can be drawn between the phrases "may be sued" and "shall become due" Crouch, A. J. C. said :

"It matters not by what form of words the right to immediate payment of the principal in default of payment of an instalment, or of interest, is conferred. Every creditor has an option to file a suit and within certain limits to select his own time for filing it. The test whether or not the period of limitation begins to run is has the payee or obligee a right to file a suit forthwith for the principal remaining due if he so chooses ?"

It is no doubt true that the learned A. J C. further observed as follows :

"It would of course be quite easy to draw a bond in such form that the creditor would not get an immediate right to sue for the principal unless he elected to do so" and illustrated his observation by saying :

"Thus in the event of interest being in arrears for two months the creditor shall be on liberty to serve on the debtor a written notice calling on the debtor to forthwith pay the whole principal and interest then due, and on such notice being served, the whole principal and interest shall become due."

Now there can be no doubt that it is open to the parties to provide by their agreement that even in the event of failure by one of them to pay interest on the due dates, the principal amount shall not be payable at once until and unless something further is done on the nature of an exercise by the party who is not at default of his right to put an end to the contract and to call for the payment of money on such default. But there is no provision in the present case in that behalf, nor was there any in the case of Vishindas Vadhuram v. Hotomal Ditomal (2).

The cases decided by this Court were governed by different articles of the Limitation Act. Jethanand v. Lal Mahomed (3) was a case of an instalment decree falling within Art 179 of the Act of 1877 corresponding to Art 182 of the present Act : Kimatrai v. Wadera Sher Mahomed (6) was a case of a mortgage-bond providing for payment of the amount due by instalments and governed by Art. 132, Lim Act · Vishindas Vadhuram v. Hotomal (2) was again a case of a bond providing for payment of interest at certain stated terms and making the whole payable on failure to pay interest and was treated as falling under Art. 65 or 66 or 68. But in all these cases the same principle was applied for determining the starting point of limitation

The view taken by this Court seems to be in accordance with that taken by the Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts . cf. Gayadin v. Jhamanlal (7), Pancham v. Assar Hussain (8), both cases of instalment mortgage-bonds under Art. 132, Lim. Act : Shib Dayal v. Meherban (9), (a case of a mortgage-bond providing for immediate payment of money on failure to pay interest and governed by Arts. 80 and 116, Lim Act).

Kanhai v. Amrit (10) (a case of instalments under Art 75, Lim. Act). Sitabchand Nahar v. Hyder Malla (5), and Jagdeosing v Balgovind (11) (cases of mortgage-bond providing for payment of the amount on default of payment of interest regularly under Art. 132, Lim. Act). Kalicharan Roy v. Moheschander Ghosh (12) (an instalment decree under Art. 182, Lim Act).

(12) A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 789=53 Cal. 277.

The leading English case on this point and which appears to have been relied upon in most of the above cases is that of Hemp v. Garland (13), where it is said :

" If he (the plaintiff) chose to wait till all the instalments became due, no doubt he might do so ; but that which was optional on the part of the plaintiff would not affect the right of the defendant, who might well consider the action as accruing from the time that the plaintiff had a right to maintain it. The Statute of Limitation runs from the time the plaintiff might have brought his action, unless he was subject to any of the disabilities specified in the Statute. "

This case was followed in Reeves v. Butcher (14), and is accepted as good law in England up to this day : see Halsbury's Laws of England p. 94.

The Madras High Court has taken a somewhat different view. In Narana v. Ammani Amma (15), the hypothecation bond sued upon provided that interest due on the amount of Rs. 200 at the rate of 6¼ per cent. per annum should be paid on 1st November of every year commencing from 1st November 1889, and that the principal amount should be paid on 1st November 1899, with interest due for the previous year ; and that in the event of default of the mortgagor in the payment of interest in any year or of the principal on the dates specified therein, the mortgagor should pay the principal sum together with interest at 12 per cent. per annum from the date of default till the date of payment without raising the plea of future instalments on the liability of the mortgaged property. There was default in payment of interest in 1896 and in subsequent years, and the suit was filed on 10th October 1922. It was held that the suit was not barred by limitation. Seshagiri Ayyar, J , said at p. 985 :

" It is well settled principle of law that no one is obliged to take advantage of a forfeiture, S. 4, 3 & 4 Will. 4, Chap. 27. This rule has been applied to cases providing a right of entry on a forfeiture ; and it has been held that the landlord should not be compelled to take advantage of the forfeiture clause, so as to make limitation run against him, if he does not choose to avail himself of it . Astley v. Earl of Essex (16).

In a later case, Sir George Jessel, M. R. who decided the case just quoted used some very forcible language against the contention to accelerate limitation. In Governors of Magadalen Hospital v. Knotts (17) the learned Master of the Rolls says :

"The mere statement of such a proposition was shocking to one's intellectual perception when one considered for what objects the Statute of Elizabeth was enacted."

It was also pointed out that a benefit secured to the creditor should not be availed of by the debtor when the former does not want it No doubt, in Reeves v. Butcher (14) and Hemp v Garland (13) a different view was taken . . It is most probable that the language of Art. 75, Lim. Act, was borrowed from this judgment Banning on Limitation points out

"that this decision does not consider the principle that no one ought to be forced to take advantage of a forfeiture. Whatever may be the effect of the learned Chief Justice's view regarding the construction of Art. 75, Lim. Act, we see no reason for not giving the language of Art. 132 its plain and natural significance."

This case was followed in Vellappa Chettiar v. Venkatasubbarayulu Naidu (18). With all respect, I can find no warrant for importing into the Limitation Act the provisions of Ss. 3 and 4, Real Property Lim. Act. 1833, 3 and 4 Will. c. 27, which deal with a different set of circumstances. S 3 inter alia declares that :

"where a person claiming the land or rent (referred to therein) or the person through whom he claims shall have become entitled by reason of a forfeiture or breach of condition then such right shall be deemed to have first occurred when such forfeiture was incurred or such condition was broken."

Then follows S 4 which provides in express terms that :

"where the advantage of forfeiture is not taken by the remainderman, than he shall have a new right when his estate comes into possession."

In Astley v. Earl of Essex (16), S. 4, 3 and 4 Will, c. 27 was held to extend to forfeitures which operate to accelerate an estate under a conditional limitation as well as to forfeitures of which the heirs at law only can take advantage. This case proceeded on the construction and underlying object of the section.

I think it is a dangerous principle to follow, to import into Limitation Act express provisions contained in a special English Statute of Limitation relating to actions of real property which have no application even in England to actions of a similar nature to that in suit, and more so where S. 112, Transfer of property Act which deals with waiver of forefeiture contemplates certain overt acts being done by the lessor and not mere laches as evidence of waiver.

With regard to the case of Governors of Magdalen Hospital (17), it is sufficient to observe that the judgment in that case was reversed by the Court of appeal President of the Governors of the Magdalen Hospital v. Knotts (19). The ruling in Narha v Ammani Amma (15) does not also appear to have found favour with Ramesam, J, in Mukyaprana Bhatta v. Kelu Nambiyar, A I R. 1928 Mad. 705 at p. 707, where his Lordship has said :

" . . . but there is another group of cases where without the use of such phrases, it was said the mortgagee has got an option to take advantage of the default clause. They are for example Narha v. Ammani Amma (15), and P. P. B. Kunjunna Nair v. Kunjunna Nair (20) (a case of chit fund). These are in conflict with the decisions in Gaya Din v. Jhuman Lal (7) and Sitab Chand v. Hyder Malla (5). I am inclined to agree with the Allahabad and Calcutta decision and dissent from the decisions of this Court. . . . .

If analyzed, the agreement in suit amounts to nothing more than this : that the mortgagee agrees with the mortgagor that he will not claim repayment of the amount advanced for a period of 12 months provided the interest accruing due is paid every month. But if there is default in payment of such interest, the agreement is broken, and there is no obligation upon the mortgagee not to demand repayment of the money up to the expiry of the stipulated period, and the amount becomes payable on demand, and its payment may be enforced at any time thereafter at the desire of the mortgagee. As so stated, to me there appears to be no difference between this agreement after a default has been made in the payment of interest and a promissory note or other agreement to pay in the very first instance the amount on demand. There can be no doubt that in the case of an ordinary agreement providing for payment on demand, time runs from the date of the agreement and not from the date of demand. Ipso facto where the condition on which the mortgagee has agreed to allow time, namely, the regular payment of interest is broken the amount due becomes payable on demand and time runs from that date. It is not necessary for me to develop this point further, as whatever may be the view entertained by other High Courts, I am bound by the decisions of this Court given on its appellate side.

I am not able to distinguish either the present case or the case of the Official Receiver v. Hossain Lalmahomed (1) from that of Vishindas Wadhuram v. Hotomal Ditomal (2) and I hold that time commenced to run from the date of default. As the present case does not fall within the purview of Art. 75, Lim. Act, the question of waiver hardly arises. But even if that article were applied, there was an obligation on the plaintiff to prove express waiver, and as said in Chenr Bash Shaha v. Kodum Mundul (21) waiver and laches are not convertible terms. Mere laches on the part of the mortgagee in not selling the mortgaged property or instituting a suit for the recovery of the amount due to him within the period of limitation is not tantamount to waiver.

In the course of evidence of Amanmal it transpired that he admitted having received interest for a number of months though such payment was not expressly pleaded as reviving limitation under S. 20 of the Act, I adjourned the hearing to today to enable Amanmal to inspect his books and to state what interest, if any, had been paid to him. I understand from Mr Tulsidas that the last date on which any interest was paid was 3rd and 4th January 1921. Assuming therefore that the cause of action arose on that date the plaintiff's suit is statute barred having been filed six years and four months after that date.

I accordingly dismiss this suit with costs

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 73 of 1929, Decided on 26th June 1929, from an order of Judicial Commissioner, in Sessions Case No. 45 of 1928.

(a) Criminal P. C., Ss. 301 and 302—Verdict of jury—Inference from verdict of "not guilty" is that offence of accused is not established.

The only legitimate inference to be drawn from a verdict of "not guilty" is that in the opinion of the majority of the jury it is not established that the accused committed the offence with which he was charged. The verdict cannot be construed in any other way. [P 115 C 2]

 (b) Criminal P. C., S. 308—Entry that accused should not be retried amounts to acquittal—In order under S. 308 Judge cannot pass remarks implying guilt of accused.

Section 308 provides that making entry to the effect that the accused should not be retried amounts to an acquittal. In an order under S. 308 the Judge cannot pass remarks implying the guilt of the accused. Every accused is presumed to be innocent until he is strictly proved to be guilty. [P 115 C 2, P 116 C 1]

Nadirbeg K. Mirza—for Applicant.

C. Lobo—for the Crown.

Aston, A. J. C.—This is an application for the revision of an order passed by the learned Judicial Commissioner in the case of The Crown v. Mir Ahmed Shah, son of Sikander Shah (Sessions Case 15 of 1928).

The applicant Mir Ahmed Shah was tried by a Judge and jury on a charge of having committed an offence under S. 330, I. P. C., viz. the offence of causing hurt in order to extort a confession.

The jury by a majority of seven to two brought in a verdict of "not guilty."

The Judge disagreed with the majority and discharged the jury and remanded the accused on bail.

On 14th March 1929, the learned Judge passed the following order under S. 308, Criminal P. C.

Finding. "I am personally of opinion that the accused Mir Ahmed Shah Wd. Sikander Shah is guilty of the offence charged namely, the offence under S. 330, I. P. C. I have therefore carefully considered whether I should order a retrial under S. 305, Criminal P. C. or not. On due consideration, however, I do not think that this is a case in which it is necessary to order a retrial. So far as cases go under S. 330, I. P. C., this is not a very serious one and it may be that the view taken by the majority of the jury was really that, though the accused was guilty of some misconduct, his conduct was not such as to warrant a longish term of imprisonment. In this view of the case it seems to me that his conduct can be dealt with best in some department measure. I accordingly suggest for the consideration of the Police Department that severe departmental action (in such a manner as they think fit) should be taken against Mir Ahmed Shah. I may add that I am of opinion that there is no substance whatever in the complaints against Mr. Kazi Khuda Bux, Pleader, Inspector Partabrai or Sub-Inspector Partabrai in connexion with this case. Subject to these remarks I agree with the verdict of the majority of the jury and direct that the accused be acquitted and discharged."

It is contended on behalf of the applicant, that the learned Judge erred in construing a verdict of "not guilty" of the majority of the jury as open to possible hypothesis that the majority may have considered, that accused was guilty of some misconduct, but that his conduct had not been such as to warrant a longish term of imprisonment. There seems to me much force in this contention. In my opinion the only legitimate inference to be drawn from a verdict of "not guilty" is that in the opinion of the jury or of the majority of the jury, as the case may be, it is not established that accused committed the offence with which he was charged.

It is further contended that it was not open to the Judge in an order under S. 308 to pass remarks implying the guilt of the accused and suggesting for the consideration of the Police Department that severe departmental action (in such manner as they might think fit) should be taken against him.

This contention also seems to me correct. An accused person, as was pointed out by Ameerali and Woodroff in "The Law of Evidence," is entitled to the legal presumption in favour of innocence 3rd edn. p. 68 (n): no presumption, perhaps, is more highly favoured in the law, than that of innocence (p. 946). When misconduct or crime is alleged, whether in a criminal or in a civil proceeding, whether in a direct proceeding to punish the offender, or in some collateral matter, the accused is presumed to be innocent until he is strictly proved to be guilty. (p. 947).

In the present case, the prosecution have failed to prove the accused's guilt, for they had not satisfied the majority of the jury, that he was guilty. The Judge no doubt disagreed with the majority, and had discharged the jury, and the Judge could have ordered the accused to be tried by another jury, in which case the innocence or guilt of Mir Ahmed would have been enquired into again but until that was done and his guilt established, no presumption of guilt could be raised against him In addition to this, it was the opinion of the Judge that Mir Ahmed should not be retried, and S. 308 itself provides that the making of an entry to that effect on the charge operates as an acquittal.

The learned Judge therefore, it seems to me erred in passing an order, having the effect of an acquittal, and at the same time and in the same order making observations implying that accused had committed the offence, of which he was accused and a recommendation that he should be severely dealt with by the Police Department, this in my opinion was prejudicial to the applicant and contravened the legal maxim "actus legis nemini facit injuriam" the law wrongs no man" "actus legis nemini est damnosus." An act in law shall prejudice no man. "Actus curiae neminem gravabit. An act of the Court shall prejudice no man" For the accused, having undergone a criminal trial, and having had an order passed in his favour, which operated as an acquittal, was entitled to the benefit of the order and to all the consequences, which it implied.

I would accordingly set aside that portion of the learned Judge's order under S. 308, Criminal P C. which construed the verdict of not guilty as possibly amounting to a verdict of guilty of some misconduct and also that portion which implied the guilt of the applicant and recommended departmental action being taken against him. This will in my opinion sufficiently protect the applicant, and action under S 561-A does not in the circumstances appear to be necessary.

Barlee, J C.—I agree with the proposed order.

The applicant was prosecuted on a charge under S. 330, I. P. C. and at a trial in the Court of Sessions was acquitted by a majority of seven to two. The trial Judge disagreed with the majority of the jury and discharged them and it was then for him to consider whether there should be a new trial and, after consideration he decided that the circumstances did not justify a new trial. Accordingly he passed an order accepting the verdict of the majority of the jury and directing that the accused be acquitted and discharged. But in the body of the order he gave the reasons for the course which he was taking, and it is this part of the order to which the applicant objects. For, though it is clear that he thought that too much had been made of the matter, and evidently was anxious to protect the accused from the anxiety and expense of a new trial for what was, in his opinion, at most a technical or a trivial offence, the result of his remarks, the applicant says has been that the order of acquittal has done more harm than he would have been likely to suffer from a new trial

It is contended by Mr. Nadirbeg that it was not open to the learned trial Judge to give any opinion, but that he should have confined himself to saying whether the accused should be retried or acquitted and discharged I am not prepared to accept this view The learned trial Judge by the fact of his discharging the jury had expressed his opinion that their verdict was incorrect, and I think it was open to him to give reasons for refusing to take the normal course and to order a retrial, and I do not think that a recommendation of department action would necessarily have been improper, provided that there had been no suggestion that the accused might be assumed to be guilty of the offence of which he had been charged. But actually the order goes far beyond this, for in it the trial Judge has suggested that the real opinion of the jury was the same as that which he had taken, that the accused was guilty of the offence with which he had been charged, and suggested further severe departmental punishment as justified by this view.

I agree with my learned brother that it was not open to him to suggest that the verdict of the jury was incorrect or to recommend that the departmental authorities should take action on the understanding that it was incorrect.

I accordingly agree with the order which has been proposed.

Criminal Appeal No. 42 of 1929, Decided on 28th June 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., Ss. 236, 237, and 238—Applicability—Person charged with dacoity can be convicted under S. 403, Penal Code.

Where the accused could have been charged with dacoity, theft and criminal misappropriation but is charged with dacoity under S. 395, Penal Code, it is legal to convict him under S. 403, Penal Code according to S 237, Criminal P. C. Such a finding is also justified by S 238, Criminal P. C., where the offence charged under S. 395 consists of several elements and combination of some of which amounts to an offence under S. 403.

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 309—Opinion of assessors is not essential when accused is convicted of offence with which he was not charged.

Where the accused is convicted of an offence with which he was not charged according to S. 239, Criminal P. C., it is not necessary that Judge should require the assessors to state their opinion, as there is no charge. [P 148 C 1]

(c) Criminal P. C., 3. 309—Prosecutor putting to assessors that case was clear under S. 395 or S. 403, Penal Code—Assessors finding accused guilty of theft—It cannot be said that assessors' opinion was not taken.

Where the Public Prosecutor puts to the assessor that there is a clear case under S. 395 or S. 403, Penal Code, and the majority of the assessors finds that the theft had been committed it cannot be said that the Judge adopted a view which had not been submitted to the assessors and even if there is irregularity it does not prejudice the accused. [P 148 C 1]

Rewachand V. Thaduani—for Appellants.

C. Lobo—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The admitted facts are that in 1921, the complainant Udhavdas filed a suit against Jagan, father of the appellant Mewo and others for a declaration of his ownership of and for possession of an eight anna share in Survey No. 7½ occupied by Jagan and other persons of his party. Udhavdas pleaded that they were mere haris, but they claimed title. At first Jagan was appointed receiver, but in 1924 Udhavdas was appointed in his stead. In May 1927 the suit was decided in his favour and decree made for possession of the Survey No. 7½ with costs, and the Court directed an enquiry regarding mesne profits. An appeal was filed and a stay order made in general terms "on security being furnished." Udhavdas then applied for execution by an application dated 28th February 1928, by the attachment of the crops standing on the disputed lands. It was opposed and on 17th March 1928, was rejected. I must add that in this he said that the crop was ready and would be cut and gathered by 10th March.

What happened thereafter is in dispute. Udhavdas' complaint is that on 20th March he was informed that the accused were removing the produce. He went at once to the Mukhtiarkar's office and made a report, then tried to get police help but failed, and finally drove to the land. He found the accused removing the produce, and they told him that if he interfered he would be killed. He went back and made a complaint of dacoity. The defence version is that the story is pure fiction. The accused reaped and disposed of the crop quietly and as they had always done on or about 10th March.

The accused were committed for trial on a charge of dacoity. The Assistant Public Prosecutor, it appears, did not press this charge, but submitted that there was a case of theft or at least under S. 403 or S. 421. Two of three assessors found that theft had been committed and the Additional Sessions Judge held that an offence under S. 403 had been committed.

I shall at once say that nothing has been said in arguments and we have been shown no evidence which would lead us to suppose that the complainant's version accepted by the Judge and by two out of three assessors, was false. The fact that on 28th February the complainant in his execution application stated that the crop would be ready by 10th March, does not show that they must have been ready. His explanation is that applicant Mewo gave him that date, and this can be accepted.

The questions for us to decide are three. Firstly whether when a man has been charged with dacoity he can be convicted under S. 403 of wrongful conversion; secondly, whether the Sessions Judge had jurisdiction to convict under S. 403 without asking the opinion of the assessors on this section; and lastly whether the misappropriation was dishonest

It seems to us that S. 237 (read with S. 236) and S. 238 justify the learned Judge's action. 236 provides that :

"If a single act or series of acts is of such a nature that it is doubtful which of several offences the facts which can be proved will constitute, the accused may be charged with having committed all or any of such offences, and any number of such charges may be tried at once or he may be charged in the alternative with having comitted some one of the said offences."

And S. 237 (1).

"If, in the case mentioned in S. 236, the accused is charged with one offence, and it appears in evidence that he committed a different offence for which he might have been charged under the provisions of that section, he may be convicted of the offence which he is shown to have committed, although he was not charged with it."

In the present case the charge was of a series of acts, cutting and removing crops and threats of violence. The legal nature of these acts was doubtful and depended on the questions of ownership and the effect of civil Court orders. Therefore, the accused could have been charged with dacoity, theft, or criminal misappropriation. This seems clear from illustration (a) to S. 236 and in consequence, if the charge was one under S. 395 it was legal to count under S. 403. Further the offence charged under S. 395 consisted of several particulars, or elements, and a combination of some of which amounted to an offence under S. 403, so the finding of the learned Additional Sessions Judge is justified by S. 238, Criminal P. C. The second objection is that the learned Judge did not require the assessors to state the opinion on all the charges on which the accused had been tried since he did not question them about S. 403. But this is merely technical and can be met with the technical answer that there was no charge under S. 403. In addition it may be said that the Assistant Public Prosecutor had put it to the assessors that there was a clear case under S. 379, or S. 403, and the record shows that two out of three were of opinion that theft had been committed Thus it is not a fact that the learned Judge adopted a view which had not been submitted to the assessors and if there was an irregularity clearly it did not prejudice the accused.

The last question is whether the evidence establishes the guilt of the appellants and this must be subdivided into two: whether their act amounted to conversion and secondly, whether it was dishonest We agree that there was conversion, for we cannot admit that the order of the civil Court appointing Udhavdas receiver was meaningless and gave him no right. It gave him the right to take the produce and in consequence deprived the appellants of all rights except the right of use and occupation. They had no right to the produce. Any other conclusion seems to us to be impossible. But the appellants are Udhavdas' cultivators and it does not follow that they knew the legal position and intended to cause wrongful loss to Udhavdas.

Ordinarily we would be slow to believe in the bona fides of man who has taken a crop after an order appointing a receiver, apparently in defiance of the order, but the facts of this case are peculiar. Udhavdas was appointed receiver in 1924, and according to the opinion of the learned Sessions Judge it has not been proved that upto 1928 he ever received anything. Then in 1927 he obtained a decree and on 28th February 1928, he made an application for the attachment of the original crops about which the case has arison and it was refused. That was on 17th March. Three days later, after the Court had refused to give him the crops he went to the field and demanded them. Granted then that he was entitled to them as receiver, and that his application for attachment had been unnecessary, it is difficult for us to say that the appellants must have understood or probably understood the legal position, and deliberately refused what they knew he was entitled to. We think that it is not improbable that they had lost sight of the orders of receivership, or imagined that it was no longer in force in view of the many subsequent orders, especially as Udhavdas had never tried to enforce his rights as receiver. We are not satisfied that the conversion has been proved to have been legally dishonest, and we allow the appeals and set aside the convictions and sentences.

Criminal Appeal No. 43 of 1927, Decided on 5th July 1927, against order of Addl. Sess. Judge, Hyderabad, Sind.

Criminal Trial—Identification tests are as a rule not sufficient to form basis of conviction.

Identification tests are a form of evidence which is always to be taken with a considerable amount of caution and they are, as a rule, not quite sufficient to form the basis of a conviction, though they may perhaps add some weight to other evidence against an accused person. [P 119 C 2, P 150 C 1]

D. N. O'Sullivan—for Appellants

T. G. Elphinston—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an appeal against the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Hyderabad, in which he convicted the three appellants, accused 1, 3 and 4, Ramzan, Mehar and Saleh, of dacoity under S. 395, I. P. C., the other accused 2, 5, 6 and 7 being acquitted by him.

There is no doubt in this case that a dacoity was committed at night on the village in question, the dacoits being seen by various of the villagers, and one of the villagers Koso being shot in the face though not seriously injured

A considerable amount of the evidence in the case consists of evidence regarding the dacoity and regarding the other accused who have been acquitted. We are, however, at this stage not concerned with the latter, while on the other hand there is no doubt that a dacoity was committed. We can therefore confine ourselves at this stage to a discussion of the evidence connecting the present appellants with the dacoity

The learned Additional Sessions Judge has clearly enumerated the portions of the evidence which go against the present appellants and he has discussed those pieces of evidence on which he is disposed to rely and those on which he is not disposed to rely.

The conclusion at which the learned Judge arrives is as follows:

"To sum up, accused 1, 3 and 4 have been identified at a test which I believe to have been honestly conducted. There is no other really good evidence against them. But I hold that the evidence of identification is sufficient for a conviction."

He also observes in his judgment:

"I hold then that the identification tests were genuine. Now the odds against the person suspected not being the real criminal, but so like him as to be picked out by mistake are so queer that it would, I think, be safe to convict on the identification of one person only."

In regard to the footprints test the learned Judge observes

"I regard these tests as of very slight value as against accused 1 to 3 and of no value a all against accused 4."

Somewhat similar remarks are made regarding the value of the evidence of certain persons who saw accused 2, 3 and 4 together at certain places other than the scene of the dacoity.

It may be noted that the footprints test were regarding shod prints not bare prints, which also tends to weaken the value of this portion of the prosecution evidence.

I think therefore that, having regard to the evidence as a whole and to the remarks of the learned Sessions Judge thereon we may take it that the convictions must stand or fall by the view taken of the identification tests.

Now, as identification tests were required, it means of course that the witnesses, namely Pessu, who identified accused 1 and 3, Lalu, who identified accused 4 did not previously know these men. The statement attached to the judgment shows that No 4 was also identified by the witness Dinio, but less weight was attached to his evidence, because he had left British India and it was not possible to secure his attendance before the Sessions Court

The recognition of a dacoit or other offender by a person who has not previously seen him is, I think, a form of evidence, which has always to be taken with a considerable amount of caution, because mistakes are always possible in such cases. The learned counsel for the appellants referred on this point to the well known Adolf Beck case. There eight or ten witnesses recognized Beck as the man who had cheated them, yet it turned out that it was a case of mistaken identity. It is of course not desirable to attach too much importance to that particular case, it does, however, go to show that cases of mistaken identity are quite possible

The learned Judge, however, clearly relies on the further point that here it was not merely a case of recognition of the appellants, but of the selection thereof out of a number of persons, which fact goes to guarantee the correctness of the recognition.

Theoretically that argument is sound. But it is a question how far the theory can be accepted as true in fact. It is noticeable that these identification tests seem to be rather a speciality of Sind. I do not remember them to any thing like the same extent in the Presidency Proper nor do they appear to be adopted to any great extent in England No doubt such tests are often, and may be in this case, perfectly genuine Still it is a question how far they are evidence which can suitably form the main basis of a conviction. I am disposed to hold that as a rule they are not quite sufficient to form the basis of a conviction, though they may perhaps add some weight to other evidence against an accused person.

In regard to the identification tests, however, we have further to consider how far it is probable that the witnesses were in a position to identify the accused. On this point it may be noted generally that in the first report it is stated that "The night was a dark one and therefore the dacoits could not be recognized." In regard moreover, to the particular persons who identified these appellants we have it that Pessu Ex. 40, states that "he did not recognize" the dacoits This may mean that he did not know them previously, but it is ambiguous Apart from this statement we have merely the evidence that a lamp was burning at the time, and that he identified Nos 1 and 3 out of a number of other persons and that they had guns

With reference to Lalu Ex. 39 he gives evidence a little more detailed as against accused 4, who, he says, pointed out a gun at his chest. He also says that a lamp was burning. Even in his case, however, we have no special reason for the recognition of accused 4 beyond what is mentioned above.

It is suggested on behalf of the appellants that the Bania witnesses are unreliable, and it is pointed out that the learned Sessions Judge has noted that some of them pretended to recognize accused 5 and 6 because they believed from other information received that they were among the dacoits. It seems, however, preferable to base one's argument rather on the general weakness of identification evidence and the danger of mistaken identity than on any deliberate fraud on the part of the prosecution witnesses. The case against all the three appellants is similar in this respect.

On the whole therefore it appears that there is not quite sufficient evidence to bring home the offence to the appellants, Ramzan, Mehar and Soleh, who are accordingly acquitted and discharged. Their convictions and sentences are reversed

There is evidence on the record to the effect that accused 1 and 3 each committed an offence under the Arms Act. It is still open to the authorities to prosecute them for an offence under the Act, if they are so disposed.

Where a person, who was a butcher by trade and had no license, actually imported meat in large quantities far more than could be required for his personal use and had distributed it but where there was no evidence that he actually received any money the presumption that he actually imported meat and sold it can be legitimately drawn [P 151 C 1]

Partabrai D. Punwani—for the Crown

Judgment.—The applicant has been convicted by the Special 1st Class Magistrate, Cantonment and Sadar Bazar, Karachi, of offences under Ss. 213, and 216, Cantonments Act (2 of 1924), and sentenced to pay fines of Rs. 100 and Rs. 25 respectively. The admitted facts of this case are that the applicant who was a butcher by caste traded as a butcher at Manora within the Cantonment limits. But in November 1927, he was deprived of his stall, which was given by the Cantonment authorities to one Nur Mahomed. Subsequently, Nur Mahomed made a complaint that the applicant was importing meat and was selling it to the people at Manora. The applicant was warned on 13th February 1929, and on 17th February was found at Manora with two baskets of meat, which he had brought by boat from Karachi It is in evidence that he distributed the meat to various persons But there is no evidence that he received any cash payment. There is further evidence that some days previously one Bhawanmal had purchased meat at Manora from the applicant through one Guli, and evidently this was brought to prove that the applicant was in the habit of selling meat. The defence was that the applicant was a Bazari, a man employed by various persons belonging to the Port Trust Department at Manora to fetch meat for them from Karachi, and that he did not make a profit by the sale of meat but was remunerated by salary. The learned Magistrate, however, disbelieved this defence and convicted the applicant of trading in meat without a license and importing meat into the Cantonment without a license. The first question was one of fact whether the applicant imported the meat for sale and actually sold it. The burden of proving this was on the prosecution and their evidence, as has been said, amounted to this that the applicant had actually imported meat in large quantities far more than could be required for his personal use and had distributed it. The question for us to consider is whether in the absence of any evidence that he actually received any money, there was a presumption from this fact and from the fact that he was by trade a butcher, that he actually had imported meat for sale and sold it.

We think that this was a legitimate presumption and that the learned Magistrate was justified in calling on the applicant to defend himself. This being our view, there remains very little more to be said, for the Magistrate disbelieved the evidence which was called for the defence, and it is not our duty to weigh the evidence and to decide whether his conclusion was justified, and in as much as the case was tried summarily we are not in a position to do soif we wished Granting then that the accused was not a Bazari as held by the learned Magistrate, he was clearly guilty under both sections of the Cantonment Act S 213 prohibits the carrying of any of the trades mentioned in S. 210 without a license The first of these trades mentioned is that of butcher and butcher, according to Webster's English Dictionary, means not only a man who kills animals for human consumption, but also a man who deals in meat The second is S. 216 and that prohibits importation of any animal intended for human consumption, or the flesh of any animal slaughtered outside the Cantonment otherwise than in a slaughter-house maintained by the Government or the Cantonment Authority

It has been contended that in practice this section must cause hardship since there is no slaughterhouse maintained by the Government or Cantonment Authority, in Karachi, and therefore it practically prohibits importation of meat altogether. But it is possible for any one to bring meat into the Cantonment or Manora for his own domestic consumption as sub-S (4) contains an exception to this effect, and there is no particular hardship in the first subsection inasmuch as meat may be imported with permission of the Cantonment Authority. We can see no particular reason for considering that this applicant has been hardly dealt with, since he had been warned only a few days before 17th February and deliberately broke the rules. We dismiss the application.

 Criminal P. C., S. 256—Failure to act in accordance with S. 256 is not mere irregularity but an illegality.

Section 256 lays down that the accused shall have the right to recall and cross-examine the prosecution witnesses after the charge has been framed. The Magistrate cannot reject such an application. Failure of the Magistrate to act in accordance with the express provision of S. 256 is not a mere irregularity but an illegality. 25 Mad. 61 (P.C.), Rel. on , A. I. R. 1927 All. 217, Dist., A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 78, Ref. [P 152 C 2]

Fatehchand Dharamdas—for Applicant.

C Lobo—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The facts of this case are briefly as follows .

The accused is a merchant of Karachi and has a corn mill On 28th February last 3 persons came to him to buy corn and purchased more than 1½ maunds of corn They said that they were Hajis and were about to sail on pilgrimage. They left the corn to be ground, whilst they went to make other purchases and when they returned there was a dispute as to whether they had actually paid Rs 10-0-0 the price of the corn, as they asserted, or whether that sum was still due. It appears that the accused removed the corn from the cart which they had bought, and they then went to the Magistrate and lodged a complaint In the end the accused was arrested and put before the Magistrate at 4 p. m. and the case was taken up on the same day. The prosecution witnesses were examined and cross-examined The next day a charge was framed, and the accused was called on to enter on his defence on 4th March. His pleader filed a list of witnesses and requested the Magistrate to recall the prosecution witnesses for cross-examination The Magistrate made the inquiry as to whether the prosecution witnesses could be found, but they had left He, accordingly, rejected the application, heard the defence pleader and convicted the accused.

The complaint made to us is that the accused was deprived of his right given him by S. 256, Criminal P. C , of cross-examining the prosecution witnesses after the charge.

It seems to us that this plea must prevail. S 256 is as follows :

"If the accused refuses to plead, or does not plead, or claims to be tried, he shall be required to state, at the commencement of the next hearing of the case or, if the Magistrate for reasons to be recorded in writing so thinks fit, forthwith, whether he wishes to cross-examine any, and, if so, which of the witnesses for the prosecution whose evidence has been taken. If he says he does so wish, the witnesses named by him shall be re-called and, after cross-examination and re-examination if any, they shall be discharged."

This is an express provision of law and it appears to us to be an express provision as to the mode of trial, and that the failure of the learned Magistrate to act in accordance with it is not a mere irregularity but an illegality, as has been laid down by the Privy Council in the case of Subramania Ayyar v. Emperor (1). Our attention has been drawn by the learned Public Prosecutor to several cases in which the terms of this section have been construed But it does not appear that there is any authority for the proposition that an accused person can be deprived of his right of cross-examination after the charge The principal case on which the learned Public Prosecutor relies is that of Emperor v. Chhajju (2) But in that case the question was merely whether the omission of a Magistrate to inform an accused person that he had a right to re-summon the prosecution witnesses for cross-examination at the next hearing was an irregularity or illegality. Their Lordships decided that it was a mere irregularity especially as in that case the accused had never made any request to recall the witnesses though at the next hearing they were represented by a counsel ; and it appeared to their Lordships that the accused had in fact not wished to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses. However that may be, this is not an authority on the point which is now before us And, moreover, in the case of Re Raju Achari (3), the Madras High Court took a different view on the same point

For these reasons, we find that the trial has been vitiated by an illegality and we set aside the conviction and sentence, and direct that the fine, if paid, be refunded and also direct that the Magistrate should recommence the proceedings from the stage of the charge We are not inclined to agree with the request made by the learned pleader on behalf of the applicant to send the case before another Magistrate, a course which would certainly cause undue delay without being of real advantage to the accused persons if they are innocent.

Revision Application No. 63 of 1925, Decided on 2nd April 1928, against decree of Small Cause Court Judge, D/- 26th April 1925

(a) Evidence Act, S 92—Suit instituted for recovery of sum due under hundi—Defendants pleading composition with plaintiffs' creditors by agreeing to pay them 12 annas in rupee in full satisfaction of claim of which they had to pay 4 annas in rupee in cash—Defendants paying and plaintiffs receiving 4 annas in pursuance of agreement—Evidence of defendants cannot be excluded, S. 92 having no applicability—There was consideration for such agreement within Contract Act S 2 (d) and (e).

In a suit instituted for recovery of a certain sum due on a hundi, the defendants pleaded that they had compounded with the plaintiffs' creditors by agreeing to pay them 12 annas in the rupee in full settlement of their claims of which they had to pay 4 annas in the rupee in cash and to execute hundis on the balance payable at a future date. The defendants said that the plaintiffs had agreed to the terms and in pursuance thereof received 4 annas in cash but declined to receive the hundis tendered to them.

Held that the evidence of the defendants could not be excluded and S. 92 did not apply as the defendants did not attempt to contradict, add to or substract from the terms of the contract as contained in the hundi. [P 153 C 2]

Held further, that for such an agreement there was ample consideration to each creditor namely, the undertaking by other compromising creditors to give up a part of their claim and again the defendants' payment to the plaintiffs of 4 annas in the rupee in pursuance of the agreement which they would not have otherwise got was in itself good and valuable consideration to bring the agreement within the purview of S. 2 (e) of Contract Act. Smith v. Trowsdale, (1854), 23 L.J Q.B 107, Goad v. Cheeseman, (1831) 9 *L.J. Judgment.—This is an application under S. 25, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887. It arises out of a suit instituted by the plaintiffs-respondents against the defendants-appellants for recovery of a certain sum of money due on a hundi. The defendants pleaded that as they were in a weak position they had compounded with their creditors including the plaintiffs by agreeing to pay them 12 annas in the rupee in full and final settlement of their claims of which they had to pay 4 annas in the rupee in cash and to execute hundis of the value of 8 annas in the rupee payable at a future date These hundis were to be endorsed by the firm of Thawerdas Tekchand The defendants said that the plaintiffs had agreed to these terms and in pursuance thereof had received 4 annas in cash but had subsequently declined to receive the hundis which were tendered to them duly endorsed The learned Judge below refused to allow evidence to be led in proof of the defence holding as follows.

"Section 92, Evidence Act, applies and no oral evidence can be given. Proviso 4 does not apply as the hundis were rquired by law to be in writing"

We think that the learned Judge was clearly wrong in excluding the evidence of the defendants. The defendants were in no way attempting to contradict, vary, add to or subtract from the terms of the contract as contained in the hundi so as to attract the applicability of S. 92, Evidence Act As a matter of fact, they admitted the contract and its breach They pleaded a discharge of their liability for the breach of their contract as provided in S 63, Contract Act, by saying that the plaintiffs as promisees had remitted a part of their claim and had accepted satisfaction of the balance in a different manner Under the English Law the somewhat similar plea of accord and satisfaction by parol has always been held to be pleadable notwithstanding the fact that the contract which is said to have been broken, is in writing and under seal: Smith v. Trowsdale (1) The learned pleader for the respondent has urged that the present case is not one in which we should interfere. He has contended that even if the evidence in support of the plea raised by the defendants were admitted it could not carry the case of the defendants any further as the plaintiffs were not bound by their acceptance of the proposed satisfaction there being no consideration for their doing so. He has relied on the following passage in the judgment of Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Abaji Sitaram v Trimbak Municipality (2):

"Therefore we hold that assuming there was a legal resolution and that it was communicated as alleged still inasmuch as a dispensation or remission under S 63, requires an agreement or contract, the resolution was of no legal effect since the provisions of S. 30, of Bombay Act 2 of 1894 have not been observed."

When the learned pleader referred to the above ruling he was probably not aware of the recent decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Chhunna Mal Ram Nath v Moolchand Ram Bhagat (3), where the dictum of Sir Lawrence Jenkins has been disapproved and it has been authoritatively laid down that the language of S 63, does not refer to any such agreement and ought not to be enlarged by any implication of English doctrines There is therefore, an end to this argument. But apart from this it would appear that if the defence version is true there was ample consideration to bind the plaintiffs to their promise. In the first place, the defendants had compounded with different creditors including the plaintiffs and each of such creditors had given up 4 annas in the rupee. Even under the English law a composition between a debtor and his creditors has always been held to afford a complete answer to an action by one of the creditors upon the original liability. For such an agreement there is good consideration to each creditor, namely, the undertaking by other compromising creditors to give up a part of their claim. Good v Cheeseman (4) and Lewis v Leonard (5). In the next place the defendants paid to the plaintiffs 4 annas in the rupee in pursuance of this agreement which they would not have got otherwise. This was in itself good and valuable consideration to bring the agreement within the purview of S. 2 (e), Contract Act.

The learned pleader has invited our attention to the case of Ghumanmal v. Dayal Kanji (6), and has argued that as the defence set up falls within S. 62, Contract Act, there can be no novatio after breach. The case cited by him, however, cuts the ground under his very feet. It is, no doubt, true that in that case the Court held following Manohur Koyal v Thakur Das Naskar (7), that there could be no novatio after breach but the Court gave effect to the agreement between the parties under S. 63, Contract Act, on the ground that on the performance of a part of the new agreement by the person who had committed a breach there was ample consideration to convert the nudum pactum into a legal contract This case proceeded on the assumption that in order to attract the applicability of S 63, there should be an agreement with consideration. We need hardly mention that the dictum that there can be no novatio after breach was challenged and not acted upon in the case of K. M P R N. M. Firm v. Perumal Chetty (8), and requires to be reviewed by a Full Bench of this Court when a proper occasion arises. It will be sufficient for the present to observe that when an agreement has been made between the parties after the breach of a contract, it may now in view of the Privy Council ruling referred to above, be properly enforced under S 63, Contract Act, whether such agreement be with consideration or not and that, therefore, it is hardly necessary to invoke the aid of S. 62. For these reasons we allow this application and direct the learned Small Cause Court Judge to take back the case on his file and dispose it of according to law. Costs to be costs in the cause.

Alibhoy Karimji—Defendants.

Suit No 967 of 1926, Decided on 17th April 1929.

 (a) Tort—Negligence — Contributory—Plaintiff knowing damages likely to be caused to his goods by water used by defendant for construction of building near his godown—Mere neglect on his part to take precautions to avoid it does not amount to breach of duty on his part and does not excuse defendant.

The plaintiff cannot be blamed for failure to take care in the absence of notice that a particular quality of water likely to do damage to his goods was being used for carrying on building operations near his godown in which the goods were stored and even if he knows of the damage, a mere omission on his part to take precautions to avoid it cannot excuse the defendant and the plaintiff cannot be held to be guilty of a breach of duty . *A. Where plaintiff was in possession of a godown in which his goods were stored and the defendant engaged a competent contractor and architect for building a new godown and the plaintiff's goods were damaged by water escaping from the roof of the new godown, the defendant is exempt from liability because by employing a competent contractor and architect, he acted with greatest possible care Fletcher v. Rylands, (1866) 1 Ex. 265, not Appl.; 1 *Smith's L. Judgment.—The plaintiffs, the firm of Tulsidas Kishindayal, have pleaded that they were in possession of a godown on the eastern side of plot 24 survey sheet 3 of the Serai Quarter, Karachi. They stored bales of jute twine in it In January 1926 they discovered that 25 bales had been damaged by water. They alleged that the defendants, the owners of the said plot had erected a new godown thereon, adjacent to theirs, and in doing so had negligently allowed water to flow into their godown They claim damages The defendants have pleaded inter alia (a) that they were not the plaintiffs' landlord (paras. 1 and 2); (b) that the damage was not due to their negligence, (c) that they had employed a competent architect and contractor to erect the godown and (d) contributory negligence

The following issues have been framed :

| | Findings. |
|---|---|
| 1. Were the plaintiffs in possession of the premises referred to in the suit as alleged in para 1 of the plaint ? | Yes. |
| 2. Were the defendants guilty of negligence and of taking no due precaution in the construction of the work. | No. |
| 3. Were the goods damaged as alleged ? | Yes. |
| 4. Are plaintiffs guilty of any contributory negligence | No. |
| 5. Are defendants exempt from liability by reason of the alleged employment of a competent architect and an independent contractor ? | Yes. |
| 6. Have the plaintiffs no cause of action against the defendants for the reasons stated in paras 1, 2 and 3 | Given up. |
| 7. What amount, if any are plaintiffs entitled to recover as damages. | Nothing. |
| 8. General. | Reasons. |

Issues 1 and 6 have been given up. The defendants do not now deny that the plaintiffs were in possession of the godown but as the claim is based on tort and not on contract the fact that they were sub-tenants and had no privity of contract is immaterial This embodies the main question of fact The defendants put the plaintiffs to the proof of the damage, and of its cause, and the plaintiffs have led evidence which proves the damage and makes it extremely probable that it was due to water flowing from the plot on which a new godown was being erected between April and July 1925, under the door of the plaintiff's godown To begin with it is proved by the evidence of the Surveyor, Mr. Barnes, and the plaintiffs' witness Mr Pathak the surveyor who drew the plan (Ex 11), that water had reached the bales from under a door which used to open on the part of the premises on which the new godown was built. Mr. Pathak had deposed that he saw the stains made by water on the rice husks which covered the ground and Mr Barnes that the trail of the liquid was easily traceable He was clear that the water came from below and not from the roof To make doubly sure of this he had some of the damaged jute tested for salt, and the result was negative I am satisfied, therefore, that the damage was done by water, which came from under the door. It is noteworthy in this connexion that there is a slope downwards from the level of the new godown to that of the plaintiffs'.

To account for the water there are only 2 theories, rain-water or a leakage from the roof of the defendants' new godown. The former is very improbable To do so much damage as was done the quantity of water must have been considerable, and a rain-storm heavy enough to account for so much would be a noticeable event in Karachi; there is no evidence of any storm having occured during the time the bales were in the godown. So it is necessary to accept the alternative and to believe that water escaped from the new roof It is in evidence that a reinforced concrete roof has to be flooded with water ½"-1" deep, and kept flooded for 2 to 3 days at least and though the contractor and architect in charge of the building operations have deposed that very little water can have trickled down I am not satisfied that they are correct res ipsa loquitur. The watering work was entrusted to a cooly, and they were not continuously present. Issue 4 must also be decided in the plaintiff's favour. There is no reason for supposing that he had notice of the fact that a reinforced concrete roof was to be made, or that it would be necessary to use so much water in the construction and he cannot be blamed for a failure to take care. Moreover, even if it be assumed that the plaintiffs knew of the damages, I cannot see how their mere omission to take precautions, which the person who used the water was bound himself to take, can be said to have been a cause of the damage. This matter is discussed in Nani Bala Sen v. Auckland Jute Co. (1) and in all the treatises on Tort. In all the cases which I have seen quoted the dispute appears to have been as to how far a negligent action on a plaintiff's part will disentitle him to damages and the rule laid down by Lord Penzance, and quoted in the Calcutta case cited above is that .

"although the plaintiff may have been guilty of negligence and although that negligence may in fact have contributed to the accident, yet if the defendant could in the result by the exercise of ordinary care and negligence have avoided the mischief which happened, the plaintiffs' negligence will not excuse him."

Thus even if the plaintiffs had by a positive act contributed to the mischief which happened in this case the defendants would not necessarily have been excused and a fortiori a mere neglect on the part of the plaintiffs to take precautions cannot excuse the defendants. The plaintiffs were not guilty of a breach of duty.

Issue 7. I shall take this issue next before coming to Issues 3 and 5 which are the important issues in the case. The plaintiffs have valued their jute at Rs. 24, and have given a list (12) of prices which shows that their claim is not unreasonable. In September 1925 and March 1926 the price was below Rs 24, but at all other times between June and February it was Rs 24 or more And at the date when they discovered the damage it was over Rs 25.

Issues 2 and 5 The questions are whether the defendants were guilty of negligence and if not whether they are liable apart from negligence. The short answer to the former is that they employed a competent architect and contractor, and so did all that they could reasonably be expected to do. The negligence, which caused the damage, was not theirs, but that of the persons in charge of the work A person who employs an independent contractor is not generally responsible for his negligence or that of his servants, because they are not under his control The exceptions to this are five, but I am only concerned with one that the employment of a competent contractor cannot save a person from liability :

"when the thing contracted to be done, though lawful in itself, will naturally be attended by injurios consequences unless effectually guarded against (Fraser on Contract.)"

This is the rule in Fletcher v Rylands (2) The facts there were that the defendants employed a competent engineer to make them a reservoir, but the water escaped without any negligence on the part of any one, and did mischief to the plaintiffs's mine The defendant was held liable and the rule was stated in these words:

"The person who for his own purposes brings on his land, and keeps there, anything likely to do mischief if it escapes, must keep it at his own peril, and if he does not do so is prima facie answerable for all the damage which is the natural consequence of its escape."

It is contended that the present case must be decided in accordance with this rule This is the second question.

(1) A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 893=52 Cal. 602.

(2) [1866] 1 Ex. 265.

This point requires very careful consideration especially as the rule, as it stands at the present day, after explanation and differentiation in subsequent cases does not appear to have any clear logical basis. In his judgment (reported in 1 Smith's L. C. 882, 897 (Ed. 12) Blackburn, J., after stating the rule in the words quoted above, went on to say:

"He (the causer of damage) can excuse himself by showing that the escape was through the plaintiff's default, or perhaps the consequence of vis major . . . . . The general rule seems just. The person whose grass or corn is eaten down by the escaping cattle of his neighbour, or whose mine is flooded by the water from his neighbour's reservoir . . . . . is damnified without any fault of his own (this it is submitted is perfectly irrelevant as ex hypothesi the persons injured by torts are always damnified without any fault of their own), and it seems reasonable and just that the neighbour who has brought something on his own property . . . . . harmless to others so long as it is confined to his own property, but which he knows to be mischievous if it gets on his neighbour's should be obliged to make good the damage etc."

This is a perfectly obvious reason for making a man liable for his torts, but it is not a clear reason for the exception embodied in the rule. But in the next two pages the learned Judge goes on to discuss the law as to mischief caused by animals, beginning with the year book of 20. Ed. 4, and it is quite clear from this that the basis of the rule is the awe with which at that time men were wont to regard the forces of nature. Nature is uncontrollable and man seeks to control her at his own risk. This, too, appears from the much shorter judgment of Lord Cairns in the House of Lords. But the principle has been invaded by the case of Nicholas v. Marsland (3) which supplies this exception, that the rule does not apply if vis major be proved, as indeed, was suggested by Blackburn, J., and in Box v Jubb (4) (quoted Pollock 476) a further exception was made The defendant is not liable if the escape of the natural force is due to the intervention of a stranger Thus it has been recognized that the forces of nature are not necessarily uncontrollable in ordinary circumstances, and that the old common law mediaeval rule based doubtless on the needs of an agricultural community is not wholly suitable in the changed conditions of modern life Indeed the Courts seem to have always been trying to differentiate the cases to which logically it has applied

Nevertheless, the rule exists in England and has been used in India I can only find one case Bomanji v Mahomedally (5), but there are probably others; and I must differentiate the case now under discussion or hold that, though the defendant would have a perfect defence had of one his contractor's workmen dropped an iron beem on the plaintiff's head, he would have had no defence had they spilled a bucket of water over him. I find what seems to me to be a good ground of distinction in the judgment of Blackburn, J, in the leading case itself:

"There are many cases" he says" (p. 903 1 Smith L. C.) in which proof of negligence is essential as for instance when an unruly horse gets on the foot path of a public street and kicks a passenger Hammack v. White (6). Or where a person in a dock is struck by the falling of a bale of cotton which the defendants servant were lowering. Scott v. London Dock Co) . . . . . But we think these cases distinguishable from the present. Traffic on the highways whether by land or sea cannot be conducted without exposing those persons or property who are near it to some inevitable risk; and, that being so, those who go on the highway or have their property adjacent to it, may well be held to do so subject to their taking on themselves the risk of injury from that inevitable danger, and persons, who by license of the owner pass near to warehouses where goods are being raised or lowered, certainly do so subject to the inevitable risk of accident. In neither case, therefore, can they recover without proof of want of care or skill occasioning the accident, and it is believed that all the cases in which inevitable accident has been held to be an excuse for what prima facie was a trespass, can be explained on the same principle, that the circumstances were such as to show the plaintiff had taken the risk on himself."

At first sight this may seem irrelevant. The plaintiff was not a passer-by, and did nothing directly to take risk on himself But the principle is that, in considering whether a particular case is within the rule, a Court must make allowance for the conditions of modern life and the accidents which are inevitable when men live and carry on business in communities. If traffic is a necessity of modern life, so surely are building operations; and, as the learned Judge recognized that men who go about the streets of modern towns voluntarily subject themselves to certain inevitable risks, he would, I imagine, have equally recognized that those who choose to dwell or to store their goods in crowded cities must be assumed to have submitted themselves to certain risks. It is clear from Scott v. The London Dock Co, that this includes the risk of having heavy articles dropped on their heads from the roofs of high buildings. If that occurs they can recover damages if there has been negligence, but they are not insured by the occupiers of the premises concerned against the risk Had one of the contractor's men in this case injured the plaintiff by dropping an iron beam on him the contractor might have been liable, but the defendant would have been safe And, this being the case, I cannot see why it should not be considered that the plaintiff, when he took the godown on lease, did not submit himself to all such accidents as are likely to occur in the course of building operations, which are a normal part of the life of a modern town, and why any distinction should be made between damage caused by the escape of water which must necessarily be used in such operations, and damage caused in any other way. It cannot be said that the amount of water which is used in making a proof is necessarily more difficult to control than other materials, or that, when carried to a height, it is potentially more dangerous than any other heavy article.

That this is the true rule is shown by the case of Bomanji v. Mahomedally (5), which decided that though a person who stores water in a house subjects himself to the rule in Fletcher v. Rylands (2), if the water escapes into his neighbour's property, a person who occupies one floor of the house must be taken to have subjected himself to all risks and must prove negligence, if he wishes to recover damages for mischief, i e, negligence was an essential ingredient of the action The question whether the neighbours had equally with the lodgers voluntarily subjected themselves to the risk of leaks was not then under consideration, but the case shows that even in water cases the main rule has been modified by the principle of the cases of Hammack v. White (6) and Box v Jubb (4) For these reasons, I hold that the defendant is not liable. It is hard on the plaintiffs that they should suffer damages and not be able to recover, unless the contractor happens to be a rich man But it seems to me that the strict application of the rule of Fletcher and Rylandas to all water cases, without taking into account the condition of modern life and the great difference between the permanent storage of vast quantities in artificial reservoirs and the use of a few hundred gallons for purely temporary purposes, would be a great hardship and a hindrance to modern business operations. I find then that the defendants are exempt from liability because by employing a competent contractor and competent architect they acted with the greatest possible care The suit is, therefore, dismissed Nevertheless, since this is apparently the first case regarding the responsibility of persons who undertake building operations, for damage done by water, and the plaintiffs had a good ground for suing the defendant, I make no order as to costs.

Ghanshamdas Ladharam—for Applicant.

Khemchand Sukhramdas—for Opponent.

Judgment—This is an application for a succession certificate in respect of an item of Rs. 555-7-0 being the amount of the provident fund of one Moosa, resident of Karachi

The applicant Ismil, son of Moosa, claims the amount as being the heir of Ghulam Hussain, son of Moosa, who was nominated by Moosa as the person who should receive the amount of the provident fund The opponent, Mt Amina, is the widow of the deceased Moosa, and the stepmother of the applicant. She claims the sum on the ground that she is the defendant of the deceased Moosa, who has the first claim to the provident fund Ghulam Hussain died before the death of Moosa.

The point for consideration, therefore, simply is whether if a nominee of a provident fund subscriber has died previous to the death of the person entitled to the said fund, the heir of the nominee is entitled to the money in question or the first dependent of the deceased subscriber.

The learned pleader for the applicant relies chiefly on Ss 4 and 5, Provident Funds Act, 1925. These provisions deal with the payment of provident funds and particularly with payment to the nominee of the subscriber. It is argued that, as the provident fund money vests in the nominee the heir of the nominee is entitled to receive the amount even after the death of the nominee

On behalf of the opponent reliance is placed chiefly on R. 17, Note (2) of the Rules regulating general Provident Fund Accounts. It is there laid down that,

" where a person nominated in the form of declaration dies before the subscriber, the declaration shall, in the absence of direction to the contrary in the form of declaration, become null and void in respect of that person "

This rule deals with the exact point under consideration, whereas Ss. 4 and 5, Provident Funds Act, 1925, do not deal specifically with that point.

It is contended on behalf of the applicant that these rules do not apply to the North Western Railway Provident Fund which is now under consideration. The Rules are stated to be rules regulating the General Provident Funds , and in R. 2 (e) reference is made to the position of a person who has been a subscriber to the State Railway Provident Fund, and who is subsequently transferred to pensionable Government service The rules do not show directly that they apply to State Railway Provident Funds, but, on the other hand, they are rules issued in 1926, after the Provident Funds Act, 1925 was passed, and in any case they form a guide in respect of the interpretation of the question now under consideration

In view, therefore, of the fact that the sections themselves do not deal specifically with the point, I am of opinion that we should refer to the rules where the very point under consideration is dealt with. It also appears to me to be not an unreasonable interpretation of the Act, because a man may be willing to nominate a particular person to receive his provident fund but he may not be willing that the heir of such nominee after the death of nominee, should have the prior right to it. The Act itself makes it clear that normally the person who should receive the amount is the dependent who is defined in S 2 of the Act, as a wife and certain other persons, the major son not being one of those persons. I am of opinion, therefore, that, in the absence of a provision that the heir of nominee should receive the provident fund, the first dependent of the subscriber has the prior right thereto

In view of the above remarks it is open to Mt. Amina the opponent, to make an application for a succession certificate in which case the Court will pass orders thereon

The present application is dismissed with costs.

Judgment—This appeal arises out of a suit filed by the plaintiff-respondents for recovery of Rs 793-7-9 said to be due by the defendant-appellants carrying on business in the name and style of Rochiram Gianchand on a commission agency account which was said to consist of certain dealings in wheat and dyes.

The defendants admitted that they had dealings with the plaintiffs in respect of wheat but contended that on that account nothing was due by them. With regard to the dyes their case was that the plaintiffs acted as commission agents of quite a different firm which carried on business in the name of Radhomal Santumal. They also raised certain other pleas and the learned trial Judge framed the following issues :

1. Is the suit in time or not ?
2. Cannot the suit lie in the form in which it is brought ?
3. Did the defendants take the items of account shown in the suit ?
4. On an account being taken what will be due to the plaintiff ?
5. What should the decree be ?

When the case started the plaintiffs' pleader had in his opening address the names of the witnesses whom he intended to call. At an adjourned hearing he craved leave to examine certain other witnesses whom he had summoned and who were in attendance but whose names were not mentioned in the opening address. He also craved leave to put in certain documents said to be letters written by the defendant but the learned Judge excluded both these pieces of evidence and on the evidence before him came to the conclusion that the two firms of Rochiram Gianchand and Radomal Santumal were different and that the account of the firm of Rochiram Gianchand consisted only of dealings in wheat on which account nothing was due to the plaintiffs. He accordingly dismissed the plaintiffs' suit.

On appeal the learned Astistant Judge, Hyderabad, Sind, was of opinion that the evidence of witnesses had been wrongly rejected. In the absence of such evidence and in view of the further facts that the defendants in their turn claimed that if that evidence was allowed to be taken they should be permitted to call evidence in rebuttal, the learned Judge set aside the decree of the lower Court and remanded the case to lower Court for trial de novo. It is against that order that the defendants have come to us in appeal.

Now, there can be no doubt that the order of the learned Judge is not strictly correct. The learned Judge appears to have dealt with the case under O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C. But that rule deals with cases where the judgment of the trial Court on preliminary issue is reversed by the appellate Court. In the present case the Appellate Judge was not in a position either to reverse or confirm the judgment of the trial Court on such issues as certain evidence had been excluded and he was not in a position to say what the effect of such evidence would be on the findings on those issues The proper rule under which the learned Judge should have proceeded was R. 27 which empowered him to allow any evidence or documents to be produced or witnesses to be examined where the trial Court had refused to allow such evidence or where he required the production of such evidence for the purpose of enabling him to pronounce judgment or for any other substantial cause. Under that rule it was open to the learned Judge not only to order that the plaintiffs should be permitted to adduce oral evidence which was excluded but also to order that the defendants should likewise be permitted to adduce evidence in rebuttal if they so wished. It was equally open to him to record such evidence himself or to direct the trial Court to do so.

We accordingly allow the appeal and direct the learned Appellate Judge to remand the case under O. 41, Rr. 27 and 28, to the trial Court with directions to record the evidence of the witnesses cited on behalf of the plaintiffs which was excluded and also to record such evidence of the defendants as may be produced in rebuttal. We understand from Mr. Kimatrai that in pursuance of the order already passed the Sub-Judge has recorded certain evidence, which had originally been excluded. If that is so, we have no doubt that the learned trial Judge will after hearing the parties treat that evidence as evidence recorded in pursuance of O 41, R. 28, and will not require the plaintiffs to produce those witnesses again unless there is sufficient cause to the contrary.

Costs of both the Courts to be costs in the cause.

Second Appeal No 25 of 1926, Decided on 24th January 1929.

Court-fees Act S. 7 (5)—In suit for recovery of possession of property court-fees paid on value of property and suit decreed—Defendant appealing against decree—He must pay same court-fees on value of property though he was in possession of property.

Where in a suit for recovery of possession of certain property on payment of the necessary court-fees on the value of the property the claim is decreed and the defendant appeals against the decree, he is bound to pay the same court-fee upon the value of such property on the memorandum of appeal although he was in possession of property. [P 161 C 2]

Dipchand Chandumal—for Appellants.

Srikishandas H. Lulla—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The plaintiff-respondent filed this suit against the defendants-appellants for recovery of possession of certain property of which he claimed to be the owner and paid the necessary court-fee on the value of the property. He succeeded in the suit and obtained a decree. The defendants appealed against that decree but refused to pay any court-fee on the value of the property on the ground that as he was in possession it was open to him to put his own valuation on the declaration which he wanted, namely, that the plaintiff was not the owner of the property and was not entitled to possession. Notwithstanding an opportunity given to him by the first appellate Court he refused to supply the necessary court-fee with the result that his appeal was dismissed. He has now come to us in second appeal and has again valued the relief sought by him in the same manner as before.

Now the test which is generally laid down in determining what is the proper court-fee payable on a memorandum of appeal is what is the value of the relief granted which is sought to be got rid of. The subject matter in dispute in this case was possession of property and the fee paid by the plaintiff was based upon the value of such property. The appellant was, therefore, bound to pay the same court-fee on the memorandum of appeal irrespective of the fact that he was in possession of the property. As the appellant failed to pay the necessary court-fee in the lower Court though an opportunity was afforded to him the learned Judge was right in dismissing his appeal.

This appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

D. N. O'Sullivan—for Applicant.

Percival, J. C.—This is a revision application against the decree of the Small Cause Court, Karachi, who has passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs Messrs Norbhoy Allibhoy and Sons for Rs 997-8-0 and costs.

The defendant has filed this application.

In this case the defendant bought a lathe and two other articles from the plaintiff for Rs. 2,650. He paid out of this amount Rs 1,700 to the plaintiffs and the suit was for the remaining amount with interest.

Two grounds raised in the application are that there was misrepresentation by the plaintiff and that there was breach of warranty. The first of these two points is a question of fact, and it has been held by the learned Small Cause Cause Court Judge that there was no misrepresentation by the plaintiff. He holds indeed that the plaintiff was not present at all when the defendant came to inspect the articles.

In connexion with the other point raised by the counsel for the applicant that of a breach of warranty reliance is placed on behalf of the appellant on S. 114, Contract Act, and the case Hurbut John Amies v. Jal P. Virji (1) If we turn to S 114 we see that the wording of it is rather restricted. The words are as follows :

"Where goods have been ordered for a specified purpose, for which goods of the denomination mentioned in the order are usually sold, there is an implied warranty by the seller that the goods supplied are fit for that purpose.

Illustration

"B orders of A, copper manufacturer, copper for sheathing a vessel. A, on this order supplies copper. There is an implied warranty that the copper is fit for sheathing a vessel."

If we look at the facts of this case, as found by the learned Small Cause Court Judge we see that they are considerably different from those mentioned in S. 114, Contract Act. Or even in the Bombay case mentioned above, which had reference to a vendor of a motor car. In the present case as stated by the plaintiff, the plaintiff sold second-hand iron goods which were obtained from Busreh. He was not present when the defendant came and inspected the goods Defendant came and inspected the goods in the presence of one Abdul Satar for about half or three-fourths of an hour, and after having done this he decided to purchase them. The finding of the learned Small Cause Court Judge, as stated in his judgment, is :

"The defendant had made up his mind to purchase the machines before he had ever seen the plaintiff. The defendant himself is an engineer which the plaintiff is not ; and the machines were admittedly second-hand and received from Busreh. So that even if the plaintiff made the alleged statement, which, however, he denies, it does not appear that the defendant was influenced by it to give his consent or that it was made a term of the contract."

He further observes that the plaintiff was not present when the parties had met and struck the bargain. The finding is, therefore, that they were merely second hand articles bought from Busreh, that the plaintiff did not misrepresent in any way that they were fit for lathes and that he did not in fact give any warranty that they were so fit.

It may be mentioned, inter alia, that the defendant did not take early steps in the matter. He paid Rs. 1,700 and when plaintiff gave him notice demanding the price of the goods a month after the sale he gave no reply.

Having regard to the finding of the learned Small Cause Court Judge, it does not appear to be a case for this Court to interfere ; and the application is accordingly dismissed with costs

Rupchand, A. J. C.—I concur.

It is well settled that if a party purchases an article upon his own judgment he cannot afterwards hold the vendor responsible on the ground that the article has turned out to be unfit for the purpose for which it was required. It is equally well-settled that if a purchaser relies upon the judgment of the seller and informs him of the use to which the article is to be applied, the transaction carries with it an implied warranty that the thing shall be fit and proper for the purpose for which it was designed. Brown v. Edgington (2)

Now whether the purchaser has relied upon his own judgment or upon that of the seller is a question of fact in each case In the present case, it is not disputed that the defendant is a Mechanical Engineer and fully knew about the use of the article which he was purchasing.

On the other hand, there is no evidence on the record and no attempt has been made to prove that the plaintiff was dealing in these articles whether new or second-hand. There is also clear evidence that the defendant knew that he was buying these articles which had been purchased by the plaintiff from the Military Authorities at Busreh as second-hand goods. There is also evidence that the defendant himself inspected them at the time when the plaintiff who made the contract was not present there. And under those circumstances, I am not prepared to hold that the learned Judge below was in error in coming to the conclusion that no case of implied warranty had been made out or that, his finding is so erroneous as to require interference in revision.

Civil Original Suit No. 14 of 1925, Decided on 19th March 1929.

Deccan Agriculturist Relief Act (17 of 1879), S. 10-A—Legal representative of deceased defendant, agriculturist — Civil Court's jurisdiction is not ousted. (obiter)

The mere fact that one or more legal representatives of a deceased defendant has the status of an agriculturist since the death of deceased defendant or acquired that status subsequently will not oust the jurisdiction of the High Court in a suit which is properly instituted. [P 163 C 2]

Srikrishendas H. Lulla — for Plaintiffs.

Kodumal Lekhraj—for Defendants.

Judgment.—Two issues by consent have been fixed as preliminary issues viz., (1) Are the defendants 1 (a) to 1 (e) agriculturists. (1) (a). If so, has this Court jurisdiction ?

The burden of proving issue 1 was on the defendants who raised this issue. The evidence brought consists of the oral evidence of one Tirathmal Janimal and certified copies of 5 extracts from the Record-of-Rights register. Tirathmal alleges that he himself is an agriculturist. He admits that he also does the business of making bidis but says that he derives Rs. 200 to Rs 300 from agriculture and Rs. 100 to Rs. 200 a year from making bidis. He has produced no documentary evidence in support of his allegation that he is an agriculturist and on his mere vague allegation, I am not prepared to hold that he is such. He has, however, given evidence with regard to certain other defendants, viz., defendants Satumal, Tejumal, Rupanmal and Bhojomal. None of these defendants have given evidence themselves. According to Tirathmal they keep books but these books have not been produced. Tirathmal says that they have no other source of income than agriculture. But it is not clear what means Tirathmal has of knowing what the source of the income of these defendants is or how they are related to him. Their omission to come and give evidence and to produce their books raises a presumption against them which considerably weakens the evidence of Tirathmal I am of opinion that it is not established that the main source of income of these defendants is agriculture though it is established that Satumal, Tejumal, Rupanmal and Bhojomal own agricultural lands.

My finding on issue 1 is accordingly in the negative

Issue 1 (a) does not strictly arise. But I would like to point out that at the time of the institution of the suit it was not suggested that any defendant was an agriculturist The only ground on which it is alleged that this Court has now no jurisdiction is that certain legal representatives of the defendant who died after the institution of the suit have acquired that status or had that status at her death. I do not think that the mere fact that one or more legal representatives of a deceased defendant was an agriculturist would oust the jurisdiction of the Court in a suit which was properly instituted If that were the case, great hardship and inconvenience would, in my opinion, arise in cases in which agriculturists were only concerned in a representative capacity Had I decided issue 1 in the affirmative my decision on issue 1 (a) would have been in the affirmative also. That issue, however, does not arise.

Plaintiff to have costs of these preliminary issues, but care should be taken by the office that pleader's fees are not charged twice over in the form of costs.

Misc. Appeal No. 15 of 1928, Decided on 13th February 1929, from an order of the Official Assignee in Insolvency Case No. 15 of 1928

(a) Contract Act, S. 62—Unstamped promissory note though inadmissible in evidence, creditor can prove his original debt.

Even if a chit produced is a promissory note and as such inadmissible in evidence for want of stamp, it is open to a creditor to prove his original debt. Brown v. Watts, (1808) 1 Taunt 353, Rel. on. [P 164 C 1]

(b) Negotiable Instruments Act, S. 13—Chithi not mentioning payee is not negotiable instrument.

Where the chithi or demand note does not mention the person to whom the amount is to be paid, it is not a negotiable instrument. [P 164 C 1]

Menghraj Kalumal—for Plaintiff.

Judgment — I think the learned Official Assignee was in error in rejecting this claim. Even if the chit produced before him was a promissory note, and as such inadmissible in evidence for want of stamp, it was open to the creditor to prove his original debt : Brown v. Watts (1). The claim states as follows :

"Particular of account referred to above :

A demand note in my favour issued by the insolvents.

The amount paid to him as deposit. Chithi in original and its translation are hereto attached."

At first sight, it might appear that the creditor had based his claim on the demand note, but reading the whole of this paragraph it is clear that the claim was based upon the original debt, namely, the deposit of Rs. 500, and the demand note or chithi, was relied upon only in proof of the debt. I am further of the opinion that the chithi or demand note is not a negotiable instrument. There is no mention in it of the person to whom Rs. 500 have to be paid on demand. This, in itself, takes the document out of the definition of a negotiable instrument. I accordingly allow the appeal and order that the Official Receiver should admit the claim of the appellant.

Civil Revn. Appln. No. 148 of 1925, Decided on 23rd January 1929, against the order of Sub-Judge, Sehwan.

Civil P. C, Sch. 2, Para. 14—Award returned to original arbitrator with direction to modify on specified point—Whole award altered—Arbitrator held functus officio.

When an award is sent back by the Court to the original arbitrator with direction to specify definitely the land awarded and return the award so amended, and the arbitrator instead of complying with the order goes afresh into the matter and makes a fresh award, thereby depriving the party of the award made in his favour the award cannot be accepted and the arbitrator is functus officio except as to that portion of the award which was ordered to be amended: Johnson v. Latham, 20 L. J. Q. B. 236, Rel. on. [P 165 C 2]

Fatechand Assudomal—for Applicant

Percival, J. C.—This is a revision application against the decree of the Sub-Judge of Sehwan made in terms of an award passed by the arbitrator Wadero Fakirbux Khan. In this case the reference was made to the arbitrator and he made an award in the following terms

"The land, of which the plaintiff produces the deeds proving the purchase and not only giving the boundaries, is awarded to the plaintiff."

On this point the learned Sub-Judge as follows :

"The award read. But it seems the award has not been made clearly. Hence the award may be sent back to the arbitrator who should be asked to make it clear as to which party has been awarded the land mentioned in the suit."

Then he goes on to say :

"Baharsing bailiff to take this award to the arbitrator and bring it amended by 20th June 1925."

To the arbitrator he gave the following instructions :

"The award given by you in this matter is returned in original per Baharsing bailiff which please amend as ordered and return by 27th June per same bailiff."

It appears from this that he intended that the particular lands which were covered by the order in the award, namely, the lands of which the boundaries were stated should be specified. There was no certainty in the award. It was uncertain as to which particular lands were covered by the award. The arbitrator, however, instead of merely saying that the deeds in question referred to certain particular lands, to which the award was meant to apply, went afresh in the matter and made a fresh award. He said :

"Enquiry has been made from the plaintiff's witnesses and other people of the neighbourhood but no one proves the right of the plaintiff. It is not known as to on what basis the deeds are written. From enquiries made from the witnesses and other people the defendant's right is proved. Hence the defendant should get this land."

So that in fact the arbitrator refused to carry out the order of the Court regarding the award, and made a fresh award In these circumstances it appears that the learned Sub-Judge has exceeded his jurisdiction in accepting the second award as carrying out the instruction made in the remand order sending back the award to the arbitrator. There was, therefore, no proper second award in accordance with which the decree should be framed, and the decree is, accordingly, set aside and the case is remanded to the Sub-Judge for disposal according to law.

Having regard to the fact that the arbitrator did not carry out the instructions of the Court, it does not appear that this is a case which should be sent back to the previous arbitrator for disposal in accordance with the first order of the Court We direct simply that the case should be proceeded with afresh by the Sub-Judge.

Costs to be costs in the cause.

Rupchand, A. J. C —This revision application raises an interesting question of law on which there is apparently no precise authority of any Indian High Court.

We are told that when the first award was received by the Court, the learned Judge passed an order suo motu remitting the award to the arbitrator as it was indefinite in so far that it merely stated that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for the lands in respect of which he had produced documents but did not specify what those lands were or if they were the same as those which were the subject-matter of the suit. As the award then stood, no decree could be passed thereon so as to be executable and it was necessary that the award should specify the lands in some form or the other. The award was remitted to the arbitrator only for the purpose of enabling him to specify the lands which he had awarded to the plaintiff. Instead of complying with that order the arbitrator submitted a fresh award holding that the plaintiff's suit should be dismissed. Now this new award might have been justified if the document proved by the plaintiff before the arbitrator did not refer to the lands in suit. In that case it might have been said that the arbitrator was under a misapprehension that the documents related to the lands in suit. But that is not so. As a matter of fact the lands referred to in the document and in suit are identical The question, therefore, arises, whether it was competent to the arbitrator to pass a new award diametrically opposed to the first when he was merely required to specify what lands were referred to by him.

The following are the observations of Erle, J , in Johnson v. Latham (1) :

"Suppose an award good as to three points, and bad as to the fourth, and sent back as to that alone, as at present advised, I am of opinion that the arbitrator is functus officio as to the three, and cannot alter his judgment as to them."

Our attention has not been drawn to any Indian decision directly bearing on the point, but it would appear that the principle enunciated by Erle, J would equally apply to the provisions of R 14, Sch. 2, Civil P C. In my opinion the arbitrator could not alter his judgment and nonsuit the plaintiff. His second award was beyond the scope of his authority and cannot therefore stand nor can a decree be passed on the first award unless it is amended by making it clear what lands it refers to. No useful purpose will be served by remanding the first award again to the arbitrator for the same purpose It will mean an unnecessary waste of time as he is not likely to go back upon his second award. For these reasons I concur in the order proposed by the learned Judicial Commissioner.

Held: that in view of S. 120 the person should have been required to give security from 8th August 1928 and as according to S. 123 the maximum punishment for failure to give security was three years, the person should be sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment from 8th August 1928.

C. Lobo—for the Crown

Judgment—Our attention has been drawn to the case of Fateh alias Usman, son of Ramzan, who was awarded 12 months' rigorous imprisonment, under Ch. 8, Criminal P. C., by the First Class Magistrate, Shikarpur on 8th August 1927 and while undergoing that sentence, was sentenced to three years rigorous imprisonment under Ch. 8, Criminal P. C., by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Kandhkot, on 21st December 1927. This sentence was confirmed by the Sessions Judge, Sukkur, on 24th February 1928. The following questions arise for consideration, viz.:

1 Whether the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Kandhkot, had jurisdiction to take action under S. 112, Criminal P. C., against a person, who at the time proceedings were instituted by the police, under S 110, Criminal P C, was undergoing a sentence of 12 months' rigorous imprisonment inflicted by another Magistrate for failure to give security for good behaviour. If so,

2. From what date the period for giving security and the sentence of imprisonment in default of giving security would commence.

3 What sentence was the maximum sentence which could be imposed in default of security.

It appears that the house of one Manghomal at Thul in the Upper Sind Frontier District was broken into on 25th July 1927. Fateh alias Usman a resident in the District was suspected but he absconded On the following day viz, 26th July he was found with two companions under suspicious circumstances in Kot Sultan in the Shikarpur Taluka with keys and property in his possession. The real identity of Fateh alias Usman who gave a false name was not known to the police and proceedings were initiated against him under S. 109, Criminal P. C., before the First Class Magistrate, Shikarpur, with the result that on 8th August 1927 he was called upon to furnish security and sentenced to 12 months' rigorous imprisonment in default It was then discovered that the respondent was Fateh alias Usman and that the property in his possession was stolen from the house of Manghomal. Fateh alias Usman was taken to the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Kandhkot, and he was challaned for house-breaking and information was given to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Kandhkot, under S. 110, Criminal P. C., and on 5th September 1927, an order was passed under S. 112 calling upon him and four others to show cause why they should not give security on the ground that they were habitual thieves and disposers of stolen property.

We are of opinion that the mere fact that Fateh alias Usman absconded and that he was brought back to the jurisdiction of the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Kandhkot, and that an order had meanwhile been passed by the learned First Class Magistrate, Shikarpur, sentencing him to 12 months' rigorous imprisonment in default of giving security on proceedings initiated under

S. 109, Criminal P. C., did not oust the jurisdiction of the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Kandhkot, to take action under S. 110, Criminal P C. It was established that he resided within the jurisdiction of the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Kandhkot, and habitually committed thefts and disposed of stolen property within the jurisdiction. In this connexion see the Calcutta ruling in Mohindra Mohan v. Emperor (1) S 120, Criminal P. C, however, provides that when the respondent is undergoing a sentence of imprisonment the period for giving security shall commence at the expiration of the sentence. Fateh alias Usman therefore should have been required to give security from 8th August 1928 and under S 123, Criminal P. C, the maximum period for failure to give security is three years. Fateh alias Usman therefore is liable to a maximum sentence of three years from 8th August 1927.

We accordingly set aside the order of the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Kandhkot, and sentence Fateh alias Usman to two years rigorous imprisonment from 8th August 1928 or until he furnishes the required security.

Judgment.—This is an appeal against an order passed by the Official Assignee holding that the motor lorry belonging to the appellant was in possession, order or disposition of the insolvent, Hassanali, in his trade or business by the consent and permission of the true owner under such circumstances that he was the reputed owner within the meaning of S. 52, Cl 2, sub-Cl. (c), Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. A considerable number of authorities have been cited by both sides upon the proper construction of this clause, and the corresponding provisions of the English Bankruptcy Act known as the reputed ownership clause. But I desire to refer only to three of them. In Colonial Bank v. Whinney (1), Cotton, L. J. said :

"I think the true construction is that the goods must be in his (the bankrupt's) order or disposition for the purposes of, or purposes connected with, his trade or business."

And Lindley, L. J, said :

"The language 'in his trade or business' means.....not merely visibly employed in his trade or business, but acquired for the purposes of the business and used for those purposes."

In re, Watson & Co (2), Vaughan Williams, L. J., after reviewing the English case law on the point summarized it by saying that :

"The true owner must have unconscientiously permitted the goods to remain in the order or disposition of the bankrupt."

He added :

This does not mean, as we understand it, that he must have intended that false credit should be obtained by the bankrupt's apparent possession of the goods, but it does at least mean that the true owner of the goods must have consented to a state of things from which he must have known, if he had considered the matter, that the inference of ownership by the bankrupt must (observe, not might or might not) arise. see Hamilton v. Bell (3), Gibson v. Bray (4) and Ex parte Bright (5). The question for us then, is, did Messrs. Atkin consent to the possession by the bankrupts, Messrs. Watson, under such circumstances that customers were entitled to assume that Messrs. Watson were the owners of the goods in their trade or business."

(5) [1879] 10 Ch. D. 566=27 W R. 585=48 L. J. B K. 81=39 L. T 649.

Both these cases have been referred to with approval by McCardie, J., in Lamb v. Wright (6) and his Lordship has said:

"The section is limited in its operation to goods "in the trade or business of the bankrupt." It does not apply to domestic articles of furniture in bankrupt's private dwelling. If a man consents to the user of his goods in the trade or business of another he knows, or ought to know, that he runs a risk of losing those goods by the operation of S. 38. But if he only consents to the user of goods for private and non-business purposes, then he is not exposed, in my opinion, to the confiscatory provisions of S. 38, merely because the bankrupt without his knowledge or consent, has used those goods in and for his trade and business. A man, of course, cannot be said to consent to what he does not know."

It would appear from these cases that, in order to attract the applicability of of the doctrine of reputed ownership, it must he proved (a) that the true owner parted with possession of the goods under circumstances from which he must have known, if he had considered the matter, that the goods will be used in the trade or business of the bankrupt, (b) that they were so used, and (c) that they were in his possession, order or disposition at the date of the presentation of the insolvency petition. In the present case there can be no doubt that all these conditions exist. It is either admitted or proved beyond doubt that (1) Hassanali the hirer of the motor lorry was a trader, (2) that the motor lorry is pre-eminently a commercial vehicle and as such it was pre-eminently intended to be used for the purpose of some trade, (3) that when Hassanali hired the lorry the appellants either knew, or, if they had made due inquiries, must have known that Hassanali was hiring it for the purpose of its being used in his trade or business; (4) that it was so used by him and (5) that it was in his possession at the date of the presentation of the petition for insolvency.

In Lamb v. Wright (6), no such presumption was raised as the car given on the hire and purchase system was a Jewet two-seater car pre-eminently intended for private use and was mainly used by the bankrupt as such. It was, therefore, difficult to raise the presumption that he had agreed to its being used by the bankrupt in his trade. In dealing with the facts of that case McCardie, J., said :

"After he got possession of the car in dispute Pinchin used it from time to time (a) for the purpose of delivering goods to the houses of the customers, and (b) for the purpose of getting supplies from the wholesale market. The extent to which the car was used for those purposes was much in dispute before me. In my view the truth of the matter is that the car was used on two or three days in the week either for taking goods to customers or for visits to the wholesale market. The user on such days was for a small part of the day only and not for the whole day. The car was employed somewhat beyond a mere emergency car. But, in my opinion its main function and principal use with Pinchin was that of a pleasure car. He used it regularly as such both on week ends and other days. No name or advertisement was ever placed on it, and it was never altered in any way so as to be convenient for employment as a commercial vehicle."

In the present case, on the contrary, it would appear that the very fact that the vehicle hired out by the insolvent was a lorry is sufficient to raise the presumption that the appellants parted with its possession knowing that it will be used by the insolvent for his trade, and this coupled with the fact that it was so used, brings it within the rule laid down in S. 52, Cl. 2, sub-Cl. (c). I therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Judgment.—This is an appeal against the judgment and decree of the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner who held that a certain claim preferred by the plaintiffs was not barred by limitation, and that the vendors impliedly agreed in referring the matters to arbitration, that the breach was on their part, that the defendants' firm had notice of the arbitration proceedings, that the reference and award were valid and genuine, and that the contract between the appellants' firm and that of Lilaram stood cancelled and did not operate.

It is argued on behalf of the appellants that the claim of the plaintiffs was barred by limitation, because it was a claim for damages for breach of contract and due date was admittedly 25th January 1918 It is contended, therefore, that under Art 115, Lim. Act, the suit became barred within three years of that date, and that even if the reference was regarded as an acknowledgment of liability the suit became time barred within three years of 23rd March 1918, the date on which the present reference to arbitration was signed.

I am of opinion that this contention is not sustainable, for the plaintiff, in his plaint, sued in the alternative, on the award, and maintained that the cause of action arose in the alternative on 21st June 1918, when the award was filed. The decision on this point partly depends on the intention of the parties, when the reference was entered into.

For the appellant it is contended that a number of disputes were pending on numerous contracts and that the only question referred to arbitration by the general reference was the question "at what rates damages were to be paid" and that the remaining disputes were left outside the reference The learned Judge was of the opinion that the parties impliedly treated the contract as having been broken, impliedly waived all other defences with regard to the contract and referred the sole remaining dispute to the arbitrators by the general reference so that they might decide at what rates damages were to be paid.

I am of opinion, that the wording of the general reference and the circumstances of the case show, that the view taken by the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner was correct. In the reference it is mentioned:

"disputes are pending between the sellers in respect of the non-fulfilment of the contracts and that the parties have now agreed to refer the said disputes (plural) to the arbitration of the arbitrators."

The arbitrators were then directed to settle the rates as they thought fit and proper at which damages should be calculated and be paid by one party to the other.

It seems to me clear, that it was not the intention of the parties to the general reference that the arbitrators should merely fix rates leaving the rest of the disputes excluded, and that the parties should then settle other disputes in the Courts

That being so, it seems to me it was Art. 120, which applied, and not Art. 115 or Art. 113. The Allahabad High Court, no doubt, in a number of rulings, has held that suits to enforce awards are governed by Art. 113, Lim. Act. There are contradictory rulings by the Allahabad High Court on that point. The view taken, however, by Calcutta and Madras has been that it is Art. 120 which applies and not Art. 113: see Bhajari Saha Banikya v. Behary Lal Basak (1), which endorsed the view of the Madras High Court. The view of our Court in Somajimal v. Todmal (2) was to the same effect.

It follows, in my opinion, that the present suit was not barred by limitation.

It is now contended, however, that the question of interest was a matter beyond the scope of the reference It is objected by Mr. Kimatrai on the point that the appellant did not specifically raise this in the issues and did not specifically raise the question of interest in the memorandum of appeal. It is the fact, however, that in the written statement, it was contended that the arbitrators had gone beyond the scope of the reference and an issue was raised on that point and in the memorandum of appeal, it was contended that the learned Judge had erred in not holding that the award was beyond the scope of the reference Reliance is placed on behalf of the appellant on a passage in Russel, 9th Edn., 450, in which the learned author on arbitration points out that future interest was beyond the scope of the reference. On the other hand, it has been held that arbitrators have authority to take into consideration a custom by which interest is payable : see Uttam Chand Saligram v. Mahmood Jewa Mamooji (3), where Rankin, J., pointed out that arbitrators have power to decide according to justice and equities Had a general power been conferred on the arbitrators to decide the disputes the question of interest would have presented no difficulty. The reference, however, shows what the arbitrators were authorized to do was to settle and fix the rates as they thought fit and proper, at which damages should be calculated and paid In view of the specific authority given to them, it was not to settle the disputes generally but to settle the disputes by fixing the rates. There might, I think, have been considerable force in the contention that the award of interest as well as the fixing of the rates was beyond the authority given to the arbitrator. The evidence, however, shows that the appellants accepted benefits under the general award. They have pleaded the general award and rate under the general award as a defence to a claim for making payment at the market rate which has been held by this Court to be Rs. 59-0-0.

That being so, I am of opinion that the appellants are precluded, having acted on the general award and having accepted benefits under it, from challenging the award of interest in the present proceedings.

I would, therefore, on the ground mentioned dismiss the appeal with costs

Misc. Civil Appeal No. 7 of 1927, Decided on 23rd January 1929, from an order of 1st Class Sub-Judge, Larkana, D/- 13th January 1927

(a) Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, Ss. 3 and 11—S. 11 preserves right of plaintiff to select venue when defendants agriculturists do not reside within jurisdiction of one Court.

Though S 11 provides that a suit which falls within Cl. (5), S 3, shall be instituted in the Court where the sole defendant who is an agriculturist or where there are more than one defendant who are agriculturists, all such defendants resided, it preserves the right of the plaintiff to select his venue where all defendants who are agriculturists do not reside within the jurisdiction of one Court. The plaintiff has in such case the option of instituting suit in any Court in which any one of such agriculturists resides. [P 171 C 1]

(b) Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, S 3, Cls. (w) and (x)—Case of surety falls under Cl. (w) and not under Cl. (x)—Suit can be instituted under S. 11 where sureties reside.

The words in Cl. (w), S 3 " on a written or unwritten engagement for the payment of money not herein provided for " are wide enough to cover the case of a surety. Clause (x) does not refer to a contract of suretyship which falls within the purview of Cl. (w), so suit under S 11 can be instituted in the Court within whose jurisdiction the sureties reside. [P 171 C 2]

(c) Civil P. C., S 20 (b)—Cause of action indubitably arising within jurisdiction—No leave is necessary.

Judgment —This is an appeal against the order of the First Class Sub-Judge, Larkana, returning the plaint for presentation to the proper Court.

It appears that the plaintiffs instituted this suit for recovery of Rs. 5,000 odd against four defendants. Their case was that defendants 1 and 2 had executed certain hundis in their favour on which this sum was due and that defendants 3 and 4 had agreed to stand sureties for due payment thereof. In the plaint it was stated that none of the defendants were agriculturists. Both sets of defendants raised the plea that they were agriculturists and contended that as defendants 1 and 2 resided outside the jurisdiction of the Larkana Court, that Court could not entertain the suit in view of the provisions of S. 11, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. They also contended that as no leave of the Court was obtained under S 20, Civil P. C , no leave should be granted for institution of the suit in Larkana Court and that the plaint should be returned for presentation to the Hyderabad Court where defendants 1 and 2 resided. At the hearing the plaintiffs admitted that defendants 3 and 4 were agriculturists and on their admission the learned Judge passed an order dated 23rd November 1926 holding that defendants 3 and 4 were agriculturists. He then proceeded with the trial of the issue as regards the status of defendants 1 and 2. On 13th January 1927, the learned Judge gave a finding that defendants 1 and 2 were agriculturists and ordered that the plaint be returned for presentation to the Hyderabad Court where defendants 1 and 2 resided.

The learned Judge has based his order on two grounds : first, that S. 11, Dekkhan Act applied and second, that as no leave of the Court had been obtained for instituting the suit in the Larkana Court the plaintiff could not maintain the suit in the Larkana Court.

Now, it is well settled that where a suit may be instituted in more Courts than one the plaintiff has a right to select his venue. It is, no doubt, true that this right has to a certain extent been curtailed by the provisions of S. 11, Dekkhan Act. That section provides that a suit which falls within Cl (w), S. 3 of the Act should be instituted in the Court where the sole defendant who is an agriculturist or where there are more than one defendants who are agriculturists all such defendants reside. But it preserves the right of the plaintiff to select his venue where all the defendants who are agriculturists do not reside within the jurisdiction of one Court. It expressly provides that the plaintiff shall in that case have the option of instituting the suit in any Court in which any one of such agriculturists resides.

Now in the present case the defendants 3 and 4 had been held to be agriculturists. They admittedly reside in the jurisdiction of the Larkana Court, and, therefore, there is no doubt that the Larkana Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

While dealing with this part of the case the learned Judge seems to have lost sight of the fact that he had recorded a finding that defendants 3 and 4 were agriculturists. He seemed to entertain the view that it was not open to the plaintiffs to admit at a very late stage of the proceedings that defendants 3 and 4 were agriculturists with the object of giving jurisdiction to the Larkana Court. He was of the opinion that the plaintiffs could not give jurisdiction to that Court by making a false admission of facts. We think that it was not open to the learned Judge to treat the admission by the plaintiff as false and especially so when he had recorded a finding holding that defendants 3 and 4 were agriculturists. If defendants 1 and 2 disputed that defendants 3 and 4 were agriculturists and if as has now been contended on their behalf they were not present when that issue was decided it was incumbent on them to have moved the Court to review its finding on that issue and to have led evidence on that point.

It is further contended that so far as the cause of action against defendants 1 and 2 was concerned it fell within Cl. (w), S 3, but so far as cause of action against defendants 3 and 4, who were sureties was concerned it fell under Cl (x) of that section, and that, therefore, under S. 11 of the Act the suit could only be instituted in the Court within whose jurisdiction defendants 1 and 2 resided.

We are not prepared to hold that the cause of action against defendants 3 and 4 does not fall within the purview of Cl. (w), S 3. The words ,

"on a written or unwritten engagement for the payment of money not herein provided for"

are wide enough to cover the case of a surety because under his contract a surety expressly agrees to render himself liable for the debt of his principal on the failure of his principal to pay the money or in other words expressly engages to pay such money.

Clause (x) reads as follows :

" Suits for the recovery of the money due on contract other than the above and suits for rent etc "

The bare reading of the above clauses makes it abundantly clear that it does not refer to contracts which fall within the purview of Cl. (w), that is to say, contracts in respect of an engagement whether written or unwritten to pay money. Clause (x) does not, therefore, refer to a contract of suretyship like the present

We think, therefore, that the learned Judge was in error in declining jurisdiction on that ground.

With regard to the second ground on which the learned Judge has proceeded, namely, that permission of the Court was necessary under S. 20 (b), Civil P. C., it is sufficient to observe that the learned Judge has not applied his mind to the fact that the cause of action against all the defendants indubitably arose within the jurisdiction of the Larkana Court, the hundis having been executed by defendants 1 and 2 at Larkana, and the amount being made payable there. So far as defendants 3 and 4 were concerned they not only resided there but had agreed to stand sureties for defendants 1 and 2 and to pay the amount at that place. No leave was, therefore, necessary under S. 20 (b), Civil P. C.

We accordingly set aside the order of the lower Court and direct the learned Judge to take back the plaint on his file and dispose of it according to law The respondents to bear the costs of this appeal.

The costs of the lower Court to be costs in the cause.

Original Civil Suit No. 95 of 1925, Decided on 2nd May 1929.

Civil P. C, O. 37 — Suit on dishonoured bill of exchange — Acceptor getting possession of goods—He cannot plead that he was merely acting as agent for the drawer—Evidence Act, S. 117.

In a suit on a dishonoured bill of exchange after the defendant has accepted the Bill and by so doing has got possession of the goods he cannot be allowed to plead that he was merely an agent acting for the drawer. He cannot be allowed to defend himself on the lines : A. I. R. 1918 P. C 146, Ref. [P 173 C 2]

Sri Kishen Das H. Lulla—for Plaintiff.

Dip Chand Chandumal — for Defendants

Order.—This suit has been filed under O. 37 by the Phoenix Trading Co., Ltd., against a Karachi firm for damages due to the dishonour of a bill of exchange accepted by the defendant firm. The disacceptance and dishonour are admitted and the question is whether leave to defend should be given.

The defence is that the acceptance was conditional and that the condition was not fulfilled. It is pleaded that the defendant firm had dealings with one Doremans, a Dutch Merchant, that a sum of Rs. 8,000 was due to them, that Doremans sent them goods accompanied by the draft in suit and they accepted the draft and so obtained the shipping documents, on condition that before the bill was presented for payment Doremans would pay them Rs. 8,000 but that he failed to do so.

This might or might not be a good and sufficient defence were Doremans the plaintiff. It would certainly be a permissible defence. The question is whether it is a good defence against the Phoenix Trading Co , Ltd. In other words, after the defendant accepted the bill, and by so doing got possession of the goods, can he be allowed to plead that the defendant was merely an agent acting for Doremans. In my opinion he cannot be allowed to defend himself on these lines It is contrary to all established rules that :

"in an action on a pro-note or bill of exchange against a person whose name properly appears as a party to the instrument it is not open to either by way of claim or defence to show that the signatory was in reality acting for an undisclosed principal. Per Lord Buckmaster in firm of Sadasuk Janki Das v. Kishen Pershad (1).

This is the principle of S. 117, Evidence Act. The rule is one of policy for the convenience of trade and the conduct of commercial affairs and I can see no reason why the acceptor should in this case be allowed a privilege not allowed to the drawer in the Privy Council case.

Leave to defend is, therefore, refused. Decree as prayed with costs and interest from suit to payment at six per cent the rate provided in the instrument

Dipchand Chandumal—for Plaintiff.

Kimatrai Bhojraj—for Defendant

Judgment.—The plaintiff is a pleader of this Court and has served as President of the Shikarpur Municipality for several years. He holds the title of a Dewan Bahadur The defendant is a retired Deputy Collector and a pensioner. He too had been a Councillor of the Shikarpur Municipality for several years, probably for the same duration as the plaintiff.

In 1920 the plaintiff was the President of the Municipality and Chairman of the Managing Committee. The defendant had some reason to be dissatisfied with the manner in which the plaintiff was carrying on his work in the Municipality. He wrote several articles, but they did not bear his name, in a paper called the "Vatan" published in that place in the issues of 30th March, 4th April and 10th April 1923, with the result that the plaintiff prosecuted the Editor of that paper, but subsequently, it is said, that on account of the Editor being a lad of sixteen years and not knowing English the plaintiff did not press that prosecution which was withdrawn somewhere in the month of June 1923.

On 2nd July 1923, a letter under the signature of the defendant was published in the "Daily Gazette" of Karachi, which paper has a very wide circulation, making certain serious allegations against the character of the plaintiff. It reproduced certain allegations which had previously been made in the "Vatan." This resulted in the present suit being filed for defamation both against the defendant and the Editor of the "Daily Gazette" The case against the Editor has been withdrawn, and we are now concerned only with the case against the defendant.

The allegations of fact which are said to be defamatory are stated in para. 8 (c) and 8 (d) of the plaint. The first allegation is that the plaintiff removed a petition filed by one Tara Singh from the municipal records and entered a false and deceptive note. The second allegation is that he falsely entered the words "with permission" on the top of Resolutions Nos 582 and 583 about the formation of Committees on 23rd February 1923; and the third is that he forged certain documents or abetted the forgery of those documents by the Chief Officer of the Municipality in connexion with the election of certain Committees. Certain details have been given extending to over one hundred lines describing the nature of this forgery. Briefly stated, the allegation is that one Mr. Atmaram was shown as the mover of a motion to select certain Committees. Mr. Atmaram was not present when that motion was moved or passed, he having come to the meeting of the municipality after the Committee had been appointed when the next item on the agenda was under discussion and that the Chief Officer had accordingly made a note showing that Mr. Atmaram attended the meeting when the next item was being discussed. But subsequently realizing that according to the municipal rules the mover being absent at the time of the appointment of the members of the Committees, the resolution was ultra vires, the plaintiff had certain alterations made so as to show that the mover Mr. Atmaram was present before the motion was put to the vote, and that he did so notwithstanding the protest of several members including the defendant.

On the strength of these three charges levelled by the defendant against the plaintiff the defendant has made certain strong comments as to the conduct of the plaintiff by alleging that the municipal administration under the plaintiff had given the highest dissatisfaction to the public of Shikarpur, and that it was a record of false minutes, deliberate misrepresentation of facts, highhandedness and selfishness that at once made Mr. Murlidhar unfit for the responsible office of the President of a City Municipality. The defendant goes on to say that .

"the Judicial Commissioner of Sind should consider whether Mr. Murlidhar, on the face of the criminal offences committed and other acts of dishonesty practised by him, can be allowed to remain on the roll of the noble legal profession to which he belongs."

Lastly, the defendant appeals to Government to take criminal action against the plaintiff by stating :

"Are not law and order the favourite stronghold of the bureaucracy going to be enforced in this instance. Full particulars of these offences have been given."

Now, the Indian Law draws no distinction between "slander" and "libel." Even under the English Law, the words used by the defendant accusing the plaintiff of certain criminal offences which exposed the plaintiff to imprisonment or other heavy penalty (and not merely to a fine in the first instance with possible imprisonment in default of payment of fine) are per se defamatory: see Odgers on "Slander & Libel," p 53. The only possible defence to such an action and one which has been taken in this case, is that the defamatory matter was true in substance and in fact. The allegations made by him on which the alleged comment is based are all made by him as true to his knowledge, he being personally present in the municipal meetings at the time when these alleged offences are said to have been committed, and, therefore, if these allegations are proved not to be true, they amount to wilful falsehood which again is by itself a proof of malice.

If the plaintiff is a criminal cadet questio he is unfit to be a member of the honourable profession or to be entrusted with the duties of the President of a Municipality, and he cannot in that case claim any damages. As said by Littledane, J , in MacPherson v. Daniels (1) :

"But if the defendant relies upon the truth as an answer to the action, he must plead the matter specially ; because the truth is an answer to the action, not because it negatives the charge of malice (for a person may wrongfully or maliciously utter slanderous matter though true, and thereby subject himself to an indictment,) but because it shows that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover damages. For the law will not permit a man to recover damages in respect of an injury to a character which he either does not, or ought not to possess."

If, therefore, the plaintiff has committed criminal offences and claims to recover damages for loss of his reputation he cannot succeed. If, on the other hand, the allegations of fact are proved to be untrue, no question of privilege can possibly arise. I had occasion to discuss this point while sitting on the High Court side in the case of Mir Allahabux Khan v. Emperor (2) wherein I said that one should not :

"lose sight of the important distinction which has been repeatedly pointed out between 'fair comment' based on well known or admitted facts and the assertion of unsubstantiated facts for comment. Where comment is made on allegations of fact which do not exist, the very foundation of the plea disappears."

On this point the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Davis v. Shepstone (3) are pertinent :

"There is no doubt that the public acts of a public man may lawfully be made the subject of fair comment or criticizm, not only by the press, but by all members of the public. But the distinction cannot be too clearly borne in mind between comment or criticizm and allegations of fact, such as that disgraceful acts had been committed, or discreditable language used. It is one thing to comment upon or criticize, even with severity, the acknowledged or proved acts of a public man, and quite another to assert that he has been guilty of particular acts of misconduct."

As the statements made by the defendant in his letter are per se defamatory, I think the burden is on him to prove that the allegations on which his comment was based were substantially true in fact. I also do not think that the plaintiff should be called upon to prove the quantum of damages. Looking at the position of the plaintiff and also the circulation which the "Daily Gazette" has, the amount of damages claimed by him is in no way excessive but, of course, it will be open to the defendant to prove that the amount claimed by the plaintiff should be reduced by proving any of the following circumstances.

(1) Evidence falling short of a justification , (2) absence of malice ; and (3) bad reputation of the plaintiff

Mr. Kimatrai has asserted that he wishes to lead evidence on these points and has further stated on instructions from his client, who is in Court, that his client is not prepared to offer any apology, that he asserts that the statements made by him are substantially true, and that he would prove them to be true. In view of the above observations, some of the issues framed in the case can easily be disposed of, and I propose to record my findings on them.

(1) Does the letter in "Daily Gazette" of 2nd July 1923, contain statements which are per se defamatory ?

Yes.

(2) Have these statements been made maliciously with a view to harm the reputation of the plaintiff as alleged in para. 7 of the plaint.

Mr. Dipchand has stated that he does not propose to rely upon the damages being enhanced on the ground that the statements were maliciously made ; but that he has only asked for this issue being raised for the purpose of showing that the letter was inspired by malice In view of the fact, that it is per se malicious, I do not think it necessary to call upon the plaintiff to prove that it was, as a matter of fact inspired by malice.

(3). Are the statements contained in the said letter substantially true ? If so, is there any cause of action against defendant 1. ?

This issue is an issue of which the burden is on the defendant and is the main issue in the case It will be decided after the evidence is recorded.

(4 & 5) Were the statements contained in the said letter bona fide in the discharge of public duty and a fair comment on the conduct of a public man ? If so, are they actionable ?

Are the said statements privileged as having been made bona fide in the interests of morality, and for public good and as relating to the conduct of a public man in his public capacity ?

The findings on these issues will follow the result of Issue 3.

(6 & 7) Is there any cause of action against defendant 2. ?

If there is, are they liable ?

Struck off as the defendant 2 has been given up.

(8). Has the plaintiff's reputation or credit been injured and has he suffered any mental pain ?

There can be no doubt that the allegations affected the reputation and credit of the plaintiff at any rate with persons who were not conversant with the affairs of the Shikarpur Municipality and that he has suffered mental pain But whether these facts would entitle him to damages or not, would depend upon the finding on Issue 3.

(9). Is the plaintiff entitled to any damages ? If so, what ?

If the finding on Issue 3 is against the defendant, the plaintiff will, in my opinion, be entitled to the amount claimed without further proof unless the defendant gives evidence in mitigation of such damages.

I now call upon the defendant to lead evidence on the main issue of which the burden is on him.

After this order was dictated, Mr. Kimatrai has argued that the plaintiff should give formal evidence that he has suffered pain of mind and also that he has suffered in reputation I do not think that such formal evidence is necessary in this case, and, therefore, I disallow his request.

Illahibux—Appellant.

Emperor—Opposite Party

Criminal Appeal No. 40 of 1929, Decided on 17th April 1929, against decision of Addl. Sess. Judge, Hyderabad.

Evidence Act, S 27—No statement or its part, not relating distinctly to facts deposed to by the accused, should go on record unless there is discovery in consequence thereof.

The words used by the legislature in S. 27 make it absolutely clear that only so much of such information whether it amounts to a confession or not, as relates distinctly to the fact which is deposed to as discovered in consequence of the information received, may be proved.

An accused gave information to the police in these words : "I shall produce the lathi with which I killed Ismail." It had been admitted as evidence under S. 27 . The lathi which the accused handed over had no marks of blood whatsoever. [P 176 C 2]

Held . that if the mere fact of the lathi having been handed to the police, might be relied upon, for the purpose of introducing an alleged confession made by the accused to the police, the provisions of S. 26 would become nugatory. [P 176 C 2]

Partabrai D. Punwani—for Appellant.

C. Lobo—for the Crown.

Percival, J C.—The accused Illahibux has been convicted by the Additional Sessions Judge of Hyderabad under S. 302 with the murder of his uncle Ismail and sentenced to transportation for life.

A considerable amount of evidence has been given in this case, and, as pointed out by the learned Additional Sessions Judge, the circumstantial evidence against the accused is very strong. The evidence shows that the accused went to one Mitho's house and took the deceased from there on an allegation which was not correct. He was last seen going with the deceased from Mitho's house. There is evidence of certain persons who say that they heard cries on the way by which accused and the deceased went That evidence may perhaps not have been correct, because the persons are relations of parties But, apart from that, the circumstantial evidence, as indicated above, is strong as against the accused. There is the further fact that Mariam, the wife of the deceased, with whom the accused is known to have had illicit connexion, stated to various leading men of the community that the accused had confessed to her that he had killed the deceased As pointed out by the learned Additional Sessions Judge, there is no reason why Mariam should give evidence against the accused in this way The probabilities would be that she would support him rather than the contrary. In fact, as has been pointed out by the learned Additional Sessions Judge, the leading men of the community were endeavouring to hush up the case not to concoct the evidence against the accused.

Taking the evidence as a whole, I agree with the learned Additional Sessions Judge that the offence is fully brought home to the accused, and that the conviction should be confirmed.

It is desirable, however, to refer to the remarks of the learned Additional Sessions Judge on S. 27, Evidence Act. The learned Judge has admitted the words "I shall produce the lathi with which I killed Ismail." These words he has admitted relying on the ruling of the Lahore High Court delivered on 24th February 1928, and on certain other cases But since the judgment of the learned Additional Sessions Judge there has been a Full Bench ruling of the same Court of seven Judges in which S. 27, Evidence Act has been fully considered. It was held in that ruling by five out of the seven learned Judges that the words which can be admitted under S. 27 are very limited. Words such as "with which I killed Ismail" would not be admissible under that ruling, with which ruling I am not disposed to disagree

However, as pointed out by the learned Judge, even apart from this evidence, and even apart from the judicial confession of the accused, there is sufficient evidence to bring home the offence to the appellant. I, therefore, dismiss the appeal and confirm the conviction and sentence.

Rupchand, A. J. C.—I concur. The words used by the legislature in S. 27, Evidence Act make it absolutely clear that only so much of such information whether it amounts to a confession or not, as relates distinctly to the fact which is deposed to as discovered in consequence of the information received, may be proved. Now, what is the fact which has been deposed to as discovered in consequence of the information received from the accused in the present case. The answer to that question is that nothing has been discovered. The lathi which the accused handed over had no marks of blood whatsoever. Every person possesses a lathi, and if the mere fact of the lathi having been handed to the police, may be relied upon, for the purpose of introducing an alleged confession made by the accused to the police, the provisions of S 27 would become nugatory. In my opinion great care should always be taken before admitting under the provisions of S 27 statements made by an accused person, and before such statements are admitted Court must be satisfied that the conditions laid down by that section are fulfilled and that no part of such statements which do not relate distinctly to the facts which are deposed as having been discovered in consequence thereof should be permitted to go on the record.

Criminal P. C., S. 439 (5)—Complainant ordered to pay compensation exceeding Rs. 50 under S. 250, has right of appeal and so no revision lies — Criminal P. C., S. 250.

A complainant who has been ordered to give compensation under S. 250, has the right of appeal whenever compensation awarded exceeds Rs. 50 in the aggregate whether this amount is payable to one accused or distributed amongst several accused. Therefore no revision lies in such a case. [P 177,C 1]

Aston, A. J. C.

Mr. Kimatrai who appears for the respondents has raised a preliminary objection that no revision lies.

Mr. Kimatrai points out that the applicant had a right of appeal and since he can appeal, he cannot apply to this Court in revision.

On behalf of the applicant a number of authorities have been cited: namely, Assan Mal Chatu Mal v Dilbar (1), Pereira v. Demello (2) and Sumaria v. Emperor (3) a decision of the Allahabad High Court, Iobhil Mallah v. Emperor (4) a decision of the Patna High Court and Sarab Dial v. Bir Singh (5)

It appears to be settled law that a complainant who has been ordered to give compensation under S 250, Criminal P. C. has the right of appeal whenever the compensation awarded exceeds Rs. 50 in the aggregate whether this amount is payable to one accused or distributed amongst several accused.

I am of opinion that Mr. Kimatrai's contention that revision does not lie is correct and would, therefore, dismiss this application.

Misc. Civil Appeal No 3 of 1929, Decided on 21st February 1929, from an order of J. C., Sind, D/- 22nd September 1928.

(a) Workmen's Compensation Act, S. 2 (1) (d)—Definition of "dependents" excludes certain relatives.

The expression "dependent" as defined in S. 2 (1) (d), includes wife, husband, parent and some other near relatives. But certain relatives are expressly excluded. Therefore it follows that gratuities are to be paid to particular persons who do not or may not include certain heirs to the deceased. [P 178 C 1]

(b) Succession Act (1925), S. 370—Succession certificate must be given in respect of estate which goes to heirs—It cannot be given in case of gratuity to be paid to particular persons.

If succession certificate is to be given in respect of the estate of the deceased person it must be in respect of an estate which goes to the heirs of the deceased person A succession certificate cannot be granted in case of gratuity which does not form part of the estate of the deceased but is merely a sum paid to particular persons who are not necessarily the heirs of the deceased. *A. Srikishendas H. Lulla—for Appellants.

T. G Elphinston—for Opponents.

Judgment.—This is a miscellaneous appeal against the order passed by Mr. Wild, Acting, J C. of Sind, in which he refused to grant a succession certificate to the applicants Mt. Hanifabai and Mariambai, widows of Abdulla Umer, on the ground that he was unable to give a succession certificate or letters of administration in a case of this character.

Abdullah Umer was a servant of the Karachi Port Trust and he was killed in the execution of his duty. The Karachi Port Trust are in the habit of giving gratuities to relations of persons who draw less than a certain amount of pay from the Port Trust, and who are killed in the execution of their duty. The said notification runs as follows:

"Gratuities will be paid to officers and servants of the Board injured, where the injury results in permanent, total or partial disablement as defined in the Workmen's Compensation Act, or to the surviving relatives of any of such officers and servants killed in the execution of their duty in accordance with the scale laid down in that Act."

"Note—For the purposes of this rule the surviving relatives will be dependents as defined in the Workmen's Compensation Act, S. 2 (1) (d)."

The applicants, Mt Hanifabai and Mariambai, have appealed to this Court. The position, however, is little peculiar, owing to the fact that the Port Trust consider that the Court can give a certificate in the circumstances of this case, while the appellants contend that no such certificate can be granted. However, in any case we have been in a position of hearing arguments on both sides as to whether a succession certificate can or cannot be granted.

Now, it appears to me apart from the merits of this particular case, whether it is to the advantage of the appellants or not that succession certificate cannot in fact be granted in the circumstances of this case, and that the view taken thereon by the learned Acting Judicial Commissioner was correct.

It will be noticed that the notification states lastly that "gratuities" will be paid, secondly, that the disablement in question is as defined by Workmen's Compensation Act, thirdly, the scale is as laid down in the Workmen's Compensation Act, and fourthly (to my mind the most important provision) the gratuity is to be paid to the "dependents" as defined in the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Now, it is contended by the learned counsel on behalf of the Port Trust that we have to look not to the Workmen's Compensation Act but to the case of Insurance or Provident Funds as analogies in the present instance. But it is significant that in the notification as mentioned above, in respect of three particulars, reference is to be made to the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Now, in regard to the expression "dependents" it is defined in S 2 (1) (d), Workmen's Compensation Act, as meaning wife, husband, parent and some other near relatives. But it is noticeable that certain relatives are expressly excluded for instance, a major son who would naturally be an heir or one of the heirs in the case. Therefore we have it that gratuities are to be paid to particular persons who do not or may not include certain heirs to the deceased.

Now, we may turn to the Succession Act, S. 370, which would apply in this case. Reference is there made to S 212 which expressly refers to any part of the "property" of a person who had died intestate. Similarly in the proviso to S. 370 reference is to the effects of the deceased person. It seems to me to be clear that succession certificate must be given in respect of the property of a deceased person. Now if the succession certificate is to be given in respect of the estate of the deceased person, I am of opinion that it follows that it must be in respect of an estate, which goes to the heirs of the deceased person. Further, it does not seem to be correct to hold that a succession certificate can be given in respect of the property of the deceased which is to go to the particular persons, who are not necessarily the heirs of the deceased.

Reference has been made in this connexion to the case reported as Aimai v. Awabai Dhanjishaw Jamsetji (1). Now in that case it was held that the Karachi Port Trust Provident Fund does not pass to the nominee but does form part of the estate of the deceased. But the reasoning of that decision is contrary to the view that in this case gratuity in question forms part of the estate of the deceased. At p. 319 (of 18 S. L. R.) of the judgment Mr. Kennedy, J. C., observed:

> "The Port Trust might say to the subscriber, if you serve me well for a certain number of years I will pay to you, or to any one you name a certain gratuity. In that case, I take it the gratuity would not be part of the estate of the deceased and administrator would have no claim to it."

In the present instance the case is even stronger. Here the man in question, Abdullah, was not a subscriber, and he could not arrange that the amount should be paid to a particular person. As indicated above, according to the view there taken, even a gratuity payable at the request of the deceased to the particular person in Mr Kennedy's opinion would not form part of the estate of the deceased. The distinction in respect of the provident fund and insurance, as indicated by Mr. Kennedy's judgment, is that in that case the amount involved forms part of the deceased's estate. That is to say, it goes to the heirs of the deceased whereas in this instance it does not necessarily go to the heirs of the deceased To get over the difficulty it was argued on behalf of the Port Trust that, even if this money was paid to the dependents still there was a trust on the dependents to distribute part of the amount to the heirs. I cannot, however, accept that argument. It seems to me to be clear from the wording of the notification that there is no obligation on the part of the dependents to pay any part of the money to any one else.

The position, therefore, is that whether we think it desirable or not in this case to grant a succession certificate the Court cannot give a succession certificate, because the gratuity in question does not form part of the estate of the deceased but is merely a sum paid to particular persons, who are not necessarily the heirs of the deceased on a particular event coming into effect

The appeal is accordingly dismissed.

Criminal Ref. No. 102 of 1929, Decided on 16th July 1929, from Dist. Magistrate, Karachi.

Criminal P. C., S. 35—Order that sentences of imprisonment in default of fines should run concurrenly is illegal.

Section 35, which empowers a Court to direct that imprisonment imposed on a person convicted at one trial of two or more offences should be concurrent does not refer to sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine but refers only to substantive sentences That being so the order that the sentences of imprisonment in default of fines should run concurrently is illegal. 5 S. L. R. 263, Rel. on. [P 179 C 1, 2]

Partabrai D. Punwani — for the Crown.

Judgment.—The District Magistrate, Karachi, has made a reference to this Court in the case of one Ghulam Ahmed who was convicted on 21st December 1928, on three charges under S. 468, and sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for 18 months and to pay a fine of Rs 150, or in default to suffer further rigorous imprisonment for six months on each of three charges. It was ordered further that the sentences were to run concurrently. In the opinion of the District Magistrate the order that the sentences of imprisonment in default of fines should run concurrently was illegal.

Notice has been issued to Ghulam Ahmed but there is no appearance on his behalf. It is pointed out to us by the learned Public Prosecutor that S 35, Criminal P. C., which empowers a Court to direct that imprisonment imposed on a person convicted at one trial of two or more offences should be concurrent, does not refer to sentences of imprisonment in default of payment of fine but must refer only to substantive sentences. This appears to us to be clear from the wording of S 35, Criminal P. C., itself and it has been laid down by this Court as proper interpretation in the case of Emperor v. Akidullah (1), where Pratt, J. C., ruled as follows .

"Again the Magistrate has imposed a fine for each offence and has directed the terms of imprisonment in default of the fines to run concurrently Such an order is not justified by S. 35, Criminal P. C. In case of the part payment of the fine it would be difficult to estimate what portion of which term of imprisonment should terminate under S. 69, I. P C.

Accordingly we direct that the sentences of the Additional City Magistrate, should be amended so as to make it clear that the sentences of imprisonment in default of payment of fines should not run concurrently

Criminal Appeal No. 273 of 1929 and Criminal Revn Appln. No. 32 of 1929, Decided on 25th June 1929

Penal Code, S. 302 — Court can sentence accused person to death merely on circumstantial evidence but such evidence must be incompatible with his innocence and incapable of explanation upon any reasonable hypothesis except that of his guilt.

There is no rule of law or practice to prevent a Court from sentencing an accused person to death merely on circumstantial evidence.

The accused person visited the village in which the murdered person lived and was at the shop of the deceased on the night of the murder, and that night both had slept on cots in front of the shop. In the morning the person was found murdered and the accused had disappeared. At the time the accused had come to the village he was wearing shoes and also possessed a tin box of cigarettes. A pair of shoes and a tin box were found at the shop, and the accused, who was discovered when followed along the foot-prints sitting amongst some crops, was bare footed. When the accused was discovered he was in possession of the property of exactly the same description as the stolen property. Blood-stains were also found on the shirt of the accused.

Held : that circumstantial evidence was incompatible with the innocence and incapable of explanation upon any reasonable hypothesis except that of his guilt and the accused could be sentenced to death : A. I. R. 1926 Bom. 519, Rel. on. [P 182 C 1]

Fakirchand Vij—for Appellant.

C. Lobo—for the Crown.

Judgment—One Karim Baksh alias Mahomed Urs has been convicted of the offence of murder and also of the offence of house-breaking and theft and sentenced to transportation for life under S. 302, I. P. C, and to terms of imprisonment for the offences under Ss. 457 and 380, I P. C. He has appealed from jail and his appeal has been accepted on the question of sentence only. But the Public Prosecutor in Sind has filed an application on behalf of the Crown for enhancement of the sentence under S. 302, and, therefore, Karim Baksh, whom in future I shall call he accused, has been called on to show cause why his sentence should not be enhanced. At the same time a pleader who has been briefed by the Crown on his behalf, has been allowed to criticise the judgment of the Sessions Judge with a view to show that he should be acquitted

The facts out of which this case has arisen are as follows :—

It is in evidence that the accused visited the village of Mir Hassan in Sanghar Taluka in the Thar Parkar District at the end of June 1928. He stopped first in the otak of one Haji Bilawal, and afterwards he became the guest of the deceased, Abdul Aziz, who in partnership with one Abdul Gafur, owned a shop in that village. It is in evidence that on the evening of 28th June Abdul Gafur brought Rs. 40-0 0 to the shop, and in the presence of the accused gave the money to the deceased, Abdul Aziz, who put it in the cash box and locked the shop That nig t the accused and the deceased slept on cots in front of the shop In the morning Abdul Aziz was found lying dead on his cot He had obviously been murdered. The accused had disappeared, but had left behind him, it is said, a pair of shoes and a tin-box in which he had kept some cigarettes. Information was at once sent to the police post at Sanghar. The informant was witness Kalu (Ex. 5) who stated that a 'Nango Fakir' who had been sleeping at the shop, the previous night, had murdered Abdul Aziz, had taken the keys of the shop had opened it, had stolen Rs. 60-0-0 and other goods, and had run away. Whilst Kalu was making his report, some villagers followed the foot-prints which had been left by the runaway until they came to a bridge called "the bridge of Kandiari." From that place no foot-prints could be found ; so they went to the police station at Kandiari and made a report to a police officer, named Mahomed Yakub, who went with them to the Local Zamindar, Mahomed Waris, and made enquiries.

It was learnt that a Fakir had arrived at his village and had gone away again. They searched in the neighbourhood, and found the accused sitting amongst some crops. He was arrested and searched. On his person were found two silver ornaments (a hassi and kathmal) and Rs. 60 0-0 including two currency notes of Rs 10, five currency notes of Rs. 5 each and Rs. 15-0-0 in cash, and a green silk handkerchief It was noticed also, that there were blood stains on his shirt. A mashirnama was made at the time, and it gives details of the property found on the person of the accused and mentions the fact that blood-stains had been seen on the sleeve of the shirt. The accused was arrested and brought to Mir Hassan's village ; and, after the usual foot-print test had been held, he was challaned, with the result, as I have said, that he was convicted by the Additional Sessions Judge, Hyderabad, with the concurrence of all the three assessors, of house-breaking and theft and murder. But in passing sentences, the learned Additional Sessions Judge refused to sentence the accused to death on the ground that there was nothing but circumstantial evidence against him.

The first point for our consideration is whether the evidence against the accused is true. The second is whether if true, it justifies the conviction. And in that connexion, we have to consider whether the offence was of such a nature as to justify the sentence of death. The first part of the evidence is that which was led to prove that the accused went to the village of Mir Hassan and was a guest of the deceased, and on the night of the murder slept beside him This, as has been pointed out by the learned Additional Sessions Judge, appears to have been proved beyond doubt. The accused was seen by many persons in the village, and on the night of the murder was seen at the deceased's shop by the deceased's partner Abdul Gafur and the witnesses Kalu, Haibat and Makhumdin.

It is his defence that he never went to the village at all but that he is an innocent man who had been caught and accused unjustly This, however, seems to be improbable to believe. The witnesses were strangers to him, and it is not conceivable that they have given false evidence in the matter. It is impossible that they could have been mistaken. The theory put forward by the learned pleader for the accused is that some of the villagers may have committed the murder and that the accused may have been made a scape-goat. But it is perfectly obvious that this theory cannot account for the presence of stolen property in the accused's bag when he was found 13 miles away from the scene of the offence, and the blood-stains on his shirt have not been explained I think we are perfectly safe in saying that the accused did visit the village, and was at the shop of the deceased on the night of the murder.

The next part of the evidence is that he disappeared before dawn This is clear from the same evidence. Then there is evidence that his disappearance was not only untimely but hurried, since he left behind him his shoes and the box of cigarettes The learned pleader has contended that neither the shoes nor the box have been clearly identified ; and of course the mere fact that the shoes, which were found beside the cot, fitted the accused would not be evidence that they belonged to him. But the prosecution have not had to rely on proof that they fitted him exactly. What has been proved is that when he came to the village he was wearing shoes, that a pair of shoes was left behind him, when he went away, and that when he was found he was bare footed. The presumption that the shoes found beside the cot on which he had been lying were his appears to be very strong.

The same remarks apply to the box. There is evidence that he had brought with him a tin-box of cigarettes, and after he disappeared a tin-box was found on or near his cot. The presumption is strong that he had left it behind. Thus there is every reason to suppose that his departure was stealthy and hurried. But the strongest evidence against him is that he was found in possession of stolen property. Whilst the tracking party was at Kandiari the Head Constable at Sanghar post visited the scene of the offence, and Abdul Gafur, the deceased's partner, gave him a complete list of the property that was missing. He mentioned a "hassi," a "kathmal," currency notes and cash to the value of Rs 60-0-0 and a green silk handkerchief valued at annas 12 On or about the same time, and quite independently 13 miles away, the Head Constable of Kandiari was searching the accused and he discovered on him property of exactly the same description, that is to say, two notes of Rs. 10, five currency notes of Rs. 5, a silver hassi and kathmal and Rs. 15-0-0 in cash and a green silk handkerchief. It is impossible for us to believe that the property found on the accused was other than the property which had been stolen.

The only criticism of this evidence is that the two silver ornaments found were not such as are capable of actual identification. But even if this be granted it is of no consequence. The learned Public Prosecutor does not rely on the identification of these ornaments, but on the fact that the accused had in his possession exactly the same ornaments and exactly the same amount of money, of the same denominations, as had been stolen. The learned pleader in a lengthy and painstaking analysis of the evidence has discovered some discrepancies, but they are of a minor nature and do not seem to us to be at all relevant to the matter under inquiry. What the accused had to explain was, why he left the village before dawn how he came to have stolen property in his possession and how he came to have blood-stains on his shirt. In the absence of any explanation, we agree with the learned Additional Sessions Judge that he has been rightly convicted.

The last question then is as to whether the evidence is of such a nature as to justify the sentence of death On this point the first argument of the learned pleader was that the application made on behalf of the Crown was out of time But this is clearly an error since the rules of the Court allow six months for an application on behalf of the Crown and the sanction of Government was received by the Public Prosecutor within three months of the date of conviction sentence of death should not be inflicted when there is no direct evidence of eye-witnesses. We are, however, unable to agree to this argument. It is very seldom that murders of the worst type, that is to say cold blooded murders committed for the sake of gain, are witnessed by any one except the murderers. And there is no rule of law or of practice that we know of to prevent a Court from sentencing an accused person to death merely on circumstantial evidence. The rule which has been enunciated in the case of Shivabhai v. Emperor (1) at p. 691, (of 50 Bom.), is merely this that, before a man can be convicted of a murder, the circumstantial evidence must be incompatible with his innocence and incapable of explanation upon any reasonable hypothesis except that of his guilt A fortiori, before a man can be sentenced to death, the evidence must be incompatible with any hypothesis except that of his guilt In this case, it seems to us that there is no possible hypothesis except that of guilt. The witnesses had no reason for levelling a false accusation against the accused, and it appears to us to be as nearly certain as is possible in human affairs that he is guilty. And, as I have said, it is almost impossible to imagine that the witnesses can have had any reason for making a false accusation against him and they can have had no opportunity for concocting false evidence.

For these reasons, we are of opinion that the application made by the learned Public Prosecutor on behalf of the Crown must be allowed Accordingly, in the place of the sentence of transportation for life we sentence the accused Karim Baksh alias Mahomed Urs to be hanged by the neck until he is dead. It only remains to add with respect to sentences under Ss. 457 and 380 and 302 that we do not think that the fines should have been imposed. We set aside so much of those sentences as are concerned with the payment of fines.

First Appeal No. 48 of 1926, Decided on 9th May 1929.

(a) Contract Act, S. 253 (1)— Properties purchased in firm's name—Purchase money paid out of partnership assets — Buildings built with great cost—Property purchased is partnership property.

The fact that properties were purchased in the name of a firm, the purchase money being paid out of the partnership assets and considerable amounts were spent on constructing buildings thereon, is a strong indication that the properties were purchased and treated as partnership properties 25 Mad. 149, Foll. and Bank of England Case, 130 R. R. 276, Ref. [P 186 C 1]

(b) Evidence Act, S. 103—Title of deceased disputed—Property shown to be of partnership—Onus lies on persons claiming through deceased person.

Where the title of a deceased person to certain properties is disputed and it is shown that those properties belonged to the partnership firm, the onus lies on persons claiming through the deceased person to prove that those properties belonged to him at the time of his death.

(c) Mahomedan Law— Suit for partition by some heirs of deceased partner — Property shown to be partnership property and treated as such for a long period by the partnership—Suit for partition of property is incompetent —Suit for settlement of partnership accounts is barred by Limitation Act, Art. 106.

S and H, both mahomedan ladies, instituted a suit in 1924 for partition and possession of their share in certain immovable properties which E husband of S and father of H, was said to have died possessed of. The suit properties were included in a partnership business. E died in 1898. From that time the properties remained under the management of those who directed the partnership business. The rents realized therefrom were entered in the firm's rokar; the bills of rent were issued and suits for its recovery were filed in the name of the firm and in respect of each immovable property a separate khata was maintained treating each item as an asset of the firm. This continued upto 1917 when G the son of E also died.

Held: that the suit for partition of property which is partnership property of E is incompetent as framed. [P 190 C 1]

Held further: that even the suit for settlement of accounts of the partnership, dissolved by the death of E and subsequently by the death of G, is statute barred. [P 190 C 1]

cated—Balance of convenience is in favour of attaching mortgagee or creditor for not granting injunction — Notice of pending litigation to intending purchasers should be insisted on the creditor.

A person who seeks the aid of the Court by way of interlocutory injunction must as a rule be able to satisfy the Court (1) that there is a serious question to be tried at the hearing and that on the facts before it there is a probability that he will be entitled to relief, (2) that the Court's interference is necessary to protect such person from that species of injury which the Court calls irreparable before his legal right can be established upon trial, and (3) that the comparative mischief or the inconvenience which is likely to issue from withholding the injunction will be greater than that which is likely to arise by granting it. [P 190 C 2]

Thus when a mortgagee or attaching creditor is proceeding to sell the right, title and interest of his debtor, the balance of convenience is in favour of the creditor, that no injunction should issue in such cases, and all that the Court might do ex majeure cautila is to require the creditor to give an undertaking that at the time of the sale, whether it be through Court or otherwise, the intending purchasers should be informed of the pendency of the suit. Rupchand, A J. C. — This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by Sakinabai and Hoosainbai respondents 6 and 7 for partition and possession of their share in certain immovable properties which one Essaji husband of respondent 6 and father of respondent 7 was said to have died possessed of. Paras. 3 and 4 of the plaint read as follows:

"3. That the deceased left several heirs entitled to his property according to Mahomedan Law. A full pedigree of the descendants of the deceased is hereto attached and marked B. The plaintiffs and defendants 1 to 18 are all the heirs of the deceased living at present.

"4. That the plaintiffs are entitled to a share in the property left by the deceased Essaji according to their shares under Mahomedan Law, and their shares according to Mahomedan Law in the property of the deceased will be 124 shares out of 432 shares i.e., a little over one fourth."

They further claimed that their share in the said properties be alloted to them free of the mortgage and other charges created thereon by some of the heirs of the said Essaji and impleaded the transferees as defendants 19 to 26

Defendant 1 was ex parte. Defendants 2 to 18 supported the plaintiffs' case except, that they disputed that the plaintiffs were entitled to the share claimed by them and averred that five out of the fourteen properties in suit had been been acquired after the death of Essaji by the sons of Essaji :

"for and on behalf of all the heirs and held the same in trust for other heirs to the extent of other owners' interest."

Exhibit 40 gives the list of the first batch of nine properties and Ex. 41 gives the second batch of five propertias acquired before and after Essaji's death respectively.

The chief contesting defendants were defendants 19 to 26. Their case, inter alia, was that the properties in suit which existed during the lifetime of Essaji were partnership properties of the firm of Ismailji Karimji and Co., and after the dissolution of that firm they were possessed by the firm of Essaji Ismailji and Co., which consisted of Essaji and his sons on the one hand, and Abdul Hussain and his sons on the other, that on the death of Essaji which took place in 1898 these properties continued to be the partnership properties of Essaji's sons and Abdul Hussain and his sons, that on Abdul Hussain and his sons withdrawing from the firm of Essaji Ismailji and Co, these properties became partnership properties of that firm as then constituted, that the claim of the plaintiffs was barred by limitation under Art. 106, Lim. Act, and that in any case the plaintiffs had lost their right by adverse possession under Arts. 142 and 144, Lim. Act, that the plaintiffs had no claim to the properties subsequently acquired by Essaji's sons which were also partnership properties, that they were estopped by their conduct from claiming a share in any of the properties and that they were even otherwise bound by the alienations made in favour of the defendants 19 to 26. They further pleaded that the suit was badly framed.

After the institution of the suit, the plaintiffs gave up defendants 19 who were mortgagees of two of the nine properties said to have been acquired before Essaji's death, and the suit as against them was dismissed. The defendants were, however, brought on the record again at the instance of defendants 2 to 18.

The learned trial Judge gave effect to some of the pleas raised by the transferees and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit.

The plaintiffs have not appealed, but the heirs of Gulam Hussain, one of the sons of Essaji, have come to us in appeal and have challenged the findings of the lower Court not only in respect of the cause of action as set up by the plaintiffs but also on other grounds which will presently appear.

The following is the tabular statement (For tabular statement please see p. 185) showing how the plaintiffs and defendants 2 to 18 are related to one another and the approximate time when some of the persons mentioned therein are said to have died. It gives the pedigree from the grandfather of Essaji as it is necessary for the purposes of explaining the alleged devolution of the first batch of properties. Ex. 40. This suit was filed in 1924, about twenty six years after the death of Essaji and it is hardly disputable that it was instituted by defendant 1 at a time when he was hopelessly involved with the object of preventing the sale of the properties in suit for as long a period as possible That object appears to have been attained as in consequence of the injunctions issued by the Court, the sales have been stopped. It is equally clear that the chief contesting defendants being strangers to the family are at a considerable disadvantage and have to rely in support of their case on the documentary evidence and on certain admission forced out from defendant 1, who has made every endeavour to save the property from the transferees.

It will not be out of place to refer at the outset to the history of the family and the mode in which the male members of the family carried on their business before suit

Nothing appears to be known of what Karimji did or in what name the business was carried on by him in the beginning except that we have an entry in the revenue records in respect of one property being item No. 6 in Ex. 40 in the name of Moosaji Karimji and thereafter in the name of Karimji Moosaji. But it is proved beyond doubt that for a number of years prior to 1892 his sons Ismailji, Jafferji and Alibhoy carried on business as partners in the names of Ismailji Karimji and that in this business they were helped by their own sons. On the death of Ismailji in 1887, his sons Essaji and Abdul Hussain took his place and received one-third share in the business.

Ismailji had left two daughters who appear to have taken no proceedings to claim a share in the estate of Ismailji whatever its nature was.

In 1892 the firm of Ismailji Karimji & Co., was dissolved. Essaji and Abdul Hussain commenced to do business in the name of Essaji Ismailji & Co. In this business each brother was helped by his sons Likewise Jafferji's sons and Alibhoy and his sons did business on their own account. At the time of the dissolution of the firm of Ismailji & Co., in 1892 certain properties numbering sixteen and certain cash was alloted to Essaji and Abdul Hussain. The daughters of Essaji were not parties to this division and do not appear to have been consulted in any way

In 1904 Abdul Hussain withdrew from the firm of Essaji Ismailji & Co, and started his own business, when ten out 16 immovable properties and Rs. 49,000 cash were allotted to the sons of Essaji. At that time again none of the female members of the family of Essaji appear to have been consulted at all.

The firm of Essaji Ismailji & Co., carried on business up to 1914. Ghulam Hussain died in 1917 and his place appears to have been taken up by his adult son Adamali. Mahomedalli died in 1921 leaving no male issue. Adamali died in 1923, and at the date of suit Tayaballi defendant 1 was the only adult representative of this firm.

Karimji's family is a Borah family, and it is now settled that Borahs of Karachi are governed by Mahomedan Law. Prior to the case of Sakinabai v. Ghulam Hussain which was referred to the Borah Pir and whose answer came up for consideration before this Court in Ghulam Hussain v. Sakina Bai (1), it was a debatable question whether the Borahs of Karachi like the Girasia Borahs had not continued to follow Hindu customs since their conversion to the Mahomedan faith, and were governed by the Hindu Law. No special custom has been pleaded in this case, and therefore no question arises that the Hindu Law of inheritance and succession is applicable to the heirs of Essaji. But in order to grasp fully the nature of the evidence in this case and the position taken up by the female members of the family of Essaji it will not be out of place to refer to the evidence of Yusufali Alibhoy, the oldest living descendant of Karimji, as to the mode in which the different male descendants of Karimji have been carrying on their business and dealing with their property. He states:

"In 1896 Ismailji's sons did their own business and so Jafferji's sons. Before this, sons of Jafferji, sons of Ismailji and my father were carrying on business in the name of Ismailji Karimji & Co. At the time of the partition the properties became the properties of the sons alone and not of the family. When the sons of Jafferji, the sons of Ismailji and Alibhoy commenced to carry on the business in the name of Ismailji Karimji & Co., the rents ofall the immovable properties that belonged to the three branches were credited to the joint account of the firm till 1896. When in 1896 there was a separation between the aforesaid three branches, each branch was allotted separate possession of the immovable properties as they stood at the time of the previous partition. The properties that came to my branch were regarded as belonging to the brothers alone and not to the family. Ever since 1896 our firm carries on business in the name of Yusufali Alibhoy Karimji & Co. The properties that fell to our lot are the properties of the firm. Only the brothers are interested in the firm. According to the custom prevailing amongst us none of the ladies or the children of the house have any interest either in the firm or the properties that fell to our share on partition. But according to the religion they may claim interest if they like."

One of the main questions at issue is whether the properties in Exs 40 and 41 were acquired and possessed by the sons of Essaji as properties belonging to the firm of Essaji Ismailji & Co, consisting of his three sons to the exclusion of the female heirs of Essaji.

So far as properties referred to in Ex 41 are concerned the case is simple We have the account books of the firm of Essaji Ismailji Karimji & Co., from 1904 showing that all these properties were acquired after that date. We have the relevant documents showing how those properties were acquired and the admissions of Tayaballi as to the mode in which they were dealt with. There is a separate khata in the books of the firm in respect of each property. Ex. 41 has been prepared by defendant 1 from the account books. It shows approximately the amount spent on each property and the rents realized therefrom from the date of its acquisition up to the date of the suit. (The judgment then summarized the same and proceeded.) The cost of these properties is Rs. 3,50,000 exclusive of interest and the income that has accrued therefrom is Rs 1,40,000 A good part of it has been paid as taxes and land rent which appears not to have been brought into the account.

All the money spent on these properties has come out of the coffers of the firm of Essaji Ismailji & Co, none of the brothers having contributed anything from their private resources or by any other heir of Essaji (The judgment then discussed the relative documents executed about the time of each of these properties except property No. 1 and proceeded) It has been argued that the fact that the properties were purchased in the name of the firm is not sufficient to warrant the presumption that they were partnership properties. It has been suggested that the business of the firm was that of commission agency and that there was no occasion for the firm to deal in properties. In the end it was said that so far as plots 81 and 82 are concerned, there is no presumption that they were purchased as partnership properties. No. 1 having been purchased in the name of all the three brothers as individuals and plot 82 having been purchased in the name of Tayabali alone

A number of rulings have been cited at the Bar on this point, but it will be sufficient to refer to only two of them. In the Bank of England case (2) which is the leading case on the point, it was held that there is no rule that where lands are bought by partners in trade and are paid for out of the partnership assets, they of necessity become part of the joint estate; nor on the other hand, that if they are not bought for the purposes of the partnership business, they are not joint estate; nor does the form of conveyance settle the question, which must be determined with reference to all the circumstances of the case. In that case one of the two partners carrying on business of leather factory bought lands for the purpose of erecting a residence on part of it and selling the remainder to a railway company. He offered a share to his partner who was also desirous of building a house out of town for his own residence. The offer was accepted and the purchase money paid out of the partnership assets, but the conveyance was to the partners in separate moieties The partners at their individual expenses built houses upon portions of the land set apart for the purpose, but the other expenses relating to the land were paid out of the partnership assets It was held on consideration of all the facts of the case that the whole of the land was joint estate.

In dealing with the effect of the partners having constructed the buildings at their own expenses, Turner, L. J. said: at p 284:

"It cannot, I think, be laid down as a universal rule that where lands are bought by partners in trade, and are paid out of partnership assets, they of necessity become part of the joint estate of the partners. There are different purposes for which the lands may have been bought. They may have been bought for the purpose of being used and employed in the trade . . . . . or they may have been bought not for the purpose of being used and employed in the trade, but for the purpose of a mere speculation on account of the partnership, for I know of nothing which can prevent partners from speculating in land . . . . . Again they may have bought without reference to the purpose of the trade or the benefit of the partnership with the intention of withdrawing from the trade the amount employed in the purchase, and converting that amount into separate property of the partners or they may have been bought on account of one or more partners he or they becoming debtors to the partnership for the amount laid out in the purchase. The form of conveyance in these cases does not settle the question, for in whatever form the conveyance may be, that may be a trust of the land which may follow the money liable however as other trusts of the like nature are to be rebutted by evidence . . . . . and we have to consider whether the circumstances attending the purchase show that it was made on account of the partners individually, or of any one or more of them in whose name the land may have been bought."

And, Knight Bruce, L J. said:

"Whatever they or either of them may have contemplated doing, there was I think no agreement between them as to any mode of alloting, appropriating or disposing of both or either of the two villas or dwelling houses, or dealing with either of them ; and I repeat that subject to the possibility (not now material) that with respect to the expenditure of each, there might have been an accounting between them, the whole estate remained partnership property at the time of the bankruptcy."

(2) 130 R. R. 276.

In Sudarsanam Maistri v. Narasimhulu Maistri (3) while dealing with the question of Limitation, Bhashyam Ayyangar said :

"It was further contended by the learned Advocate-General that the three years' period of limitation prescribed by Art. 106 would be inapplicable to houses and lands purchased by the first defendant from the profits of the partnership. This contention would certainly hold good if it had been alleged and proved that, from time to time, portions of the assets of the partnership were, by the agreement of the partners, withdrawn from the partnership and converted into land or house to be owned by the partners as co-owners (Lindley on 'Partnership' 5th Edn. pp. 334 and 335.)"

"In the absence, therefore, of any such allegation and proof, lands and houses bought in the name of one partner and paid for by the firm or from the profits of the partnership business are prima facie partnership property. Nerot v. Burnand (4), Wedderburn v Wedderburn (5)"

"The case is therefore governed by the ordinary rule that, unless a contrary intention appears by express agreement or by the nature of the transaction, property bought with money belonging to the firm, is deemed to have been bought on account of the firm Bank of England Case (6)

The facts of the present case viewed in the light of these two rulings are so strong that there can be no two opinions on the point that these five properties were purchased and treated as partnership properties. Not only was all the purchase money paid out of the partnership assets, but considerable amounts were subsequently spent on constructing buildings thereon. No debit appears to have been made in the books against any individual partner of the share of the cost of any of the five properties. Tayabali has admitted in his evidence that the bills of rent of all the immovable properties including those in Ex. 40 to which I shall presently refer were issued in the firm's name, and suits for recovery of rents were filed in the firm's name.

Tayabali has also admitted that all moneys were drawn from the firm for purchase of the properties in Ex. 41 as also certain other properties which were subsequently sold and that the sale proceeds of these properties were credited to the firm : (LI 490-500) On the top of it Tayabali has admitted that his firm bought and sold certain other properties by way of speculation. These admissions are sufficient to warrant an inference that besides doing commission agency the partnership dealt in purchase and sale of lands and that the properties in Ex. 41 were purchased and owned by the partnership as partnership properties. The fact that the plots 81 and 82 were not purchased in the firm's name are easily explained, and the form of the transfer in the names of all partners in respect of plot 81 and in the name of one of them in the case of plot 82 is of no material consequence whatsoever.

The case of the remaining nine properties referred to in Ex. 40 is more complicated. The books prior to 1904 are not forthcoming It is said on behalf of the plaintiffs that these books were with Abdul Hussain, who is dead, and his son who is now living is a minor and does not know what has become of the books. This may or may not be true. The fact remains that the evidence of the entries therein is not available. We are therefore left to base our conclusions on the conduct of the parties and the different documents relating to the purchase of these lands, such of them as are available and the proceedings taken from time to time to have mutation of names effected. (The judgment then gave the history and description of the nine properties possessed by the family before Essaji's death and proceeded.) Now at the division of 1892 between the three branches of Karimji's family these plots appear to have been dealt with as partnership property. Ismilji's sons had been working as partners of the firm before and after their father's death which took place in 1887. Jafferji's sons had done the same. Allibhoy was alive. His sons had likewise worked with him in the business. Sixteen properties were alloted to Ismailji's sons as their share.

There was a confusion in the mind of Yusifali as of the time when the three branches commenced to trade separately, and in one part of his evidence he has said that it was in 1892, and in another part in 1896. But that is immaterial. Whether the division took place in 1892 or 1896, he has stated clearly that the rents of all the properties of the three branches were credited into the joint account of the firm of Ismailji Karimji upto the time of this division, and so far as his branch was concerned, the properties which fell to their lot belonged to his firm. The same may fairly be presumed to have been the case with the other branches.

During the continuance of the old firm each adult male member of each branch had worked as a partner, and had contributed towards the acquisition of the properties in whatsoever name they may have been purchased. Some of the properties were acquired in the name of the old firm, others in the names of senior members and again others in the names of junior members of each branch. But all were put in the hotchpot and the rents accruing therefrom treated as assets of the firm. There is no allegation, much less proof, that Ismailji or Abdul Hussain or Alibhoy bought the properties which stood in their respective names on their own behalf. We have the further fact that none of the females of any branch were consulted at the division or acquired any share at the division of 1892 or that any of them has up to this day claimed a share in any of the properties on the ground that such properties were treated as co-ownership property. On the top of it we have a clear admission in Tayabali's evidence that the sixteen properties which came to the share of Essaji and Abdul Hussain were acquired out of the family business of Ismailji Karimji (L 600). These sixteen properties were thus indubitably partnership properties of the old firm of Ismailji Karimji or Ismailji Karimji & Co. and continued in the possession of the firm of Ismailji Karimji or Ismailji Karimji & Co. as such even after the branches of Jafferji and Allibhoy had withdrawn from it.

In this connexion a good deal was said about the names in which the business was carried on both prior and subsequent to 1892. It was said that the name of this firm was Ismailji Karimji & Co. and not Ismailji Karimji. But it is clear from the evidence that both names appear to have been used indiscriminately and that whether the name of Ismailji Karimji or of Ismailji Karimji & Co. was used in connexion with any business it referred to one and the same firm, and not to the individual Ismailji.

Another point on which stress was laid was that as some of the leases and entries in the revenue registers described Ismailji Karimji as a Borah, they referred to Ismailji alone and not to his firm. But that argument loses much of its force when we have it (a) that the entries in respect of plots leased in the name of Messrs Ismailj Karimji & Co, described the firm as a Borah and an individual person residing in Karachi in the same way as the entries in respect of Ismailji (b) that the leases were renewed in the name of Ismailji Karimji long after he had died.

Now it is not seriously disputed that the firm of Ismailji Karimji or Ismailji Karimji & Co. continued to do business upto 1904 when Abdul Hussain withdrew from that firm and its name was changed to that of Essaji Ismailji or Essaji Ismailji & Co.

If these sixteen properties were partnership properties at the death of Essaji, the right of the plaintiffs, if any, was by a suit for settlement of account of the partnership dissolved by the death of Essaji and such portion of the assets including immovable property being decreed in their favour as fell to their share : Sudarsanam Maistri v. Narasimhulu Maistri (3) Mohideen Bee v. Syed Meer Saheb (7) Gopal Chetty v. Vijayaraghavachariar (8) and Venkataratnam v. Siram Subba Rao (9).

Under Art. 106, Lim Act, the plaintiffs' cause of action for settlement of accounts of that partnership was statute-barred in 1901 and could be revived in 1924 by the devise of treating it as a suit for partition of immovable properties left by the deceased.

As the title of Essaji to these properties was disputed the onus lay on the plaintiffs to prove that they belonged to him at the time of his death.

It appears that in the earlier stages of the trial, the plaintiffs were not fully alive to this serious defect in their claim and in the evidence of the plaintiffs which was recorded on commission no attempt was made to set up a partition between Essaji and Abdul Hussain before Essaji's death. This attempt was for the first time made in the evidence of Tayabali by setting up a partition between the two brothers in 1896 But he was forced to admit that he had no evidence to prove the alleged partition except his own statement (line 475). The account books prior to 1904 would have thrown a flood of light on this point. But these books were not produced It is true that Abdul Hussain was dead and so were his adult sons who had at one time taken part in the business. But there is nothing to show that these books have been destroyed or that they could not be secured notwithstanding an attempt made to secure them. On the contrary, we have a clear admission from Tayabali that he had made no endeavour to secure them Apart from the fact that the burden of proving the alleged partition was on the plaintiffs and defendants 1 to 18, and that in the absence of cogent evidence they must fail, a fair amount of presumption arises against them in consequence of the non-production of the books The case does not, however, rest here. We have documentary evidence to show that there was only one division of property between Abdul Hussain on the one hand and Essaji's sons on the other and that this was in 1904 This appears from the mutation application filed by the parties in 1917 in respect of properties 1 to 3 and the correspondence carried on with the municipality in respect thereof.

(7) [1916] 38 Mad. 1099=32 I. C. 1004.

Notwithstanding the dissolution of partnership between Essaji's sons and Abdul Hussain and his sons in 1904, mutation of names of several of the properties allotted to Essaji's branch was not effected and that an attempt was made in that behalf in 1917, long after the Transfer of Property Act was extended to Sind.

On 8th February 1917, a number of applications were made to the municipality for effecting mutation of names in favour of Essaji's sons. (The judgment then discussed the nature of the various applications and proceeded.) From 1904 up to the date of suit properties in Ex. 40 were dealt with in the same way as properties in Ex. 41. Both sets of properties remained under the management of those who directed the business of Essaji Ismailji & Co, the rents realized therefrom were given to the cashier of their firm who entered them in the firm's rokar and kept them along with the other monies of the firm (Tayabali 11. 400 to 410). The bills of rent were issued and suits for its recovery were filed in the name of the firm (Tayabali 1 495).

The fact that the rents were not credited to the watau khata (profit and loss account) is easily explained. Since Essaji's death, there had been no potamel and no distribution of profits (Tayabali 1. 418). This statement finds ample support in Ex 45 the entry of Rs 49,299 3-3 cash which is said to have fallen to the lot of Essaji's sons at the division of 1904. It reads thus :

| Cr. | Dr. |
| | Rs. 49,299 3 3 balance due to you carried forward to new khatavani, p. 21. |

Abdul Hussain withdrew from the firm on getting certain properties and cash as his share in the assets without any potamel having been drawn up (Tayabali 1. 600) and what remained of the cash was credited to the old books and debited to the new books As in respect of cash, so in respect of each immovable property a separate khata was maintained treating each item as an asset of the firm The same state of affairs continued notwithstanding the death of Ghulam Hussain, Adamali and Mahomedali : (Tayabali 11.605 to 610). On the top of it we have clear proof that in 1917 the parties dealt with these properties as partnership properties. Applications for mutation of names Exs. 55 to 57 and Ex 82 relating to properties 1 and 3, and 6, 7 and 8 respectively are all attested by Yusifali Alibhoy and his brother Tayabali Alibhoy The former applications contain a prayer of relinquishment by the ladies and the latter applications ask for a direct transfer from the name of Abdul Hussain to Essaji's sons. Now it cannot be contended, even for a moment, that both Yusifali and Tayabali who were so closely connected with the ladies were parties to a fraud being perpetrated on them or that they did not inform the ladies of what was being done. It has been suggested that ladies of the family were in strict purdah and that their signatures were taken from them without informing them what was being done. This is hardly likely. Some of the ladies were married and their husbands were not in purdah. Four married women whose husbands were alive had signed the application and it is difficult to believe that none of them did so without advice of the husbands or that they were duped by the sons of Essaji and by the two attesting witnesses who were the paternal cousins of their father.

For these reasons and for the reasons given by the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner in his able and careful judgment, we hold that the suit for partition of property which was partnership property of the deceased Essaji and others was incompetent as framed and that if the suit be treated as one for settlement of accounts of the partnership which was dissolved by the death of Essaji and the subsequent partnership which was dissolved by the death of Ghulam Hussain in 1917 would be statute barred.

It has been argued that the plaintiffs had claimed a share not only as the heirs of Essaji but also as the heirs of Ghulam Hussain and that the Court should therefore go into the further question as to the settlement of accounts of the partnership between the heirs of Ghulam Hussain and his partners. In this connexion it was further urged that even if the claim of the plaintiffs be barred by limitation, the claim of the appellants, some of whom are not minors, is competent.

We are afraid we cannot permit the suit for partition of property left by Essaji to be converted into a suit for settlement of accounts of the partnership between Ghulam Hussain and his brothers

The appeals therefore fail in limine, and it is hardly necessary for us to consider any further questions.

Before we part with the case, we wish to refer to the serious prejudice which has been caused to some of the mortgagees particularly defendants 19 by the issue of injunction preventing them from realizing their security.

It has been brought to our notice that such injunctions are too frequently issued notwithstanding the decisions of this Court to the contrary.

Now the effect and object of an interlocutory injunction is merely to keep matters in status quo until the hearing or further orders and the principles on which an injunction will issue are well settled. A person who seeks the aid of the Court by way of interlocutory injunction must as a rule be able to satisfy the Court (a) that there is a serious question to be tried at the hearing and that on the facts before it there is a probability that he will be entitled to relief, (b) that the Court's interference is necessary to protect such person from that species of injury which the Court calls irreparable before his legal right can be established upon trial, and (c) that the comparative mischief or the inconvenience which is likely to arise from withholding the injunction will be greater than that which is likely to arise by granting it

If these principles are applied to the present case, what do we find? It is no doubt true that the legal right of the plaintiffs to a share in certain immovable properties was being disputed and that as will presently appear except as against some of the defendants, the plaintiffs had a prima facie claim for trial but that was not enough No injunction was necessary for the protection of their right if any which might have been established at the trial. The mortgagees could only bring to sale the right, title and interest of their mortgagors in the properties and nothing more. If the mortgagors had been permitted to realize their securities pending the trial, no irreparable injury would have been caused to the plaintiffs and defendants 2 to 18. Not only that but no injury whatsoever would have resulted to them. The mortgagees were parties to the suit and the doctrine of lis pendens enunciated in S. 52, T P. Act applied and any purchasers from them, whether such purchasers were brought on the record or not, would have been bound by the result of the litigation.

On the other hand, the injury caused to the mortgagees by the issue of an injunction in this case and in almost every other case of a like nature, is irreparable. The mortgagees have been prevented from getting back their money or at least such part of it as they could have realized by the sale of the right, title and interest of the mortgagors, when they wanted it most; their interest has mounted up and their securities have gone down in value considerably. All this loss falls on their shoulders for no fault of theirs and they have no redress against the persons at whose instance the injunctions were issued. Lastly the probabilities of success against some of mortgagees were practically nil and the case of each mortgagee should have been considered separately. Some of the mortgages were in respect of properties acquired subsequent to the death of Essaji, and with regard to them, the plaintiffs had on the pleadings not even a prima facie case to go to trial The mortgage in favour of defendants 19 stood even on a firmer footing.

The plaintiffs had relinquished their claim against the defendants and the suit as against them had been dismissed, and the injunction issued against them discharged It is extremely doubtful if they could be brought on the record again at the instance of some of the defendants who were acting in collusion with the plaintiffs. The proper remedy of these defendants was by a separate suit. Be that as it may, these defendants relied upon the sanads deposited with them in support of their claim. Both these sanads showed in unmistakeable terms that the plaintiffs had relinquished their interest, if any, in the properties in suit, Prima facie, therefore, the probability of their success against defendants 19 was far too remote especially in view of the provisions of S. 41, T P. Act. That was another serious obstacle in the way of the issue of a temporary injunction. In similar cases this Court both on the original and appellate side has refused to grant injunctions It has been repeatedly pointed out that where a mortgagee or an attaching creditor is proceeding to sell the right, title and interest of his debtor, the balance of convenience is in favour of the creditor, that no injunction should issue in such cases, and all that the Court might do ex majeure cautila is to require the creditor to give an undertaking that at the time of the sale, whether it be through Court or otherwise, the intending purchasers should be informed of the pendency of the suit.

The loss caused to some of the mortgagees in the present case is to be regretted, and all that need be said is that applications for injunctions of a like nature will in future be discouraged and that the Courts below will not lightly issue injunctions in suits of this nature We have no hesitation in dismissing this appeal and in discharging the injunctions. The appellants will bear the costs of defendants 19 to 26 and the other defendants will bear their own costs of the appeal.

On the question of pleader's fees to be taxed in this case, we will hear the parties further on Monday next.

Percival, J. C.—I entirely agree.

I wish to add a few words only to make it clear that I thoroughly endorse the remarks of the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner on the question of injunctions. I agree with his conclusion that > "all that the Court might do ex majeure cautela is to require the creditor to give an undertaking that at the time of the sale, whether it be through Court of otherwise the intending purchasers should be informed of the pendency of the suit."

No doubt it may be said that it is easy to be wise after the event, and that the learned Judge, the late Mr. Raymond, could not tell that the hearing of the suit and appeal would be so protracted, and that the value of land would continue to fall in Karachi. But now that we have had the experienec of this case, and of other cases brought by banks in Karachi, it is only right that we should express our opinion that experience shows that > "the comparative mischief or the inconvenience which is likely to arise from withholding that injunction will be less than that which is likely to arise by granting it."

Experience shows that when important banks and other respectable creditors of the same character try to bring mortgaged property to sale, the debtor puts up one relation after another, first a widow, then a minor, and so forth, to file suits against them; and the result of these suits is that, even if they are entirely without justification, still an injunction is liable to be granted, and the creditor is kept out of his dues for four or five years, by which time the value of the land has not improbably gone down, and the creditor has lost heavily for no fault of his own.

The record shows that in this particular case the late Mr Raymond granted an injunction with great hesitation; and if a Judge's hands are strengthened by Bench rulings on this point he will be less inclined to grant such injunctions.

Mr. Raymond observed in his order of 30th January 1925

"Had it been brought to my knowledge, or had there been a statement either in the application or in the affidavit that accompanied it, that Cox and Co. were not parties to the suit in which the application was made, I certainly would not have granted interim injunction."

Again in his order of 18th May 1925 he said :

"The only order that I can pass on this application, and I certainly do so much to my regret, is that Messrs. Cox and Co. be restrained until the disposal of the suit from selling the properties mortgaged with them."

When this case came on appeal, again injunction against the sale of the properties was granted ; but the Nazir of this Court was appointed receiver to manage the properties. Even this arrangement, however, has proved far from satisfactory. It has given a large amount of work to the Nazir, and to this Court also in the matter of interlocutory applications, and the value of the land has continued to decrease.

Speaking for myself I am satisfied, from the experience of this and other cases, in which Karachi banks and other substantial creditors have been concerned, that though on the face of it the refusal to grant an injunction may appear to be a hardship to the debtor, still it is in reality the course that is most conductive to commercial morality and to the interests of the litigating public as a whole.

Suit No. 365 of 1926, Decided on 14th May 1929.

(a) Civil P C., O 30, R 6—Suit against firm—Summons on a person as partner—Defence in partner's name but contained nothing individual—There is technical flaw which can be corrected by Court even at argument stage.

In a suit against a firm summons was served on a person as partner in the firm. The partner though he was not served in the individual capacity filed a written statement in his own name and not as representative of the firm. There was nothing individual in the defence.

Held : that there was only a technical flaw which could be corrected by the Court even at the argument stage. [P193 C 1,2]

 (b) Civil P. C , O. 30, R. 9—When all members of one firm are also members of another, suit cannot be brought by one against other for account or for balance due—Proper remedy is suit for partnership account of other firm.

Though a suit will lie when one or more of the partners of a firm are members of another firm, and perhaps some suit will lie when all the members of the former are members of the latter, a suit for an account or for the balance found due on an account cannot be brought in the latter circumstances, as the proper remedy is a suit for a partnership account of the second firm . *A. Judgment.—This is a suit filed by the firm of Pokhardas Gabrani and Sons of Karachi against the firm of Sewaram Girdharilal of Tank, in the Dera Ismail Khan district by their manager to recover Rs. 6,140-10 6 alleged to be due for wines and other goods supplied to the defendant firm and for Rs. 853-5 6 claimed as interest at 6 per cent, or in the alternative as damages. Process was issued under O. 30, R. 3 (b) in the name of the manager in charge, and was served at the defendant-firm's place of business on one Putamchand. A defence was, however, filed by Sewaram who pleaded,

(1) That the suit was not maintainable as framed because all the persons who constituted the plaintiffs' firm were members of the defendant firm.

(2) that during the period in suit the defendant firm had been managed by one or other of the partners of the plaintiff firm and that they had acted with gross negligence and 1 or in bad faith.

(3) that interest at 12 per cent had been charged and,

(4) that the usual mercantile credit had not been allowed, and in consequence the claim in respect of interest was excessive.

On these pleadings the following issues were framed :

1. Whether all or any of the persons constituting the plaintiffs firm were and are also partners in the defendants firm of Sheoram Girdharilal ? If so, what is the result ?

2 Were any entries made in the defendants' books by any of the partners of the plaintiff firm with gross negligence and 1 or in bad faith ? If so, is the defendant Sheoram not bound by the entries so made, can the defendant Sheoram raise such a plea ?

3 Did the plaintiffs supply to the defendants goods shown in the account in suit.

4. Are defendants not liable for items 1 to 6 referred to in the statement of objections to the account ?

5. What amount, if any, is due to the plaintiffs on the said account ?

6. To what interest, if any, are plaintiffs entitled ?

7. Whether plaintiffs are liable for any loss as alleged in para. 6 of the written statement ? If so, can the defendants raise the plea in this suit ?

8. If so, for what amount are plaintiffs liable and can the defendant get credit therefor in this suit ?

9. On the accounts in suit what amount if any, will be due to the plaintiffs from the defendants ?

10. General.

| Issue 2 | No. |
| Issue 3—5 | Unnecessary. |
| Issue 6 | 6 per cent. |
| Issue 7 | No custom proved. |
| Issue 8—9 | Unnecessary. |

At the hearing the defendant filed some documentary evidence but no witnesses were examined by either party Before coming to the issues framed on the pleadings I must first deal with a point of law which has been raised by the plaintiffs' learned pleader in his opening address. His contention is that inasmuch as the suit is one against a firm, and none of the partners has been served with summons in his individual capacity, it was not open to the defendant Sheoram to file a defence except one on behalf of the firm. The learned pleader contends, therefore, that Sewaram's written statement, which he filed in his own name and not as representative of the firm, cannot be looked at and the suit must be treated as undefended. I do not think that his ingenious argument is sound. Sewaram was entitled to appear, and indeed was bound to appear, individually in his own name, and the only flaw in the procedure is that the subsequent proceedings ought to have been in the name of the firm. This flaw can, however, be corrected even at this stage, and as it was only technical since there is nothing personal in the defence put forward I may with safety ignore it. There is no prejudice to the plaintiff on this, for Sewaram came forward at the proper time and I am not introducing a new partner.

Issue 1 embodies the principal matter in dispute. It contains fact and law and I shall deal with the facts first. The plaintiffs' firm consists of a father and 5 sons and their learned pleader describes it as a joint family firm. It is admitted that one of the sons, Girdharilal, is a partner in the defendants' firm and there is evidence that another Khanchand was concerned in it. The question of fact in dispute is whether he was a partner, and whether his father and brothers also were partners. There is no oral evidence and I have to decide it from certain documents which have been admitted. Ex. No 8 is a hundi accepted by Khanchand on behalf of the firm Sewaram Girdharilal. Ex. No. 5 is a demand bill of exchange drawn by the same man at Lahore on Sewaram Girdharilal, in favour of the Frontier Bank. These show that he was at least a manager, and probably a partner. Ex. 12 is produced to show that the plaintiff firm in the printed heading to their office note paper stated that they had a branch at Tank, and Ex. 13 to shew that the head office of Sewaram Girdharilal was at Tank But the most illuminating document is a post card Ex. (7) written by Khanchand to the manager of Khirgi shop (the defendant firm). The address is "Shewaram Girdharilal, Wine Depot, Khirgi." The relevant portion runs as follows :

"In future whatever quantity of wine you supply to Lala Pokardas do not debit him the sale price thereof but debit it 20 per cent. less because a man who is proprietor of the shops should get things at cost price."

"Bills of thousands of rupees have been prepared by the branches in the name of Lala Pokardas in all of which sale price has been charged. When we and all the men of the firm can purchase things from the shops at cost price why should sale price be charged from him . . . . . Whatever loss you suffer should be debited to the shop or wine account."

This makes it very probable that Pokardas was a member of the firm of Sewaram Girdharilal ; and it is, I think safe to go further. The letter did not refer to wine supplied for his private consumption. The writer speaks of thousands of rupees, and he must have been referring to sales on a commercial scale. The inference then is that the firm of Lala Pokardas and not Lala Pokardas personally had been supplied, and that the firm was meant to get 20 per cent discount as proprietor. Considering these documents and remembering that Pokardas and his sons, were a joint family firm I think it safe to infer that their branch at Tank was no other than the firm of Sewaram Girdharilal which was at one time managed by Khanchand. At any rate the documents justify the presumption that the plaintiff's firm was a partner of the defendants' firm, and it has not been rebutted by any evidence coming from them

In view of this finding the next question is whether the firm of Pokardas can sue the defendant firm in which all its members were partners for an account On this I have heard a very interesting argument as to the effect of O. 30, R. 9 on the old common law rule that no person may be both plaintiff and defendant Reliance has been placed on the dictum of Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Rustomjee v. Seth Purshotumdas (1) a case before the enactment of R. 9, and on Jamshedji Naoroji v. Sorabji Naoroji (2) in which Rustomjee's case is quoted with approval, but no reference has been made to that rule. It seems to me that no authority is needed for the opinion that the rule has altered the law for it allows a suit between two firms which have partners in common and that was exactly what the common law forbade; and the alteration was obviously intended to avoid the difficulties mentioned by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, which equity had to get round by clumsy expedients. But, though a suit will lie when one or more of the partners of the plaintiff firm are members of the defendant firm, and perhaps some suits will lie when all the members of the former are members of the latter, I agree with Mr. Hakumatrai that a suit for an account or for the balance found due on an account cannot be brought in the latter circumstances, as the proper remedy is a suit for a partnership account of the 2nd firm. For this I find authority in the case of Kirshna Anappa v. Ganpat Sakharam (3). The plaintiff firm consisting of S B. and K sued the defendant firm owned by K. alone for accounts. It was held that the suit should be for a general account. Obviously there, as in the present suit, the plaintiffs were suing for a part of the account between them : and therefore, the plaint offended the fundamental rule which is embodied in O. 2, R. 1 that every suit shall so far as possible be framed so as to afford a ground for final decision upon the subjects in dispute and to prevent further litigation. If the suit be allowed to go on, and if it ends in a decree for the plaintiff firm that decree will not be executable without more. To prevent the victimization of Sewaram, the executing Court will have to refuse the plaintiff firm leave to recover from him more than the quota due from him : and that will mean nothing less than a settlement of the accounts of the defendant firm. Thus it is not possible to settle by this suit all the matters in dispute. They can on the other hand all be settled in a suit for a partnership accounts of the defendant firm of Sewaram Girdharilal · I hold then that this suit cannot proceed, not because there is no cause of action, but because the plaint has not been framed and cannot be framed to include all the matters in dispute.

I need only add on this issue that, as Pokardas is now dead, and his sons are his legal representatives they are all as such interested in the defendant firm, so it seems to be immaterial whether he was a partner of that firm in his individual capacity or as manager of a Hindu joint family firm. The only other issues on which I need record findings are 2 and 7. The defendants have no evidence of negligence or bad faith or of any custom to give credit as alleged in the written statement para. 6.

P S Since writing this judgment I have been referred to an English decision cited in Annual Practice 1927, to the effect that the English rule corresponding to R. 9, O. 30 has not altered the common law rule since it is merely a rule of procedure. I fear that I can not understand this, for to my mind the rule that the same person may not be both plaintiff and defendant is itself a rule of procedure. However, this question though interesting is academic in the circumstances of the present case. It appears to me that if the plaintiff can amend his plaint and ask for an account, the suit need not be dismissed but that he may be allowed to withdraw his plaint. He must make an application to amend and on that application I can consider whether it is necessary to dismiss the suit, a course which will involve loss of court-fee, or can help him in any way.

PERCIVAL, J. C., AND RUPCHAND, A. J. C.

Khaser Khan—Appellant.

v

Rattanchand and another — Respondents.

First Appeal No 56 of 1927, Decided on 1st May 1929.

(a) Benami—Motive for benami purchase held to be not reasonable

Where a person said that as he was a resident of native State and owned vast lands in British India and as he wanted somebody to attend to revenue authorities in British India he got the sale-deed executed benami in the name of another, such motive cannot be said to be a reasonable one as a simple power of attorney would have served the purpose [P 196 C 2]

(b) Benami—Burden of proof—Burden of proving that person named in sale deed as purchaser is benamidar lies on person alleging it and he must prove that the purchase money came from him.

If a person alleges that he is the real purchaser and the person named in the sale deed as purchaser is his benamidar, the onus lies heavily on him to prove by cogent and satisfactory evidence that the other is a benamidar and that the transaction is not what it purports to be. He must prove that the purchase money came from his pocket. In order to discharge this burden it is not sufficient merely to point to matters of suspicion or even to plausible conjecture : 13 W. R. (P. C.) 14, 14 M. I. A. 235 (P. C.); 11 M. I. A. 28 (P.C.); 25 Cal. 473 (P. C.) and 6 C. L. J. 472, Rel. on. [P 198 C 1]

(c) Transfer of Property Act, S. 41— Benamidar can lease out benami property to bind real purchaser—Benami.

A benamidar being a certified purchaser has at least all the authority of an agent under law of agency and a deed of lease, executed by him of property of which he is the benamidar, is binding on the real purchaser in the absence of notice to the lessee that he has withdrawn the authority from the benamidar or that there was reservation of it. [P 197 C 1]

(d) Benami—Suit by N against K for a declaration that he is real purchaser and K mere benamidar—Entry by K into account book of N of whole amount spent in purchasing property—Such entry is not acknowledgment that all money was paid by N.

Per Rupchand, A. J. C.—Where a suit was brought by N against K for a declaration that he was the real purchaser of property and K, who was mentioned in the sale deed as purchaser was a mere benamidar, the fact that K made an entry into account book of N of the whole amount spent in purchasing the property, is in no sense an acknowledgment that all the money was paid by N but is consistent with an entry made by a partner in a books howing the total cost to the debit side of their joint purchase [P 199 C 1]

Bhojsing G. Phalajani — for Appellant.

Dipchand Chandumal — for Respondents.

Percival, J. C.—This suit relates to a Jagir purchased from one Rais Ghulam Hyder by a sale-deed dated 23rd August 1922 and which describes the defendants as purchasers. The plaintiff sued for a declaration that he was the real purchaser and owned and that defendants 1 and 2 were benamidars. The suit was dismissed as against defendant 1 Rattanchand and was decreed as against defendant 2 Mir Usifali who is the son of the plaintiff, Nawab Kaiser Khan. The plaintiff Nawab Kaiser Khan filed this appeal in respect of his claim against defendant 1 Rattanchand.

The issues in this case apart from issue 4 which has been dropped were:

1. Is the defendant 1 benamidar for plaintiff as alleged in the plaint ?
2. Is the lease in favour of defendant 1 invalid and not bining on the plaintiff ?
3. What order regarding compensation and against whom ?

The findings were

1. In the negative.
2. In the negative and against the plaintiff.
3. Plaintiff is entitled to nothing.

The main issue in this case and the issue which has been chiefly argued in this appeal is issue 1, namely, is defendant 1 benamidar for plaintiff as alleged in the plaint? The land in question was purchased for Rs. 79,000-0-0 by the plaintiff. Out of this land 1/4th was purchased in the name of defendant 1 and the matter in dispute is with regard to that one-fourth of the land that is 1/16th of the whole land of which 1/4th was bought for Rs. 79,000-0-0.

The learned First Class Subordinate Judge has dealt very carefully with the question whether defendant 1 was a benamidar for the plaintiff or not He observes that the usual tests to be applied are (1) the source whence the purchase money came (2) the possession of the title deeds (3) the management and possession of the property purchased (4) the motive for the benami purchase and (5) other surrounding circumstances bearing on the question. He has considered all these various circumstances and has come to the conclusion that they one and all point to the transaction not being benami, and to defendant 1 being entitled to one-fourth share in the land. The point on which the learned Judge particularily relies are points 1, 4 and 5 namely (1) the source whence the purchase money came (2) motive for the benami purchase and (3) other surrounding circumstances bearing on the question. Now, there is no doubt that the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to show that the money came from him. A considerable amount of evidence has been given on this point, but the learned First Class sub-Judge has shown after going carefully into the case that the plaintiff has not proved that the whole of the purchase money came from him. Defendant 1 contends that he paid Rs. 20,000 odd that is to say about one-fourth of the total amount of Rs 81,000-0-0 which includes some incidental expenses and as pointed out by the learned First Class Sub-Judge it is not absolutely necessary to hold it proved that defendant 1 paid the full amount of Rs. 20,000. The learned Sub-Judge has held that the plaintiff has failed to prove at any rate that a sum of Rs. 15,000 out of these Rs. 20,000-0-0 came from him. He observes:

"There is not the least doubt that the bulk of the consideration proceeded from the coffers of the plaintiffs but at the least it has not been satisfactorily proved that the old coin money was consigned to Rattanchand for change, that Rs. 6,000-0-0 were remitted to him through Baijhikhan and Kalandar Bux and that Rs, 7,000 odd were borrowed from Jhuromal and utilized for this transaction."

As he points out, we have to consider the fact that defendant 1 very probably gave some assistance in the regard to the purchase of the land and therefore he may be held to be entitled to the one-fourth share even though he has not proved that he has paid in full Rs. 20,000-0-0. In any case, defendant 1 has produced documents which show that some part of Rs. 20,000-0-0 came from his pocket. The conclusion of the learned Frst Class Sub-Judge is that the plaintiff has failed to prove that the whole of the purchase money entirely came from him and his finding is that some part at least came from defendant 1 and I agree with this conclusion.

His argument as regards the motive for the benami purchase appears to me to be also distinctly strong. He observes in the course of his judgment (line, 588).

"The motive for a benami transaction must always occupy a prominent place as a determining factor. Ordinarily it is to manufacture a shield against creditors and in some cases it is affection for the wife, children or near relatives."

Then he goes on to show that there was no reason why the plaintiff who was a literate chief owning vast lands and who had the advantage of the counsel of shrewd bania employees and a host of Mahomedan servants should allow the document to be passed in such a manner that "he fell into the clutches" of defendant 1. It is suggested that the document was passed in the name of defendant 1 because plaintiff hoped thereby to secure efficatious management of the land. But as has been pointed out by the learned Sub-Judge it was simple enough to give defendant 1 a power-of-attorney for that purpose It seems to me reasonable to hold that the plaintiff secured the assistance of defendant 1 by giving him one-fourth share in the transaction in order that by this means he would get someone who was interested in the land itself and would be willing to work for him.

Another point to which the learned Sub-Judge has attached considerable weight and which also to me appears to be of importance is the fact as observed at line 769 of his judgment that:

"In the absence of any cogent reason for disguising Seth Rattanchand's real character in this transaction everyone who took any serious part in the affair should have been cognizant that he was mere benamidar and no real owner. At the least the vendor, the broker, the writer of the deed and its two attesting witnesses should have been aware of it and would have said so in their evidence."

Yet none of these persons gave evidence to that effect. The next circumstance is that Mir Usifali (defendant 2) treated Rattanchand not as a mere benamidar but as a co proprietor. The learned Sub-Judge in this connexion refers to letter Ex. A-1 which shows that Mir Usifali treated defendant 1 as being entitled to one-anna share. In reply to this argument the learned pleader for the appellant contends that reliance cannot be placed on Mir Usifali because at the time when Ex. A-1 was passed Mir Usifali was not on good terms with his father, the plaintiff. But it is rather going too far to suggest that he would deliberately give up his right to a part of the compensation money in order to benefit Rattanchand who is a bania. There are other documents which I may refer to but not discuss in detail for instance notice Ex. 200 which was issued and published by Mr. Tolaram pleader on behalf of the Nawab in March 1924 and which also strongly supports the case of defendant 1. The learned First class Sub-Judge has dealt with all these various documents and has shown clearly that evidence on behalf of defendant 1 is much stronger than that on behalf of the plaintiff. The burden of proof lay on the plaintiff and not only has he not discharged this burden but taking the evidence of both parties by themselves, the evidence of defendant 1 is stronger than that of the plaintiff I see no reason, therefore, to disagree with the view taken by the learned Sub-Judge that it is not proved that defendant 1 a benamidar for the plaintiff.

The other point discussed by the learned Sub-Judge is whether the lease passed in favour of defendant 1 by defendant 2 is not binding on the plaintiff. This issue seems to be more or less of academic interest at present because the plaintiff has now died and defendant 2 who was one of plaintiff's sons, is one of his heirs. But apart from that point of view, this issue has also been carefully considered by the learned Sub-Judge He points out that the lease is impeached on various grounds particularly that defendant 2 was a minor and, therefore, not competent to contract, and that, being a benamidar he had no right to execute the deed. He has dealt with these points carefully and on the first point he shows that there is no reason to believe that defendant 2 was a minor at the time of the lease.

And on the question whether being a benamidar he had a right to contract he has observed at line 979.

"At the worst Mir. Usifali being a certified purchaser had at least all the authority of an agent under the law of Agency. He was fully competent to lease out and Rattanchand had no good ground for presuming any secret reservation of the authority or repudiation thereof before he became cognizant of the notice Ex. 200."

I see no reason, therefore, to disagree with the learned First Class Sub-Judge in respect of his finding on issue 2. There remains issue 3 regarding compensation namely the item of Rs. 1,000 On this point also it is only necessary to add that I see no reason to disagree with the finding of the learned First Class Sub-Judge. The finding on this issue practically follows from the finding on issues 1 and 2. For these reasons I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Rupchand, A. J. C —The plaintiff-appellant Nawab Kaiser Khan, who has died since the filing of this appeal, instituted this suit for a declaration that certain property which was purchased by a purchase-deed dated 23rd August 1922, in the name of his son Usifali Khan defendant 2 in the case and in the name of Rattanchand, defendant 1 in the case, was a benami transaction made solely for his own benefit and that the recitals therein showing that his son was entitled to a 12 annas-share and Rattanchand was entitled to a 4 annas-share were not true. The reason assigned by him in the plaint for getting the deed executed in the name of Rattanchand was that Rattanchand had been managing certain other lands on behalf of plaintiff in the British Territory and for the sake of convenience and in order to enable him to transact business with Revenue and other Government Officials his name was shown in the sale-deed as being co-purchaser of a 4 annas-share. The plaintiff further alleged that during the period that he was extradited to Multan on account of certain political reasons, Rattanchand had taken undue advantage of Usifali who was a minor and had obtained from Usifali a lease in respect of this land which was void both on the ground that at the time it was executed Usifali was a minor and also that Usifali had no interest in and could not, therefore, lease out the land He prayed that he be declared as the owner of the land in suit and that the lease executed by Usifali in favour of Rattanchand in respect of a 12 annas-share therein be declared as void He also prayed for a decree for Rs. 4,000 received by Rattanchand from Government as compensation for a portion of this land acquired under the Land Acquisition Act. His case was that on the strength of a power-of-attorney given to Rattanchand by Usifali and on the strength of the sale-deed which showed that Rattanchand was entitled to a 4 annas-share, he had recovered this sum from Government. The plaintiff failed to convince the lower Court as to the bona fides of his claim.

Usifali had supported the case of the plaintiff, and the question of benami purchase was, therefore, confined to a 4-annas share purchased in the name of Rattanchand. The onus lay heavily on the plaintiff to prove by cogent and satisfactory evidence that Rattanchand was a benamidar and that the transaction was not what it prima facie purported to be. In order to discharge this burden it is not sufficient merely to point to matters of suspicion or even to plausible conjecture. Sookheemonee Dassee v. Mohendro Nath (1), Faez Bukhsh Chowdry v. Fakirudin (2,) Sreeman Chunder Day v. Gopalchunder (3), Sulaiman Kadr Bahadur v. Mehndi Begam (4) and Wazirruddin v. Lala Deoki Nandan (5). Not only has the plaintiff failed to discharge this burden but there is convincing evidence adduced on behalf of Rattanchand that the transaction was what it purported to be Rattanchand has produced his account books which appear to be genuine and which contain a khata of the purchase of his share in the land and the amounts paid by him from time to time towards the purchase money. In the course of the cross-examination of Rattanchand an attempt was made to show that he had not sufficient funds at his disposal on the different dates on which he is alleged to have paid some of the money. But that attempt failed and the answers given by Rattanchand appear to us to be satisfactory. In this connexion it will be sufficient to refer to the criticism of the learned pleader for the plaintiff to one of the credit items which are said not to be genuine. Rs. 2,300 were said to have been realized by Rattanchand from his saraf-ka-shop in gold and silver in Jacobabad. It was said that the books of that shop had not been produced. But the learned pleader did not put any question on that point to Rattanchand. He stopped short in his cross-examination after the explanation was given. If the learned pleader disputed that this item was not genuine, it was open to him to have called upon Rattanchand to produce the books of the saraf-ka-shop and if he had failed to do so a presumption might have been drawn against him. A somewhat similar criticism was directed against other items in the account but with no tangible result. Some of these entries appear to have been made long before the extradition of the plaintiff, and no sufficient reason has been assigned for holding that Rattanchand contemplated from the very inception of the transaction to set up an adverse claim.

Our attention has been invited to a writing which Rattanchand made in one of the books of the plaintiff in respect of the purchase of land in suit. That entry is Ex 144 and reads as follows:

"Ram Ram Sat. Account of the Jagir land.
Rs 79,000-0-0 price of land to Wadero Ghulam Hyder Khan.
,, 2,064-8-0 expenses of stamp, writing charges, brokerage etc.
,, 300-0-0 expenses of Diwan Totaldas from Shahdadkot to Sukkur.
,, 500-0-0 cash paid to Rattan Puj Topandasani for miscellaneous expenses of land.
,, 88,884-8-0 Total.
(Sd.) RATTAN."

It was argued that the entry contained a clear admission by Rattanchand that this land was purchased by the plaintiff that Rattanchand had not paid a single pie out of the purchase money and that he had no interest therein. I am rather inclined to the view that the entry is in no way inconsistent with the case of a joint purchase. It is no doubt true that Rattanchand has attempted to give a false explanation with regard to this entry. He has said that he made a pencil entry and that entry showed at the end of it the shares of the partners but the plaintiff's employees had inked over that entry and rubbed off the last portion of it. On the other hand, the reason assigned by the plaintiff's employees for obtaining this entry is equally fallacious. It is alleged that as a large sum of Rs. 69,000 was sent by the plaintiff with Usifali a minor who was accompanied by two of the employees of the plaintiff, these employees were anxious to obtain a receipt from Rattanchand for this large sum of money and so they asked him to make the entry.

(1) [1869] 13 W. R. 14=4 B. L R. 16 (P.C).
(2) [1871] 14 M. I. A. 234=9 B. L. R. 456=2 Suther 490=2 Sar. 733 (P.C.).
(3) [1866] 11 M. I. A. 28=7 W R. 10=1 Suther 651=2 Sar. 215 (P.C).
(4) [1898] 25 Cal. 473=25 I. A. 15=2 C.W.N. 186=7 Sar. 254 (P.C.)
(5) [1907] 6 C. L. J. 472.

Now in the first place, there is, as will be seen presently no proof that Usifali was a minor then. In the next place the money was not paid to Rattanchand but to the vendor and was acknowledged in the sale-deed, and lastly the entry does not contain an admission of Rs. 69,000 only but recites the whole amount spent on the purchase including the item of expenditure incurred. In my opinion this entry is more consistent than not with an entry made by a partner in a book showing the total cost to the debit side of their joint purchase and appears to have been made with the object and is in no sense an acknowledgment that all the money was paid by the plaintiff. The learned pleader has argued that there is no reason why the entries from the books of the plaintiff should not be believed in preference to those in the books of Rattanchand. The learned Judge below has discussed the nature of these entries and the character of these books, and I am not prepared to differ from him as to the nature and character of these entries, or as to the reliability of the evidence given in support of them. The motive assigned by the plaintiff for the benami purchase is not one which could be easily accepted. It is more probable that the plaintiff who possessed extensive lands outside British Territory and was not, therefore, anxious to buy lands in British India unless he could arrange for their proper cultivation agreed to take up Rattanchand as a partner with a share of 4 annas so that he might manage the partnership lands for the benefit of both. But to say that merely because the plaintiff wanted somebody to attend to the revenue authorities, therefore, he got the sale-deed executed benami in the name of Rattanchand showing him as a sharer to the extent of 4 annas is asking too much. If that was the object of the plaintiff it was equally easy for him to execute a power-of-attorney in favour of Rattanchand to enable him to attend to the revenue authorities.

The subsequent conduct of the parties right up to the filing of the suit is also consistent with Rattanchand having been the real owner of the four annas share. There is evidence to show that at the time of the sale-deed another document was drawn up which according to Rattanchand was executed by Usifali purporting to be a partnership deed between him and Usifali as to the future management of the land. That document is not now forthcoming but it has been proved from the entries produced by the stamp vendor that a stamp for the partnership deed was purchased from him at the time when the sale-deed was executed.

There is also the evidence of the bondwriter and the attesting witnesses that such a document was executed at that very time. This lends great support to the case put forward by Rattanchand and the learned Judge was well advised in drawing an adverse inference against the plaintiff in consequence of the non-production of that document. This is not all. The power-of-attorney executed by Usifali authorizing Rattanchand to recover Rs. 3,000 only out of the compensation for acquisition of land by Government and the subsequent notice issued under instructions from the plaintiff all lead to the same conclusion. Whether Rattanchand has paid his full share of the purchase money or not is not a question before us and I therefore do not propose to go into it I have no hesitation in holding that not only has the plaintiff failed to discharge the onus placed on him, but there is positive evidence to the contrary, and that his case therefore fails on the first point.

Now with regard to the lease executed by Usifali in the first place it has been argued that Usifali was a minor at the date of the execution of the lease and that therefore the lease was void ab initio. The only substantial piece of evidence relied upon by the plaintiff in support of his case on this point is a purchase deed executed in 1919 in favour of Usifali represented by the plaintiff as his guardian. In that deed the age of Usifali is shown as 12 years Now admittedly in 1919 Usifali was a minor and there was no occasion then for the plaintiff to show in the sale deed the exact age of Usifali. It was sufficient to mention that Usifali was a minor and any gratuitous statement made there as to the approximate age of Usifali is no positive proof of his age. On the other hand we find that in 1922 when the purchase deed was executed for such a large sum of money as Rs. 79,000 the plaintiff entrusted the work to Usifali.

If Usifali was only 15 years of age it is hardly likely that this would have happened. If Usifali was a minor then the deed would have been executed in his favour as a minor in the same way as the deed of 1919 and the Sub-Registrar would not have accepted the document for registration from Usifali as he appears to have done. In 1923 Usifali executed a power-of-attorney in favour of Rattanchand in respect of Rs. 3,000 out of Rs. 4,000 payable as compensation by Government referred to above. This power was executed by him in the presence of the City Magistrate, Shikarpur, It is again hardly likely that an officer of that position would have endorsed a power-of-attorney executed by a minor where money was to be recovered from Government under that power.

The lease in favour of Rattanchand was executed by Mir Bakhshali acting as the attorney of Usifali under a power-of-attorney given to him by Usifali. That power was executed in the presence of another official and Mir Bakshali was a relative of Usifali. It is again not likely that the officer concerned would have attested the power or that Mir Bakshali would have acted on a power given by a minor. In all these different transactions Usifali is shown to be an adult and has purported to act as such. If there was any presumption in his favour on account of the recital made in the deed of 1919 such presumption has been abundantly rebutted. I hold that Usifali was an adult at least in 1924 when he executed the power-of-attorney in favour of Mir Baksh on the strength of which the lease was executed. The lease is therefore not void ab initio.

The question whether it is voidable at the instance of the plaintiff on the ground that Usifali had no authority to execute it, is now of only academic importance. The period of the lease has expired and the plaintiff is dead. Usifali is one of his heirs. If the heirs of the plaintiff have a claim against Rattanchand for an account of the produce of 12 annas share he has a counter claim against Usifali on the strength of the lease and the heirs can settle that dispute inter se. The suit is for a declaration that the lease is void. No relief has been asked for accounts and in the intended suit for such accounts it is open to Rattanchand to counter claim. Apart from this it would appear that the learned Judge below was perfectly right in holding that there were no grounds for coming to the conclusion that Usifali had exceeded his authority, and that the lease executed by him was not binding on the plaintiff. Usifali was the son of the plaintiff. He had with the consent of the plaintiff got the purchase deed executed in his favour and was looking after the property. It is said that the plaintiff was made to leave his territory on account of petition made against him by Usifali. We have not got that petition before us and we are not in a position to say how far that statement is true. But one thing is clear that prior to the execution of the lease in favour of Rattanchand the plaintiff had not given any intimation to Rattanchand that Usifali no longer represented him. Whatever dispute there might have been between the father and the son and of which even if Rattanchand was aware there was not sufficient notice to Rattanchand that the power given to the son of managing the property had been withdrawn. For these reasons, I hold that the lease executed by Usifali in favour of Rattanchand was not voidable either. For these reasons, I concur that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Kalumal, A. J. C. — This is an appeal against judgment of First Class Sub-Judge, Hyderabad refusing to file an award and pronounce judgment in accordance therewith under para 20, Sch. 2, Civil P. C.

The facts giving rise to this appeal are that by a document dated 23rd October 1925 the appellant and respondents all brothers referred their disputes to the arbitration of 3 arbitrators by name Lokumal Satramdas, Chandiram Ramkishendas and Lilaram Wadhumal outside the Court. The parties to the document had been doing business as partners in Colombo and Japan. The business had sustained losses, the firms were partially wound up and all creditors of Colombo except one paid up from the assets of these firms. Bhai Naraindas one of the respondents, who had been before failure in charge of Colombo firm, on his return to Hyderabad Sind to which place the parties belong, was charged with misconduct and misappropriation of partnership property. Disputes subsequently arose and as they could not be amicably settled and as the creditors pressed for their dues, they were referred to arbitration.

By Ex. 58 as I read it, the arbitrators were not only invested with powers to decide disputes among the partners inter se but they were also empowered to act themselves as receivers to wind up their business or continue it, redeem mortgaged properties, discharge debts, dispose of ornaments to pay off firm liabilities or appoint a receiver to carry out these purposes. The arbitrators were by this document also authorised to enquire into and decide secret matters that might come to their notice in the course of proceedings. In substance they were clothed with wide powers to decide what they thought best in the interests of the parties.

The arbitrators after the document above mentioned was executed by the parties in their favour entered on the reference, held several sittings in presence of the parties, examined them and their account books and some witnesses. They passed thereafter their award on 3rd February 1925 which was submitted to the lower Court by three of them on 1st March 1925 under para 20, Sch 2 Civil P. C. On notice being issued to Naraindas Parmanand objections were raised by him. The lower Court recorded thereafter evidence adduced by parties in support of and against the objections and decided that it could not accept the award and pass judgment in terms thereof. This judgment has been assailed in this appeal.

The grounds on which the learned Judge of the lower Court refused to take the award on its file are briefly these :

(1) That there were no disputes that could form the basis of the document relied upon as reference and that there was, therefore, in fact no reference at all.

(2) That the arbitrators exceeded their jurisdiction inasmuch as they entertained and decided matters that were extraneous to the reference to determine which the arbitrators as alleged were not clothed with any authority by the parties.

(3) That the authority to the arbitrators to inquire into and decide secret matters vitiated the entire reference and the award that followed

(4) That the award was bad as the arbitrators were guilty of misconduct having examined as alleged some witnesses in the absence of the opponent Naraindas and instituted some enquiries in his absence

(5) That the award was bad as the arbitrators had failed to carry out the terms of the reference such as sale of properties to pay off mortgage debts, collection of outstandings, discharge of creditors etc. etc. In other words it was alleged that the award was not final and uncertain.

Ground 1

As to this point perusal of the document Ex. 58 in the light of evidence led in our opinion shows clearly that disputes had arisen between parties inter se with respect to the karkhanas they had at Colombo and Japan partially wound up with some creditors left unpaid necessitating ascertainment as to what was due by one brother to the others, as to the winding up of the concerns and as to finding out best means by which the creditors could be paid off and as to balance left if any, being distributed among them. The arbitrators it appears to facilitate speedy decision on their part were invested with powers such as appointment of a receiver for various purposes mentioned in the reference In these circumstances it is difficult to understand what else could this document be, if not an agreement to refer disputes. It is surely not a trust deed or a document drawn up with the sole and exclusive object of gathering in assets and discharging liabilities. The main object of the document was to my mind to determine liabilities of partners inter se and their extent. This determination in a way was connected with collecting outstandings and discharging of the assets of the firms. Various powers were, therefore, conferred on the arbitrators in the reference in question which undoubtedly was an agreement referring disputes to arbitration i e, reference. Finding of the lower Court that this document was not in law a reference but either trust deed or a deed appointing receivers could not as above explained, therefore, be sustained.

As to the Grounds 2 and 3 unsoundness of the contentions and findings by the learned Judge that the arbitrators were wrong in entertaining and deciding matters relating to Santdas, a dumb and deaf brother of the parties Mr Kimatrai for the appellant has taken his stand on 3 points :

(i) that as it was not possible to determine what amount was due to or by each party unless liabilities, attaching to the parties not with respect to creditors only but also that arising out of the right of this dumb and deaf brother if he had any, had first been determined the arbitrators had by necessary implication the authority to decide to this subject (ii) that the arbitrators had jurisdiction to go into this matter as it was one of the matters covered by "secret matters" referred to in the agreement Ex. 58 for their inquiries and determination when brought to their notice: and (iii) that the arbitrators during the course of proceedings had expressly been authorized by opponent Naraindas in any event to decide this matter as they deemed best.

The third contention in our opinion is well grounded. The award refers to this express authority which we hold proved even otherwise on the evidence. The arbitrators who have had no axe of theirs to grind have deposed to this authority. It is besides difficult to understand why the authority should have been set up falsely when it was not disputed by respondents 2 and 3 though it is against their interest as they would have otherwise got the amount awarded to the deaf and dumb brother divided between themselves. Decision on this point besides does not in any way enhance Naraindas' liability. Naraindas, as found by the arbitrators had to pay Rs. 30,000-0-0 It is from this amount that Santdas has been awarded Rs. 7,500-0-0. As to the jewellery given to Santdas though it was no doubt originally entrusted to arbitrators for meeting some of the creditors it was under authority subsequently conferred on them as deposed to by the arbitrators and as mentioned in the award made available for disposal in the way arbitrators thought best. No grounds have been made out why we should accept Naraindas' evidence in preference to two arbitrators who had no interest of theirs to serve nor any ground to invent a lie on this point. In this view it is unnecessary to examine minutely the other two contentions urged by Mr. Kimatrai for the appellant. The second contention, however, has for its support solemn testimony of both the arbitrators which we are not prepared to discard. As to the first contention there is in our opinion no force therein. The arbitrators were not appointed to determine the claims of this brother left out of the reference nor was the determination as to this brother's rights necessary to determine liabilities of parties to the reference inter se.

Had we found that the arbitrators had been guilty of having exceeded their authority in this respect this portion of the award being separable from the rest, we would have directed it to be expunged as observed by their Lordships in a case reported in Amir Begam v. Badruddin Husain (1) the separable portion even in cases falling in para 20 could be deleted and the remaining part made basis of the decree under para. 21, Sch. (2) Civil P. C. The Bench ruling of this Court has taken the same view as would be found in a case reported in Kotu Mal v. Jeyram Das (2) remarks at page 793 independently of the Penal Code ruling not referred to therein. Another Bench ruling of this Court in A. I. R. 1929 Sind 107 relied upon for the contrary view has in our opinion no application as no question of separateness there arose. In view of the dictum of the highest tribunal binding on all Courts in India it is needless to refer to any other rulings should there be any holding to the contrary. Before I have done with part of the case I may here as well refer to the contention raised for Naraindas that award is illegal as it has dealt with guardianship of Santdas the matter that could not in law be referred to arbitration. The arbitrators in their award have not in our opinion appointed any guardian They have merely nominated someone to receive amount awarded to him for his benefit

As to the misconduct of the arbitrators in having made private inquiries or examined evidence in the absence of Naraindas the objection on this score as seen from the written statement page 4 of the paper book was based on general allegations that arbitrators had held no sitting (at all) nor had they acted together (on any occasion) and that they sometimes jointly and often individually had made inquiries from various people behind the back of Naraindas. In this written statement no specific instance of misconduct was alleged. Examination of the evidence recorded on this point discloses that this plea was raised in the hope as is usually the case of finding materials later on to base the general allegations upon. Even according to the evidence of Naraindas himself he was persent at two sittings out of three meetings held. According to the deposition of the arbitrators whom we have no reason to disbelieve he was present at all the 3 sittings. Evidence undoubtedly establishes further that two servants of the parties that had given some information as to the kharara lost as alleged by Naraindas were both asked by the arbitrators brought by Naraindas and examined on the point in his presence later on. There could therefore be no doubt that the arbitrators had held no proceedings that could possibly have prejudiced him and that no prejudice as it appears has accrued to him. As to the information given to arbitrators with respect to missing kharara, Naraindas has had an opportunity of examining witnesses on this point in the presence of all the parties and placing his own case for consideration of the arbitrators.

It is besies highly probable if the story of the arbitrators has to be accepted (which we have no reason to discard) that Naraindas was well aware of what the arbitrators had been told on the subject before the matter as to the missing kharara was openly taken in hand in subsequent proceedings. The rulings relied upon under holding that evidence taken or inquiries held in the absence of one of the parties vitiated the entire proceedings and the award following thereafter, can be of no avail in the particular circumstances of this case. Here information as to the missing kharara was communicated to the arbitrators by the parties and the matter was later on inquired into in their presence. Naraindas produced the two witnesses referred to above for examination and raised no protest though he was and must have been aware of the nature of the information received by the arbitrators. Naraindas could in these circumstances be deemed to have waived the objections he had to this procedure (vide Mohidin Sahib v. Ramaswami Chetty (3): Cursetji Jehangir v W. Crowder (4), remarks at pp 311 and 312)

It is no doubt true that if an award contains no final decision on all matters requiring determination it is wholly bad and cannot be allowed to be placed on the file. It is equally true that the result would be the same even if any of the matters has been left undetermined (see Russel's Law of Arbitration Edn. 1929 p. 214) In the present case, however, to my mind nothing that was required of the arbitrators under the terms of the reference has been left undecided As remarked above the arbitrators had the option of determining the liabilities payable by the firm in question of collecting outstandings due to the firm or discharging the mortgage debts etc. either themselves or of appointing a receiver to carry out all these purposes. The arbitrators in my opinion looking to the nature of the case before us rightly exercised the option in appointing a receiver to carry out all these details that would take necessarily pretty long time. The arbitrators have in the present case in consonance with the authority derived from the reference passed by the parties thus determined what was required of them under the document (agreement to refer disputes) and have therefore fulfilled the requirements as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in a ruling reported in Makund Ram v. Salig Ram (5). It was, it looks, in contemplation of parties to have a speedy determination of their disputes inter se and realising that the acts required of a receiver if any appointed in terms of the reference in question would necessarily take long time the parties deliberately invested arbitrators with the power to appoint a receiver. The award in question is therefore as complete as the circumstances of this particular case permit. It is in other words as final as the nature of the case requires see: Kotumal v. Jeyram Das (2).

The result of our findings is that the order of the lower Court in refusing to pass a judgment in terms of the award is set aside and the judgment as required by law under para 21 passed in terms thereof

Respondent Naraindas will bear costs throughout.

* (a) Provincial Insolvency Act, S. 39—Order of discharge releases insolvent from all provable debts—But order of annulment cannot prevent creditor from proceeding in civil Court.

Under the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907 if a creditor did not prove his debt and was not included in the schedule he could even after the discharge enforce his claim. The new Act of 1920 is the same except that an order of discharge under it does release the insolvent from all provable debts. But there is nothing in the Act to show that the order of annulment can prevent a creditor who has not proved his debt from proceeding to enforce it in a civil Court. *A. I. (b) Provincial Insolvency Act, S. 29—Suit stayed is not at an end—Court cannot made final order dismissing suit which has been stayed.

The presumption from the word "stay" is that the suit stayed is not at an end, but may be continued until a further order is passed and as all orders in suit must be made after hearing parties, a Court cannot make a final order until it has heard objections, even where the creditor, whose suit is stayed, has not made an application the Court would have to consider his request to continue the suit. .. Judgment.—This is an application for revision of an order made by the Small Cause Court Judge, Shikarpur, dismissing the applicant's suit with costs.

There is no dispute about the facts. The applicant filed a suit against the opponent in the Shikarpur Court. Whilst the suit was pending the opponent-defendant was adjudged an insolvent. The suit, was therefore, stayed under S. 29, Prov. Ins. Act of 1920. The adjudication of insolvency was afterwards annulled under S. 38 of the Act as the Court accepted a scheme of composition. But the applicant had not proved his debt in the insolvency Court. He applied to the civil Court to continue his suit, and the order, of which the complaint is made, was passed the only ground being that he ought to have filed his claim in the Insolvency Court.

The first question for us to consider is what is the effect of an order of insolvency Court under S. 39, Provl. Ins. Act, approving a proposal for composition.

This is clear from the section itself which says:

"The composition or scheme shall be binding on all the creditors entered in the said schedule, so far as it relates to any debts entered therein."

By schedule is meant the schedule of the creditors who have proved their debts under S. 33 of the Act. And, as the applicant had not proved his debt under that section the scheme was not binding on him If authority for this proposition is needed it is to be found in the case of Meghraj v. Virbhandas (1), the head note of which runs as follows:

Section 24, Provl. Ins. Act 3 of 1907, though it requires all creditors to tender proofs of their respective debts makes no provision as to the effect of any creditor failing to come to prove his debts."

Under the Insolvency Act of 1907, if a creditor does not prove his debt and is not included in the schedule he can even after the discharge enforce his claim.

In the body of the judgment Raymond, A J. C., says as follows:

Section 24, Provl. Ins. Act 3 of 1907, on which the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner has mainly relied requires that all persons alleging themselves to be creditors of the insolvents in respect of debts provable under this Act, shall tender proof of their respective debts by producing evidence of the amount and particulars thereof, but the section makes no provision as to the effect of any creditor failing to come in to prove his debt. Cl. 3 of the same section clearly contemplates a creditor applying to prove his debt at any time prior to the discharge of the insolvent and not necessarily at the time that the official receiver is about to frame a schedule of the insolvent's creditors. But unfair though it be, if a creditor does not choose to adopt either of the above courses and have his debts scheduled, that will not preclude him from attempting to recover any amount due to him even after the insolvent has been discharged, for under the Act of 1907, the order of discharge releases the insolvent only from the debts mentioned in the schedule framed."

The new act is the same except that an order of discharge under it does release the insolvent from all provable debts. But the decision of analogy is applicable to the present case and it is clear that there is nothing in the Act to show that the order of annulment can prevent a creditor, who has not proved his debt, from proceeding to enforce it in a civil Court.

The principal argument on behalf of the opponent the defendant, however, is that the Court, having granted a stay had no power to continue the suit because there is nothing in the Insolvency Act to show that the plaintiff may apply to have his suit continued after the annulment of the adjudication. Mr Dipchand has suggested that the omission was intentional, as the legislature wanted to enforce all creditors to prove their debts It is true that the Insolvency Act makes no express provision on the point, but we are unable to agree with the inference which the learned pleader seeks to draw. In the first place a perpetual stay is equivalent to a dismissal and the word "dismissed" would have been more fitting, had it been intended that the suit should abate. The presumption from the use of the word "stay" that is the suit stayed is not at an end, but may be continued in any case that some further order is required, and as all orders in suit must be made after hearing parties, a Court cannot make a final order dismissing a suit which has been stayed, until it has heard objections. It follows that, even if the applicant had not made an application the Court would have had to consider his request to continue the suit, and that the difficulty raised for the opponent is merely technical Lastly we would say that S. 29, Provl. Ins. Act, does not deal with procedure at all. It neither shows how the Court can be moved to stay a suit nor how it can be moved to set aside a stay. For procedure we murt go to the Civil Procedure Code, and if we do so there is no difficulty, for all a plaintiff has to do is to make an application to the Court to take the next step in the proceedings, when the Court will consider whether there remains any objection to further preceeding. It has been contended that the Judge has exercised a discretion with which we should not interfere. We are unable to agree. In accordance with the decision in Meghraj v Virbhandas (1), he was bound to proceed with the suit and decide it on its merits.

The application is therefore allowed. The Judge of the lower Court should proceed with the suit according to law. Costs to be costs in the cause

Therefore in an application for leave to appeal the law permits exclusion only of the time occupied in obtaining copy of the decree and the applicant is not permitted to deduct time required for obtaining copy of a judgment *A. T. G. Elphinston—for Applicant

Tolesing Khushalsing—for Opponents 1 and 2.

Barlee, A. J. C.—This is an application for permission to appeal to the Privy Council against the decision of a Bench of this Court in First Appeal No 14 of 1919 The judgment of this Court was delivered on 29th April 1926. Thereafter, on 6th May, application was made for a copy of the judgment. On 17th September an application was made for a copy of the decree The application for permission to appeal to the Privy Council was not made till 15th October, 5½ months from the date of the judgment against which it is desired to appeal. The time allowed for making an application for permission to appeal to the Privy Council is 90 days. But this can be extended by the addition of the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree under S. 12, sub-S. (2), Lim. Act, provided that the application for a copy was made before the expiry of the period of 90 days. In fact, as I have said, the application for copies was not made within 90 days, but was actually made 51 days after the expiry of that period. Prima facie, then the application for leave to appeal is time barred.

Mr. Elphinston seeks to bring his application within time by deducting, under S. 12, sub-S. (3), Lim. Act, the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment, and, in the alternative he asks us to exercise the discretion given us by S 5, Lim. Act, and, to excuse the delay which was due to a mistake made by his clerk.

Subsection (3), S 12, however, does not apply to an application for leave to appeal but merely to decrees. It runs:

" where a decree is appealed from or sought to be reviewed, the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment on which it is founded shall also be excluded. "

And it has been held in the case of Nur Mahomed v Hassomal (1) that in computing the period for an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council S 12, Lim. Act, only allows the deduction of the time occupied in obtaining a copy of the decree under 12, Lim. Act It is there stated by Raymond, A. J. C :

" The words used in both these Cls. 2 and 3 are perfectly plain and unambiguous, and the use of the word 'also' in Cl. 3 clearly manifests the intention of the legislature that the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment can be excluded in addition to the time for obtaining a copy of the decree, only in cases where a decree is appealed from or sought to be reviewed. Therefore, in an application for leave to appeal the law permits exclusion only of the time occupied in obtaining a copy of the decree. Whatever be the intention of the legislature in establishing the distinction, there is no doubt that the distinction exists and it is not open to us to circumvent it or nullify the effect of the section "

Since then, the application is not permitted to deduct the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment, it follows that his application for a copy of the decree was made after the expiry of the period of 90 days allowed him for his application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, and that by that time the latter application was time barred.

Mr. Elphinston has urged, however, that the case which I have cited as an authority for this Court has been overruled by the Privy Council in Jujibhoy N Surty v. T. S. Chettyar (2) The facts of that case were as follows:

The appellant had filed a suit on the Original Side of the High Court of Rangoon which was dismissed and he presented an appeal to the Appellate Side of that Court The appeal was apparently out of time, and he sought to bring it within the period of limitation by deducting the time requisite for procuring copies of the decree and judgment To this it was replied that it was not permissible to deduct the time necessary for obtaining a copy of the decree, since by the rules of the High Court of Rangoon, the appeal could have been presented without annexing the two documents. The question, then, was whether, in view of the fact that the High Court of Rangoon, in exercise of the powers conferred on them by S. 122, Civil P C., had annulled O. 41, R. 1, Civil P. C , so that it was no longer necessary for a party to annex to his petition of appeal a copy of the decree appealed against it was permissible for an appellant to deduct the time requisite for obtaining the copy of the decree. The High Court decided against the appellant and held that his appeal was time barred. But, on an appeal to the Privy Council their Lordships, decide that in view of the grammatical construction of sub-R (2) which expressly states that an appellant can deduct the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree appealed from, the appellant could not be deprived of that right by an alteration of the Civil Procedure Code. In effect their Lordships decided that the power given to the High Court by S. 122, Civil P C., to amend O. 41, R 1, did not empower them to amend S 12, Lim. Act. This decision cannot be useful to the learned counsel for two reasons. In the first place, it is a decision on the meaning of Cl (2), S. 12 and not of Cl. (3) and secondly it is a direct decision that a statute must be interpreted literally according to its grammatical meaning, and that, when its grammatical meaning is plain, Courts are not allowed to interpret it, so as to give effect to what they think may have been the intention behind it. It is really, therefore, an authority against the position taken up by the learned counsel for in the present case what we are asked to do is to decide that Cl. (3) though it refers only to decrees, must be held to be applicable by implication to applications for leave to appeal also.

In other words, we are asked to amend it by inserting after the words "decree" the words "or on application for leave to appeal." The decision of the Privy Council cited by the learned counsel forbids us to interpret the section in any such way. It, therefore, follows that S. 12 can be of no use to the applicant and that his application is time barred Learned counsel has asked us to exercise in favour of his client the discretion given us by S. 5, Lim. Act But it does not seem to us that this is a case in which we can equitably exercise that discretion in his favour: The delay is one of 51 days and it is not negligible, and it cannot be said that there was no negligence on the part of the applicant himself. He left the matter in the hands of his counsel, whose clerk made a foolish mistake · and for four months he appears to have made no inquiry about his application Had he been diligent in keeping in touch with his counsel, that mistake could have been rectified in time, Every case of this nature must be decided on its merits Nevertheless we can look to the judgments of this Court for guidance, and I find that in this Court negligence on the part of the clerk has been looked as negligence on the part of a party. I need only quote the case of Allahdadshah v Mukadum Amin Mohomed (3). In that case an appeal was barred by seven days and the delay was due to an oversight on the part of a pleader's clerk. Nevertheless the Court refused to admit that negligence of a pleader's clerk was a sufficient cause within the meaning of S. 5, Lim. Act. In the present case there has been a delay of 51 days and it appears to me that the applicant is even less entitled to indulgence.

(2) A. I. R. 1928 P. C. 103=6 Rang 302=55 I. A. 161 (P. C.).

(3) [1914) 7 S. L R. 201=24 I. C. 977

For these reasons, it appears that the application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council is time barred and I would, therefore, dismiss it with costs.

Percival, J. C.—I wish to add a few words.

I quite agree with my learned colleague that the law regarding the exclusion of time in the case of this nature is as laid down in the case of Nur Mahomed v. Hassomal (1) which ruling is not merely the law, which prevails here and which we are, therefore, obliged to follow, but which to my mind very clearly lays down the reason why a copy of the judgment is not necessary. My learned colleague has already pointed out that this is not overruled by the case of Jijibhoy N. Surty v. T. S Chettyar (2). The main distinction between the two cases is that Nur Mahomed v. Hassomal (1) deals with an application for leave to appeal, while Jijibhoy N. Surty v T. S. Chettyar (2) was a case of an appeal itself from a decree of a High Court on its original side to its appellate side. It is clear, therefore, that the time taken for obtaining a copy of the judgment cannot be excluded in this case.

However, there was one other point which was raised by the learned counsel for the applicant, to which a reference may be made. It is that he contends that in this instance it was impossible for the applicant to file his application in time because the decree had only been drawn up just about the time when the application was filed. The applicant, he contends was unable to get a copy of the decree, because the decree was not drawn up. It is true that there was considerable delay in drawing up the decree, because a number of lands were involved, and it took some time for an inquiry to be made, as to which were the particular lands which were to be mentioned in the decree. The matter was referred to the learned pleaders for the parties, and the decree could not be drawn up until after these details had been settled. There, however, was no reason why an application should not have been made for a copy of the decree. It is evident, I think, that the fact that a decree has not been drawn up is no sufficient reason for not applying for a copy of the decree. If a ruling on that point is required, it is to be found in Lakhoomal v. Joomremal (4) referred to to by the learned pleader for the respondents, and in subsequent cases. In that case it was laid down that:

"Where a decree is not prepared and signed for several days after passing of the judgment, the appellant is not entitled to exclude the period of such delay, unless he has put in an application for a copy of the judgment and decree."

Now in the present case the judgment was delivered on 29th April 1926 but no application for a copy of the decree was made till 17th September 1926, which, as mentioned by my learned colleague, is 51 days after the period of limitation was over.

One further point may be mentioned regarding the excuse of delay under S. 5, Lim. Act. I quite agree with my learned colleague on this point; but it may be further noted that the affidavit put in on behalf of the applicant on the point was not put in till 26th April 1928. The applicant, in my opinion, should have stated at the time of making an application why the application was not time barred, as it appeared to be on the surface. The hearing of the application was originally fixed for early in 1928, and it was not till after the limitation point wastaken on behalf of the respondent that this affidavit was put in. It may be observed also that in the affidavit no reason for the delay has been given except the statement of the counsel's clerk:

"It seemed to me that it was useless to file an application for a certified copy when the decree had not been prepared."

I would just add that the hearing of this application has taken a considerable time, but the delay is due to the deaths which have occurred amongst the parties to this application, and to the request by the learned counsel for a later hearing of the application.

As long ago as 23rd December 1927, this Court passed an order:

"Postponed till 3rd February. The matter to be treated as urgent as it is a Privy Council appeal."

So far as this Court was concerned, every endeavour was made to dispose of the application as soon as possible.

I, therefore, agree with my learned colleague in the order proposed by him.

Second Appeal No. 21 of 1926, Decided on 14th May 1928.

(a) Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, S. 22—"Agriculturist" means agriculturist at the date of attachment or sale.

The words "immovable property of an agriculturist" in S. 22 prima facie refer to a person who is an agriculturist at the date of the attachment or sale of his immovable property. [P 209 C 1]

(b) Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, S. 22—Judgment-debtor not agriculturist at trial of suit—Acquiring that status since passing of decree—He gets benefit of S. 22 at execution proceedings.

Where a judgment-debtor who has failed to establish his status as an agriculturist at the trial of suit, claims the benefit of S. 22 in execution proceedings, and successfully shows that he has acquired the status of an agriculturist since the decree, he gets the benefits of S. 22: A. I. R. 1927 Bom. 492 (F.B.), Rel. on.; A. I. R. 1925 Sind 86, Expl. [P 210 C 1]

G. A. Kikla—for Appellants.

Javhermal Vilaitrai—for Respondent.

Rupchand, A.J.C.—The short question raised in this appeal is whether it is open to a judgment-debtor to claim in execution proceedings the benefits of S. 22, Dekkhan Agriculturist's Relief Act on the plea that since the date of the decree passed against him he has acquired the status in agriculturist within the meaning of the Act.

The "words immovable property of an agriculturist" in that section prima facie refer to a person who is an agriculturist at the date of the attachment or sale of his immovable property as the case may be. It has, however, been argued that the Act was intended to afford relief to bona fide agriculturists and that it could never have been intended to help unsuccessful traders to defeat or delay their creditors by acquiring the status of agriculturist in execution proceedings and our attention is invited to the facts of this case which affords typical example of the manner in which the defendants-respondents are attempting to take an undue advantage of the provisions of the Act.

The defendants were sued in the Small Cause Court, Bombay, in respect of their trade debts. They pleaded that as they were agriculturists residing at Mirpur Khas in Sind, that Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. They failed to establish their status as agriculturists, and a decree followed. Shortly after the decree was transferred to the Court at Mirpur Khas they applied under the provisions of S. 22, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, that as they were agriculturists their immovable property was immune from attachment or sale. The trial Court rejected this plea in limine. On appeal the learned District Judge has remanded the case to the trial Court to determine whether the defendants had aquired the status of agriculturists since the decree, and if so to afford them relief. It is against that order that the present appeal has been filed. The result is that for the last four years the decree has remained unexecuted.

There is a good deal to be said in favour of the view advanced by the learned pleader for the plaintiffs. But the question for us to answer is not what the legislature meant, but what its language means and we have to abide by the words of the section without attempting to reform it according to the supposed intention of the legislature, or attempting to exclude cases which fall within its express meaning in order to make the law reasonable: Huriomal v. Hazarisingh (1).

We can find nothing in S. 2 which contains the definition of an agriculturist to limit the applicability of S. 22 to those cases only when the person claiming relief was held in suit to be entitled to the benefits of an agriculturist and it is not within our province to interpolate those words into the section.

The question, whether a person who was an agriculturist at the date of his arrest though not at the date of the decree sought to be executed could claim the benefit of S. 21 of the Act, recently came up before the Full Bench of the Bombay High Court in Maneklal Girdharilal v. Mahipatram (2). After reviewing the somewhat conflicting decisions on Ss. 15-B, 20 and 21 of the Act, which are to a certain extent cognate sections dealing with the powers of the Court to afford certain reliefs to agriculturists in execution proceedings, it was held that the material date for the determination of the status of an alleged agriculturist was the date of the attempted arrest. But by reason of the definition of the term "agriculturist" in S. 2 (2) of the Act, that determination may also benefit the determination of his status at the date when the liability arose At p. 1116, Crump, J., said:

"Section 21 is plainly designed to protect the agriculturist. That is the policy of the Act. It can be read as enabling the agriculturist to claim protection when a judgment-creditor seeks to arrest or imprison him in execution of money decree. That indeed is the meaning of the word used. I have not yet found any practical difficulty in so interpreting it. If that is the meaning, the party claiming protection must show that he at the date of the attempted arrest or imprisonment was an agriculturist. Therefore he must show that he is within the definition contained in S. 2 of the Act. He may be either an agriculturist within the general definition contained in S. 2 "first" or he may come under the special and inclusive definition in S. 2 "secondly" which is also applicable as S. 21 forms part of Ch. 3. Thus though the question of status arises for consideration at the time of the proposed arrest or imprisonment, the answer may have to be given with reference to the time when the liability was incurred. And the latter date would in the case of an application for execution, be the date of the decree."

In my opinion, the same reasoning equally applies to S. 22 of the Act.

It is rather unfortunate that a defendant should have the advantage of avoiding arrest and the sale of his immovable property by pleading on the one hand that he was an agriculturist at the date of the cause of action or by showing that he was held to be an agriculturist in the decree though he had since ceased to be an agriculturist, and on the other by pleading that he was an agriculturist at the date of the arrest or the sale of property though he was not an agriculturist before such date. But the remedy lies with the legislature. It has been repeatedly pointed out that the Act is badly drafted, that in several respects it goes far beyond its preamble, that since the enactment of the Usurors Loans Act, Act 10 of 1918, much of it is out of date, that the time of the Courts is wasted in trying issues of status raised by dishonest defendants and that the Act is at present doing more mischief than good. But so long as the Act remains on the Statute Book, in its present form, it is the duty of the Court to give effect to it.

Our attention has been invited to the case of Lawrence Phillips & Co. v. Nazareth (3), where sitting as a single Judge I gave effect to the plea that it was not open to the defendant to prove that he was an agriculturist at the date of the suit having failed to raise that plea before the decree was passed against him. It is sufficient to observe that in view of the Full Bench case in Manekkal Girdharilal v. Mahipatram Mansukharam (2) with which we agree, the the decision in the Nazareth's case is of academic importance only In that case the question whether under S. 21, the status of the defendant was to be determined at the date of his arrest was not seriously pressed, nor was any attempt made to prove that since the decree the defendant had acquired the status of an agriculturist. The head note reads as follows:

"Wherein suit falling under Cl. (w), S. 3, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, the defendant does not expressly raise the plea that he is an agriculturist and as ex parte decree is passed against him without examining the parties required by Ss. 7 and 12 of the said Act, the Court must be deemed to have decided by necessary implication that the defendant was not an agriculturist, and the defendant could not be permitted in execution proceedings to raise the plea that he was an agriculturist at the time when the ex parte decree was passed against him."

So far as it goes it appears to be un objectionable but is of no substantial help to a judgment-creditor in securing the arrest of a debtor who is as a matter of fact an agriculturist at the date of his arrest.

For those reasons we dismiss this appeal but make no order as to costs.

Percival, J. C. — I agree. I also agree that an amendment of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act is desirable.

T. G. Elphinston—for Appellant.

Kimatrai Bhojraj—for Respondents.

Order.—We have to deal with three applications on behalf of Government for the extension of the period fixed by law for the presentation of appeals 51, 52 and 54 of 1928. All these appeals have been made against an order of the District Judge, Hyderabad, in a land acquisition enquiry, in which he consolidated three distinct matters. This judgment was delivered on 29th March 1928, and a compared copy was given to the Government Pleader on 17th April. He had applied for it even before the judgment was delivered. The appeal period was 90 days and expired on 27th June and the appeals were filed on 27th July 30 days late. Government sanction had not been received in Sind until 14th July when the time limit had already been passed.

Mr. Elphinston, who has argued this case for the Government Pleader, has pointed out that had the Government Pleader Nawab Shah applied for certified copies of the order and bill of costs, which is a necessary part of it, the appeals would have been in time as the appellant would have been entitled to deduct the whole period from 4th April, when costs were deposited to 17th July on which date the copy of the bill was prepared. But this is not a legitimate argument for, if we are to consider what might have happened, we must not forget that but for the negligence of a copyist the copy of the bill might have been ready by 19th April, if not earlier and the appellants would have been able to deduct no more than 21 days. What we have to see is what was the real cause of the delay and whether there are circumstances which entitle the appellant to indulgence.

In view of the fact set out by the Government Pleader in his application we think that we must allow the appellant the extension which he asks for. The Act makes no distinction between Government and a private individual but it is obvious that in considering an application under S. 5 a distinction must be made. A private person has only himself to consider and must be presumed to be familiar with every aspect of his case. Government has to consider the public interest and cannot be expected to know the fact of each individual case They require time for inquiry and consideration before taking action and must consult the local officers, to whom they cannnot delegate their powers. It follows that a time which may be ample for a private litigant may be none too great for Government. Further there are difficulties in connexion with Sind cases which probably are not felt in any other province. We think, then, that though any delay is evidence of laches in the case of a private individual, the same cannot be said of Government. And in the present case, since it appears that the matter was treated urgent by the Government Pleader at the outset, and by the Remembrancer Legal Affairs at the last stage we are inclined to think that there was no delay except such as was inevitable, in view of the number of hands through which the papers had to pass. Accordingly we condone the delay and accept the appeals as in time. This decision of course leaves open the question whether the appeals 52 and 54 which were not accompanied by certified copies of the award are inadmissible on that account.

Costs to be costs in the cause.

RUPCHAND AND BARLEE, A. J. Cs.

Abdul Rahman and others — Appellants.

v.

Haji Mahomed Idris and others—Respondents.

First Appeal No. 42 of 1924, Decided on 23rd April 1929.

(a) Mahomedan Law—Partition—No custom alleged that they had adopted Hindu Law—Claim must be decided under Mahomedan Law.

There is no such thing as "joint family property" amongst Mahomedans and in the absence of any allegation much less proof that according to an immemorial custom the parties had adopted the principles of Hindu Law the Court is bound to apply the principles of Mahomedan Law in determining the claim for partition : A. I. R. 1922 Sind 41 and 38 Mad. 1099, Rel. on. [P 214 C 2]

(b) Mahomedan Law—Manager of joint property acquiring new property in his own name—Such property cannot be joint unless there is an agreement between himself and other co-owners.

A Sunni Mahomedan died leaving three sons and one daughter. The eldest son continued to manage the joint property and his name was recorded in the Record-of-Rights as the manager of joint property. Subsequently he acquired new property in his own name and in the name of his son. All the members of the family lived and messed together. The manager died leaving his one brother, sister and sons.

Held that in order to succeed in getting a share of the properties subsequently acquired by the manager in his own name it was incumbent on the other co-owners to have averred and strictly proved that new properties were acquired and possessed by the manager either under an express or implied agreement on behalf of himself and other coheirs and that he had agreed to account for them in respect thereof. The mere fact that the parties lived and messed together was not a necessary evidence of such implied agreement as in Hindu Law : 38 Mad. 1099 and A. I. R. 1922 Sind 41, Ref. [P 214 C 2]

(c) Adverse possession—Co-owner's possession is not adverse unless there is disclaimer by open assertion of hostile title—Entry in revenue papers or non-enjoyment of produce is insufficient.

In order that possession of one co-owner may be adverse to the other, there must be on the part of the co-owner setting up adverse possession a disclaimer of the other's right by an open and unequivocal assertion of a hostile title. Mere entry of name in the revenue registers is insufficient, and mere enjoyment of the produce is equally insufficient : A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 652 ; A. I. R. 1928 Rang. 95 and A. I. R. 1921 Sind 177, Rel. on. [P 215 C 2]

(d) Evidence Act, S. 101 — Burden of proof—Co-owner alleging breach of trust against another co-owner—Burden of proof lies on co-owner alleging—Trust Act, S. 90.

Where a co-owner of property wants to take action against other co-owner for breach of trust under S. 90, Trust Act, it is incumbent on him to allege and prove as a fact that the other co-owner by availing himself of the position of a co-owner had gained an advantage in derogation of his rights : A. I. R. 1916 P. C 227, Ref. [P 215 C 2]

(e) Bombay Land Revenue Code (as amended by Act 6 of 1901), S. 56—Effect of amendment on the grant of fallow-forfeited land to co-owner—Such grant is personal.

The grant of fallow-forefeited land to only one of several co-owners of join property subsequent to 1901 is in the absence of any other circumstance a grant to him personally and this is more so in survey numbers granted on restricted tenure [P 215 C 2]

T. G. Elphinston—for Appellants.

Gopaldas Jhamatmal and Tahilram Maniram—for Respondents.

Rupchand, A. J. C.—This appeal arises out of a suit filed by plaintiff-respondent 1 for partition of property. The following tabular statement shows the relationship of the parties :

(For tabular statement see p. 213.)

The plaintiff instituted this suit in the first instance only against defendants 1 to 5 claiming one-third share in the property left by Haji Mahomed, that subsequently acquired by Haji Umer in his own name and in the name of his son Abdul Rahman defendant 1. He ignored all the family relatives and based his claim for his share in all the property which Haji Umer died possessed of on the allegations contained in paras. 4 and 6 of the plaint which are as follows :

"4. That these properties continued joint and undivided in the hands of the plaintiff and his brothers and as Haji Umer father of defendants 1 to 4 was the eldest member of the family, the agricultural land was entered in his name in the Record-of-Rights but, the plaintiff, Haji Umer and Ali Guhar all remained in joint occupation of the land, and used to get it cultivated and enjoyed its produce."

"6. That after the death of Ali Guhar the plaintiff and Haji Umer deceased continued in joint occupation of the land and on the strength of that land took some land from the Government and also purchased some land from the produce thereof. As Haji Umer was the eldest member of the family he got his and his eldest son Abdul Rahman's name entered in the khata, but all the land continued joint and undivided property and all the parties continued to have it cultivated and jointly enjoyed the produce of it, and they continued joint in food, messing and estate up to this day."

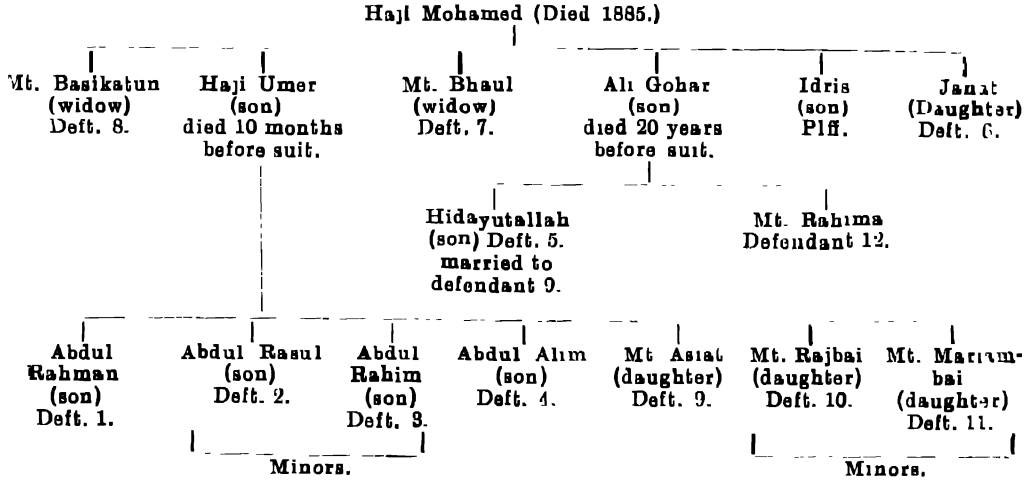
Defendants 1 to 5 pleaded that there was a partition between the sons of Haji Mahomed shortly after his death, that the parties have been separate in every way except that after the death of Ali Guhar, Haji Umer had brought up Hidayutallah as his son, that the plaintiff's claim to such property as was left undivided was statute barred, that the plaintiff had no claim whatsoever to the property subsequently acquired by Haji Umer and defendant 1, and that the members of the family were necessary parties to the suit. In consequence of the last plea defendants 6 to 12 were joined as parties to the suit. They have supported defendants 1 to 5.

The property which Haji Umer died possessed of consists of the following :

(i) Agricultural lands and building sites purchased by him in his own name and in the name of defendant 1 ;

(ii) Cash about Rs. 30,000 and other moveable property of considerable value :

(iii) Agricultural lands which have continued in his possession from the days of Haji Mahomed ;



(iv) Agricultural lands which were fallow-forfeited and regranted to him ,

(v) Agricultural lands which formed the frontage of Haji Mahomed's lands and were granted to him ;

(vi) Alluvial lands granted to him in lieu of certain katcha lands held by Haji Mahomed on a temporary lease which had been eroded by the river.

The learned Judge below upheld the contentions of the plaintiff except as to his share in the property. He held that the proper legal share which the plaintiff was entitled to was not one-third but 2/7th only and accordingly passed a preliminary decree in favour of the plaintiff for partition and possession of that share in all the aforesaid properties. It is against that decree that defendants 1 to 5 have come to us in appeal. Now, with regard to the question whether there was a partition between the plaintiff and defendants 1 to 5 after the death Haji Umer, Mr. Elphinston has frankly admitted that there is no sufficient evidence to prove it. We accordingly accept the finding of the lower Court on that point. With regard to the rest of the case, we are afraid we cannot accept the finding of the learned Judge below except in respect of item 3, nor can we accept the reasoning on which he has proceeded.

Though at one place the learned Judge has observed that the expression "join family," "joint messing" and "joint residence" freely used by the witnesses in their evidence cannot be accepted in the sense in which they are understood under the Hindu Law, he has fallen into a very patent error in holding that as on the death of Haji Mahomed the property he died possessed of was entered in the revenue records in the name of Haji Umer as manager of the family and as Haji Umer had obtained possession thereof in his capacity as manager and had not renounced his managership up to his death, all the property which he died possessed of must be deemed to have been acquired and possessed by him on behalf of himself and the other heirs of Haji Mahomed. The learned Judge has not applied his mind to the claim of the plaintiff in respect of each item of the property in dispute separately In dealing with items 1 and 2 he has assumed that Haji Umer acted as the agent of his coheirs merely and solely because he got possession of the lands on the death of Haji Mahomed and got them transferred in his own name in the revenue records as representing them, and has observed as follows :

"If we once accept the position that throughout the various transactions Haji Umer acted as the agent of the plaintiff, as I have done, it is obvious that plaintiff will be entitled to a share in all such acquisitions whether in the name of Umer or his son. For, admittedly he handled all the income and no independent source to provide him with funds, has been proved in the case. It is contended that even as a manager, Haji Umer as a co-owner was not a trustee for the rest of the family and therefore all the property acquired by him which was not original ancestral property should not be held to have been so acquired for the benefit of the family. It is pointed out that he used to take up contracts and acquired wealth to which the family would not be entitled. The position that a manager is not a trustee for the other members of the family who constitute him as such, may be conceded to the extent that he would not be called upon to render a strict account of the income and the expenditure . . . . . The fact of Umer's taking up some contracts may be held established but the more important point with regard to this is whether he gained or lost upon such contracts. That point has not been handled and the burden of proving gain lay on the defendants. That burden has not been discharged. That being so, the only reasonable inference that can be raised is that the acquisitions were with common funds from the profits of the lands originally held and the plaintiff would be entitled to share in such acquisitions."

In our opinion this is applying the principles of Hindu Law with a vengeance. Even according to the Mitakshara Law the plaintiff would have been called upon to give prima facie proof that the property acquired by Haji Umer was joint family property although the plaintiff might have in that case been able to discharge the burden by proving that Haji Umer was the manager of the joint family and possessed a nucleus from which he could have acquired that property. The plaintiff was fully alive to the necessity on his part to prove that there was a nucleus of the joint property in the possession of Haji Umer from which he could have made his subsequent acquisition. He accordingly stated in the plaint that the deceased had left moveable property and cattle of considerable value He, however, failed to establish it and the income, if any, out of agricultural lands was in no way sufficient to warrant the inference that it formed a nucleus of the subsequent acquisitions by Haji Umer. But apart from this, the learned Judge was not dealing with the case of a Hindu family. He was dealing with the case of a Mahomedan family pure and simple. There is no such thing as "joint family property" amongst them. Mohideen Bibi v. Mear Saheb (1) And in the absence of any allegation much less proof that according to an immemorial custom the parties had adopted the principles of Hindu Law, the learned Judge was bound to apply the principles of Mahomedan Law in determining the claim of the plaintiff: Vazir v. Dwarka Mal (2). No question could therefore possibly arise that items 1 and 2 were acquired and possessed by Haji Umer on behalf of all the heirs

Apart from the fact that there was no proof that Haji Umer possessed emoluments accruing from the lands of Haji Mahomed sufficient to acquire items 1 and 2, he could not be said to have held such emoluments as the agent of his coheirs or to have purchased from such emoluments properties as their agent. In order to succeed in getting a share of the immovable properties subsequently acquired by Haji Umer and the cash and moveable property he died possessed of, it was incumbent on the plaintiff to have averred and strictly proved that such properties were acquired and possessed by Haji Umer either under an express or implied agreement on behalf of himself and the plaintiff and other coheirs, and that he had agreed to account to them in respect thereof. The learned pleader asked us to read para. 6 of the plaint in a manner as to show that an implied agreement was pleaded by him, and has argued that there is evidence in support of it. We have gone through the evidence very carefully and we cannot find anything in it to suggest that any implied agreement was either set up or proved All that we have from the witnesses on behalf of the plaintiff is a general statement that the parties lived and messed together, and that all the properties were joint, that is to say, evidence which might fairly have been given in support of a case of parties governed by Hindu Law. Furthermore the evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiff is not convincing. It is too vague in its nature and is of persons who are deeply interested in the plaintiff. On the other hand, the evidence adduced by the defendant is more reliable and consists of respectable men, one of whom was Mr. Shersing, a Deputy Collector for a number of years in the district where the lands were situated. It is clear from his evidence that he was given to understand by the plaintiff himself that he had been living separately from Haji Umer for a number of years before his death. There is also abundant evidence to prove conclusively that the plaintiff and Haji Umer had independent business each on his own account, Haji Umer taking up fish and forest contracts and agricultural leases on his own account, maintaining a separate banking account of his own in which he had such a large sum of money as Rs. 30,000 and keeping separate accounts with diverse people in his own name and that the plaintiff took some small petty contracts on his own account, maintained separate accounts with Banias and lived more or less a poor life and at times worked as a hari.

On the evidence we have no doubt that for a number of years the plaintiff had been excluded from the enjoyment of his ancestral lands. The plaintiff's case therefore both on the allegations as contained in para. 6 of the plaint as also on the further ground, assuming that it had been alleged that there was an express or implied agreement between the parties in respect of subsequent acquisitions must fail. We accordingly hold that the plaintiff has no claim whatsoever either to the cash of Rs. 30,000 or the other moveable property left by Haji Umer deceased or the lands purchased by him in his own name or in the name of his son. The plaintiff's case in respect of all these properties therefore fails. With regard to the lands which were originally owned by Haji Mahomed and continued to be in the possession of Haji Umer up to his death, the case of the plaintiff stands on a different footing. He and Haji Umer were co-owners thereof and the defendants had to prove that the plaintiff had lost his rights therein by adverse possession. Now, it is well settled that in order that possession of one co-owner may be adverse to the other, there must be on the part of the co-owner setting up adverse possession a disclaimer of the other's right by an open and unequivocal assertion of a hostile title : A. I R. 1928 Madras p. 652 ; mere entry of name in the revenue registers being insufficient : Than Gyaung v. Ma Lun Baw (3) and mere non-enjoyment of the produce being equally insufficient : Mt. Dhaghari v. Mt. Khatun (4) In the present case not only there is no evidence of a disclaimer of the title of the plaintiff, but we have a clear admission contained in Exs. 189 to 192 suits filed by Haji Umer in the year 1904 and 1912 that the plaintiff was a co-owner with him in certain survey numbers which had been inherited by them and some of those survey numbers are the subject matter of the present suit. The present suit was filed in 1921. No question can therefore possibly arise that Haji Umer had acquired an exclusive title to them by adverse possession. The plaintiff is therefore entitled to a share therein.

The burden of proving his claim to items 4 to 6 was equally on the plaintiff and he has failed to discharge it. S. 56, Bombay Land Revenue Code as amended by Act 6 of 1901 has placed fallow forfeited lands disposed of (a) by sale on account of the defaulter, (b) by restoration to him of the said lands, (c) by grant to strangers, and (d) by reservation as Government waste lands on the same level. The grant of fallow forfeited land to Haji Umer subsequent to 1901 was, in the absence of any other circumstance, a grant to him personally, and this was the more so in the case of survey numbers granted to him on restricted tenure. In order to attract the applicability of S. 90, Trust Act, it was incumbent on the plaintiff to allege and prove as a fact that Haji Umer by availing himself of the position of a co-owner had gained an advantage in derogation of the rights of the plaintiff. If Haji Umer had intentionally allowed the survey numbers to be forfeited in order to obtain a grant from Government in his own name it would have been another matter. In that case, probably on the strength of the decision in Deo Nandan Prasad v. Janki Singh (5) the plaintiff might have succeeded in getting a share therein. But that is not the case here. On the other hand, if the plaintiff's case was that Haji Umer had, as a matter of fact, applied for grant of fallow forfeited survey numbers on behalf of himself and on behalf of his cosharers it was incumbent on the plaintiff to place on record sufficient materials to prove that case. All that we have on the record are: (a) the ijazatnamas granted by Government, (b) the kabuliats executed by Haji Umer in favour of Government, and (c) certain entries in the revenue records prior to 1914 which contain in the words "mukhyakhatedar."

Now, the ijazatnamas are clearly made out in the name of Haji Umer and do not help the plaintiff. The kabuliats are on a printed form which a grantee is required to execute whether the grant be made to him in his personal capacity or on behalf of himself and others The same form is required to be executed by a manager of a Hindu joint family in his capacity as such and a non-Hindu. It is for the protection of Government and purports to bind the grantee and his present and future co-occupants to pay Government assessment and to be bound by the terms of of the grant. No inference can therefore be drawn one way or the other in consequence of the kabuliats having been executed by Haji Umer that he obtained the grants on behalf of himself and the plaintiff. The entries in the revenue registers showing the name of Haji Umer all appear in registers maintained by Government prior to 1914 that is prior to the amendment of S. 135, Bombay Land Revenue Code. In the new register kept after 1914, Haji Umer is shown as the sole khatedar. The tapedar has explained that the expression "mukhya khatedar" was after that date confined to entries relating to lands possessed by members of a joint Hindu family and that in the case of non-Hindus the names of all the co-occupants in each survey number were maintained in the registers. The entries exhibited by the plaintiff do not therefore help him.

The learned pleader has stated that the plaintiff was not in a position to adduce further evidence as the applications alleged to have been made by Haji Umer are said to have been destroyed. But if the plaintiff has delayed in bringing his case to Court, he has to thank himself for this evidence not being forthcoming. Under the circumstances, we are afraid we cannot allow the plaintiff a share in any of the fallow forfeited lands which have been regranted subsequent to 1901. The case of the plaintiff with regard to mohag and alluvial lands granted in lieu of eroded lands is still weaker. None of the co-owners had any right to mohag lands being granted to them. Assuming that certain mohag lands were granted to Haji Umer, they were granted to him in his own right and not in his right as co-owner of the lands possessed by him. It is also clear from the evidence that the katcha lands were held on a temporary lease and if such lands were eroded no presumption can arise that other lands which were granted on similar temporary leases were granted by Government to Haji Umer in lieu of the eroded lands The plaintiff's case therefore fails in respect of the property in suit except in respect of lands possessed by Haji Mahomed and lands fallow forfeited and regranting prior to 1901 and which have continued to remain in the possession of Haji Umer.

We therefore vary the decree of the lower Court and pass a preliminary decree in favour of the plaintiff only in respect of those lands In view of the above finding, the parties have put in the following consent application showing what survey numbers have to be partitioned between the parties and there will be a decree accordingly :

The following survey Nos. to be partitioned. All are in Deh Shahpur : S. Nos. 3, 4, 48, 49, 50, 90, 94, 95 and 160,"

"If S. No, 25, Deh Shahpur, has been in the possession of Haji Umer and the defendants after him since the death of Haji Mahomed or if this S. No. was fallow forfeited and regranted before 5th October 1901, and has been in the like possession ever since, and still in possession of the defendants, this number also should be partitioned."

"In addition to the above, the S. Nos. in suit in Dehs Kabjo Kharijani and Savri are to be partitioned and no others."

The plaintiff will also be entitled to mesne profits on his share in the above lands from the date of suit till partition, but he will have to account for the allowance which he has received unde the order of this Court pending the disposal of this appeal from the other side.

In the end Mr. Gopaldas has contended that as pending the appeal one of the sisters has died and as the plaintiff is her sole legal representative, he should also get her share. On the other hand, Mr. Elphinston has contended that a deed of gift was executed by the sister in favour of defendant 1, and that therefore the plaintiff has no claim to her share. We are afraid we cannot go into this question at this stage but we leave it open to the trial Court to adjudicate upon these adverse claims on a proper application being made in that behalf. With regard to costs, we think that taking into consideration the fact that the plaintiff has succeeded only in a very small part of the claim put forward by him he should bear his own costs and in addition thereto bear half the costs of the other throughout

First Appeal No. 17 of 1926, Decided on 29th July 1929.

 (a) Transfer of Property Act, S. 3—Attestation of witnesses—Writer of mortgage-deed and Sub-Registrar are attesting witnesses—Transfer of Property Act, S. 59.

The writer of a mortgage-deed, who deposes that after he had written the document, the executant admitted the contents of the deed and signed it, and the Sub-Registrar who authenticates the mortgage-deed after the executant has acknowledged his signature, are both, for the purpose of proving a document attesting witnesses within the meaning S. 3. A. I. R. 1921 Cal 208, Rel. on. [P 218 C 1]

(b) Hindu Law—Joint family business—Business started by Hindu manager is not ancestral business—Use of minor's share in trade cannot make minor a partner.

A business started by a Hindu manager of a coparcenary is not an ancestral business in which his minor sons are interested, even if it be started out of ancestral funds. The trade must be ancestral or at any rate it must be a trade in which all the members of a joint family have interest; merely by using a minor's share in trade a father or other manager cannot make the minor a partner and liable for trade debts: 34 Bom. 72, Rel. on. [P 219 C 1, 2]

Dipchand Chandumal for Appellants.

Tolasing K. Advani and Kimatrai Bhojraj—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiff-appellants sued to recover Rs. 6,861-14-0, which they claimed was due to them from defendants-respondents 1 and 2 on a mortgage executed by defendant 1 for himself and his minor son defendant 2 in favour of Jhamandas defendant 9, the mortgage having been legally transferred to them the plaintiffs by the original mortgagee.

Defendant 1 raised several pleas principally that the mortgage-deed had not been executed for the benefit of his family Defendant 2 who was represented by the Nazir of the Court as guardian ad litem, pleaded that his father defendant 1 had no right to mortgage his share in the ancestral properties, that the money had been borrowed for hazardous speculations, and that the alleged debt was not an antecedent debt He pleaded ignorance of the mortgage.

The principal issues with which we are now concerned were Nos. 5 and 8.

The learned First Class Sub-Judge has held on issue 5 that it has not been proved that defendant 1 executed the mortgage in suit, and on issue 8 that the defendant 2 is not liable for the amount in suit. He has held that defendant 1 is personally liable for the debt, and has made a personal decree against him for the amount claimed with costs and interest.

In appeal the first question we have to decide is embodied in issue 5 of the lower Court and the question raised in this issue is whether the document in suit created a mortgage, that is to say, was it signed by defendant 1 and attested as required by S. 59, T. P. Act. S. 59, T. P. Act, requires the attestation of two witnesses and the learned Sub-Judge following the Privy Council case of Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir (1), rightly decided that the attestation of a mortgage-deed within the meaning of the section must be made by the witnesses signing their names after seeing the actual execution.

In this case the evidence is that they signed without seeing the execution and accordingly he has held that the deed did not amount to a mortgage. But, since he decided the point, the law has been changed by Acts 27 of 1926 and 10 of 1927, which provide that "attested" means and shall be deemed always to have meant attested by two or more witnesses each of whom has seen the executant sign or has received from him a personal acknowledgement of his signature, but it shall not be necessary that more than one of the witnesses shall have been present at the same time.

Thus it must be shown that there has been attestation by two witnesses, and the mode of proof varies. Against an executant nothing is required except his admission. Against other parties one of the attesting witnesses must be called and examined unless (a) the document be registered and (b) execution not specifically claimed. This is the effect of S. 68, Evidence Act, as amended by Act 31 of 1926. In other cases the execution can be proved by any legal evidence. In the present case the document is registered, it purports to have been attested by two witnesses and there has been no specific denial of execution, so all that we have to see is whether in the circumstances of the case it is proved that Topandas executed it and acknowleged his signature to the attesting witnesses. The evidence consists of the depositions of the writer and of one attesting witness Manghumal. The former has deposed that after he had written the document Topandas, defendant, admitted the contents and signed it, and that the attesting witnesses were called later. Manghumal says that he attested at the instance of defendant 1.

This appears to us to be sufficient. After so many years it cannot be expected that Manghumal could remember the exact words used, but his impression was that Topandas asked him to attest his signature, and that amounted to a personal acknowledgement, especially as we know independently from the writer that it was his signature. Half the requirements of S. 59 are thus satisfied, and the other half are satisfied by the writer's signature on the document: for though he signed as writer and not as a witness he was in fact a witness of the execution. This is the view taken by the Calcutta High Court in Jagannath Khan v. Bajrang Das (2). The Allahabad and Patna Courts have taken a different view, but with respect we think that the Calcutta view is sound and equitable. In any case the document bears also the signature of the Sub-Registrar made at the time of registration and this also satisfies the requirements of the present law, for if the executant was the man who acknowledged the signature before him the Sub-Registrar was an attesting witness On this point I think that the evidence of the executant himself is sufficient. He has deposed that he went before the Sub-Registrar and there can be no doubt on the subject. It follows that it has been proved that the document was executed by defendant 1, and attested by at least three witnesses; and it is, therefore, a mortgage-deed.

The only other question is whether the document binds the share of defendant 2 who was at the time of execution a minor and member of the family of defendant 1. On this point we have heard a very interesting legal argument, but before discussing the legal aspect of the case I must discover the facts. The father of Topandas (defendant 1) was a money lender, and Topandas went to Bokhara for trade and on his return after his father's death started trading in grain. He suffered losses and borrowed money. It is proved by evidence both oral and documentary that he used to do forward business but there is nothing to show that this business amounted to gambling. It has frequently been ruled that "forward" transactions, though necessarily speculative, do not necessarily fall within the definition of gambling and no authority is needed on this point. It is also in evidence that he used to drink and play cards, but it has not been proved that the debt in suit was contracted for drink or gambling of this sort. The questions of fact which have been debated at the Bar are whether the grain business was ancestral and whether Topandas incurred the debt in suit to pay antecedent debts, or at any rate whether the lender Jhamandas made enquiries and was assured that the money was required for the payment of antecedent debts.

The first question presents no difficulty. One witness only has said that the father of Topandas was a grain merchant, but it is clear from the rest of the evidence that Topandas started dealing in grain after his father's death, with the money made by him abroad and the money left by his father. On the second point there is no reliable evidence. It was for the plaintiff the mortgagee's assignee to prove that the money was wanted to pay debts, or at least that the lender made adequate enquiry and was satisfied that this was the borrower's object. He has merely proved that Topandas was in debt. This is the opinion of the learned Sub-Judge, and it has not been denied that he was in debt. But there is no clear evidence that any debts were actually paid off out of the mortgage money and the learned Sub-Judge has not believed Jhamandas's statement that he made enquiries. In this obviously he was correct. There is nothing in the document about debt or enquiries; and since the only object of such enquiries is to safeguard the lender, the silence of the document seems to us to be conclusive. Normally all that a lender is interested in, is the sufficiency of his security, and if Jhamandas made enquiries he must have done so to satisfy himself that Topandas was justified in mortgaging his son's share of the family property If he had done so it is inconceivable that he would have neglected to see that the deed embodied a recital of the debts to be paid off. Moreover, considering the nature of the business there is no probability that Topandas required the money to pay his debts. The accounts that have been filed show that he was obliged from time to time to pay earnest money to bind contracts in "futures"; in fact within 15 days of this loan he paid out Rs. 6,600-0-0 to witness Tarachand, Rs. 600 0-0 on account of deposit and Rs. 6,000-0-0 on account of deposit of vaida commodity. Naturally a man who deals in " futures " will require ready money for his business, and it is at least as likely that he borrowed the Rs. 5,000-0-0 in suit for the future business as to pay past debts; in fact it is more likely as we know that he used the Rs. 6,600-0-0 mentioned for his trade and we do not know that he paid any debts.

On these facts the claim of the plaintiff to a mortgage charge on the share of the minor coparcener in the mortgaged property must fail. A business started by a Hindu manager of a coparcenery is not an ancestral business in which his minor sons are interested, even if it be started out of ancestral funds. It is stated by Dr. Gour (Hindu Code Edn 1919 p. 575) that " it is only when the family as a whole or through any of its members continues an ancestral trade out of its joint family funds that it is subject to the law of the joint family necessarily accommodated to that of partnerships."

The trade must be ancestral or at any rate it must be a trade in which all the members of a joint family have entered: vide Raghunath v. Bank of Bombay (3), which is still an authority on this point and no authority has been cited for the startling proposition that, by using a minor's share in trade, a father or other manager makes the minor a partner and liable for trade debts.

It follows from this that the money borrowed for the purpose of the business started by Topandas was not money borrowed for a family purpose. To establish the right of Topandas to mortgage his minor sons' share it was, therefore, necessary for the plaintiff to prove that he used the money to pay his antecedent debts. This principle has been laid down in innumerable cases and I need only cite those of Sahu Ramchandra v. Bhupsing (4) and Brij Narain v. Mangal Prasad (5).

The appeal must, therefore, fail as against the minor defendant, in view of the findings that the loan was not for family necessity or to pay antecedent separate debts of the father. The only question that remains is what sort of decree should be made. We are asked on the one hand to make a conditional decree under O. 34, R. 6, against the father's share and against the son's share in the event of the proceeds of the sale of his share being insufficient and the authority of Kandasami v. Kappa Mooppan (6), is relied on The ground for this demand is that, though the son's share is not bound by the mortgage, he will be under a pious obligation to pay the balance of the mortgage debt qua debt unless it is illegal or immoral. In this case, however, though the defendant pleaded that the debt was of that nature, the lower Court has recorded no findings on the point. We think it best to leave this question to be decided when it arises in execution rather than to remand the case which is an old one.

RUPCHAND AND BARLEE, A. J. Cs.

Santdas Gobindram—Appellants.

v.

Secy. of State—Respondent.

First Appeal No. 150 of 1925, Decided on 14th May 1929.

Railways Act, S. 57—S. 57 modifies the rule that carrier must stop goods on notice by consignor—Railway Company acting under S. 57—Contract Act, S. 99 has no effect—Railway failing to observe both Contract Act. S. 99 and Railways Act, S. 57—Demurrage cannot be claimed from consignee.

The rule that upon a consignor informing a carrier that he is an unpaid vendor and requesting him to stop the goods in transit, the latter is bound to do so, is modified by S. 57, which gives to the railway administration the right to ignore the notice and to make delivery to the consignee of goods. A railway administration may accept notice from the consignor of goods to stop the goods delivered in transit, or it may act under S. 57, in which case there is no stoppage in transit as defined in the Contract Act, S. 99. But if the railway administration fails to act under the provisions of the Contract Act in giving effect to the notice of stoppage in transit and likewise fail to act under the special provisions of S. 57, they will have to take the consequences upon themselves and are not entitled to claim any demurrage from the consignee: Ex parte Golding, 13 *Ch. Rupchand, A. J. C.—The facts of this case are hardly in dispute. A waggon load of tooria seed was despatched from Jhandialla railway station to the plaintiffs at Karachi. The railway receipt which is dated 1st March 1923, was made out in the name of the plaintiffs both as the consignor and the consignee of the goods, and the railway receipt forwarded to them by one of their servants. On or about 6th March, one Jwalamal Nathumal of Jhandialla claiming to be an unpaid vendor of the goods requested the Station Master Jhandialla to stop the goods in transit. He claimed to be the person who had actually handed over the goods to the Station Master for despatch. Thereupon the Station Master, Jhandialla, sent the following telegram to the District Traffic Superintendent, Karachi :

" Detain delivery of 174 bags tooria R. R. No. 70665 of 1st March 1923 as desired by Jawalamal who tendered forwarding note in favour of Seth Gobindram Santram the sender and consignee : Station Master."

The reply sent by the Distric Traffic Superintendent, Karachi, has not been exhibited, but its purport appears sufficiently from the letter sent by him to the plaintiff on 20th March, to which I shall presently refer. On 16th March, the waggon arrived at Karachi, but it was not put along side the plinth of the plaintiffs for the purpose of being unloaded. In answer to the plaintiffs' letter protesting against non-delivery of the goods, the District Traffic Superintendent wrote a letter dated 20th March, which is as follows :

" . . . . . I beg to inform you that it is admitted that the invoice and railway receipt showed your client as consignors and consignee Santdas Gobindram, but the fact still remains that the goods were tendered at Jhandialla for despatch by entirely a different party Jwalamal Nathumal who had also presented the forwarding note. The railway is therefore quite justified in withholding delivery of the goods in transit under the instructions of the said party since he declared that he is an unpaid vendor. In this connexion I would like to draw your attention to S. 57, Railways Act,9 of 1890. I have, however, served the seller (unpaid vendor) with a registered notice to produce a Court's certificate or injunctions in support of the detention of goods and stoppage of delivery to the invoiced consignee within 15 days. Until the expiry of the period prescribed in my notice, I regret, I cannot allow delivery to your client. In case the seller (unpaid vendor) fails to comply with the notice served on him, I will issue instructions for delivery being made to your client on the distinct understanding that all charges including demurrage, wharfage etc. due to the railway will be recovered at the time of delivery of goods. In this connexion I draw your attention to Ss. 55 and 56, Railways Act. 'As regards deterioration, damage etc. to goods, I reiterate that the railway is under no circumstances responsible for the same, since the delivery has been withheld under the instructions of the seller of the goods who is an unpaid vendor."

As the result of a subsequent interview by the plaintiffs' pleader with the District Traffic Superintendent, the plaintiffs took delivery of the goods on 24th March under protest and on payment of Rs. 406 as demurrage which was said to have accrued between 16th and 24th March.

Thereafter the plaintiffs instituted this suit for recovery of (a) Rs. 406-2-0 paid as demurrage ; (b) Rs 233-5-9 said to be loss due to short weight, and (c) Rs. 220-11-0 said to be loss due to depreciation of goods during the period of detention The learned trial Judge dismissed the suit.

Several interesting questions of law have been argued on both sides. But the question appears to me to be one of fact pure and simple.

Taking the case of the defendant at its best, I am prepared to assume that Jawalamal was an unpaid vendor, that he had exercised the right of stoppage in transitu and had given notice to the defendant in that behalf. The question arises whether the railway administration accepted such notice as valid and acted upon it,

If they had done so, their obligation to deliver the goods to the consignee under the railway receipt was at an end. They were in that case bound to deliver the goods according to the directions of the unpaid vendor. In that case it would have been equally within their province to claim a lien on the goods for demurrage and for wharfage as the case may be accruing due from the date of the goods having been stopped in transitu up to the date on which the unpaid vendor made arrangements to take delivery of the goods from the railway : Booth Steamship Co. v. Cargo Flot Iron Co. (1).

In the present case, the claim of the railway administration would have been for demurrage, and not for wharfage, that is to say, claim for compensation for undue detention of the waggon, treating it as a profit-earning chattel : G. W. Ry. Co. v. Phillips (2) But the railway administration were doubtful about the rights, if any, of Jwalamal Nathumal over the goods and were evidently not prepared to accept the risk of treating him as an unpaid vendor. Before they had received any protest from the plaintiffs, they wrote sua motu to Jawalamal that they shall not do anything more than detain delivery for 15 days so as to enable him to obtain an order from a competent Court requiring the railway administration to withhold delivery.

This was a half-hearted measure. It was neither here nor there. At the expiry of 15 days the railway administration removed the interim embargo they had placed on the goods and gave delivery to the plaintiffs on the strength of the original contract of carriage evidenced by the railway receipt, and not in pursuance of any subsequent directions given to them by the unpaid vendor to deliver the goods to the plaintiffs as his agent. The result is that on the one hand they recognized their contractual liability to deliver the goods to the plaintiffs, on the other, they levied from them demurrage when not only the plaintiffs were in no way to blame for the undue detention of the waggon, but, were clamouring for delivery.

The learned counsel for the defendant has been unable to quote any precedent where a carrier has been able to claim demurrage resulting from his own fault in failing to give effect to a notice of stoppage of goods in transitu and requiring the alleged unpaid vendor to obtain an order from the Court in the meantime detaining the goods only temporarily.

It has been faintly suggested that the railway administration were kind to the plaintiffs in giving them delivery of the goods. We are, however, not concerned with the underlying motive of the railway administration but with the question whether their action was justified in law, and if not, what was its effect on the legal rights of the parties to the action. The procedure adopted by the railway administration in this case appears to me to be unwarranted by any principle of law.

Two plain courses were open to the D. T. S. when he received the notice of Jwalamal to stop the goods in transitu assuming that his request amounted to a valid notice. If he thought he was bound by it, he should have given effect to it unconditionally, and should not have ordered an ad interim detention of the goods. If, on the other hand, he had any doubts as to its validity he should have acted under the provisions of S. 57, Railways Act, which reads as follows:

"Where any animals, goods or sale proceeds in the possession of a railway administration are claimed by two or more persons, or the ticket or receipt given for the animals or goods is not forthcoming, the railway administration may withhold delivery of the animals, goods or sale proceeds until the person entitled in its opinion to receive them has given an indemnity, to the satisfaction of the railway administration against the claims of any other person with respect to the animals, goods or sale proceeds."

This section has been enacted to meet doubtful cases like the present. If the D T. S had acted under this section and there was delay on the part of the plaintiffs in giving the required indemnity cadit questio they would have been liable for the undue detention of the goods If, on the other hand, they had furnished the required indemnity, no demurrage would have occurred As the railway administration failed to act under the provisions of the Contract Act in giving effect to the notice of stoppage in transitu and likewise failed to act under the special provisions of S. 57, Railways Act, they have to thank themselves for the consequences I hold that the plaintiffs are entitled to refund of Rs. 406 0-0.

In order to establish their claim in respect of the other two items the plaintiffs had to prove that the loss was due to detention of the goods between 16th and 23rd March. This they have failed to do. There is no question of the contents having been removed during this period. The shortage in weight is due to driage of tooria and this may equally have occurred during the first fortnight

There is no evidence to prove that there was any deterioration of goods due to sweating or due to the goods being kept closed in the waggon. There is also no evidence to show in what condition the tooria was when loaded. Even the person who analysed the goods after delivery has not been called The plaintiff's claim in respect of both these items therefore fails.

For these reasons I would pass a decree in favour of the plaintiffs for Rs. 406-0-0 with interest at six per cent per annum from date of suit to payment with costs on that amount throughout, and dismiss the plaintiff's claim in respect of the remaining two items with costs thereon throughout.

Barlee, A. J. C.— The appellants a Karachi firm, sued the defendants as representing the N. W. R. Administration, to recover money which they had been required to pay as wharfage, and also compensation for damage done to their goods, consigned by them, it was alleged, by rail from the Punjab to Karachi in 1924. The defence was that the plaintiff had not been the cosignor but that the goods had been consigned by one Jwalasingh and that they had been delayed in transit because Jwalasingh had instructed the Station Master of Jhandialla Station, the despatching station, to withhold delivery on the ground that he was an unpaid vendor.

The principal issues framed in the trial Court were these. (1) Who were the consignors of the goods in question? (2) Did Jwalamal instruct the defendant to withhold delivery? (3) If so, was the defendant justified in doing so? (4) Was the defendant entitled to claim demurrage? (actually the claim was for wharfage or rent for the use of the truck) (5) Did the goods deteriorate?

The learned trial Judge held that Jwalamal was the consignor, that he instructed the defendant to withhold delivery, and that the defendants was justified in doing so. In consequence he decided that nothing was due to the plaintiff.

These findings are attached in the petition of appeal where the principal contentions are (1) that since the railway receipt shows the plaintiff both as consignor and consignee the learned Judge erred in holding that the man who merely arranged for the despatch was the consignor, (2) that the notice given to the defendant by Jwalamal was insufficient in law to justify the stoppage of the goods Mr. Elphinston's reply on the first point is that the case is analogous to that of ex parte Golding (3), G. D. & Co sold goods to K who resold to T. G. D. & Co. shipped the goods in the name of T as consignor and consignee On K's failure G. D & Co. were allowed the right of stoppage in transit. Apart altogether from authority it is clear on the evidence that the name written in the consignment note as that of the consignor is not necessarily that of the actual consignor and the Station

Master in this case was justified in regarding Jwalasingh as the consignor.

The other point, too, has no substance. It is true that a consignor, to justify his action, has to prove that his consignee is insolvent or about to become insolvent. But we are not considering not what gives a right of stoppage, but what is a sufficient notice, and it has been held in an English case that on a consignor informing the carrier that he is an unpaid vendor and requesting him to stop the goods in transit, the latter is bound to do so: Tigress case (4). Whether in India he is bound to obey or not will be considered later. It seems to me to be the question on the answer to which the decision of this case depends, and I need only say here, in answer to the argument now under consideration, that at least a carrier is entitled to obey such a notice

But the grounds of appeal set out in the appeal memo are not the grounds which have been taken in Court. The case for the plaintiff as now put forward is this

"Jwala Singh consigned the goods to the plaintiff, who became the owner, as soon as the carrier received possession, and on receiving the railway receipt became entitled to take delivery, on payment of any rate, terminal or other charge due from him (S. 55 I. R. A").

He was always ready to take possession, and the delay which occurred was not caused by him. In consequence the wharfage charged for detention of the waggon was not due from him, and should not have been recovered from him.

This argument seems to me to be unanswerable. The delay was due to the action of the consignor, and to justify the recovery of the charges from the plaintiff, the defendant has to show either that he was entitled to recover from the plaintiff money due from the consignor under the terms of the contract of carriage, or that he is justified in retaining the money recovered under a fresh contract. No attempt has been made to establish that the plaintiff was agent of the consignor, and I need not go into this. The rights of a holder of the railway receipt are clearly defined by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ramdas v. Amarchand & Co. (5). So the defendant has to show that the plaintiff's rights as consignee were at an end and that he received the goods under a fresh contract.

The defendant's case, if I have understood it correctly, is briefly that the right of the plaintiff to take delivery was divested by the stoppage in transit. The stoppage was effected by the notice given by the consignor, and thereafter the defendant, as carrier, held the goods on behalf of the consignor The plaintiff was in the position of an owner whose goods had been lawfully bailed, and he was not entitled to recover them until he paid the bailee's charges. Having paid them, and having received the goods in consideration of that payment, he is not entitled to recover them.

The objection to this argument is that the District Traffic Suprintendent never in fact recognised the consignor's right to stop the goods in transit A letter addressed by him to the plaintiff is on record and it shows that he had refused to recognize the consignor's notice as effecting a stoppage in transit, and giving him a right to delivery He wrote that he had given him notice to produce a Court's certificate or injunction in support of the detention and promised delivery to the consignee in the event of the consignor failing to comply with that notice. He invited attention to S. 57, Railways Act, which provides that.

"Where any animals, goods or . . . in the possession of a railway administration are claimed by two or more persons . . . the railway administration may withhold delivery . . . until the person entitled in its opinion to receive them has given an indemnity against the claims of any other person."

Clearly he was acting under this section.

The question then is what was the effect of this procedure, that is to say, how far, if at all, the rights of the consignor and consignee were affected by it. The learned counsel for the defendant has relied on the Tigress case (4) which decides that the right to stop goods in transit "means not only the right to countermand delivery to the vendee but to order delivery to the vendor."

If this is the law which applies to Indian Railway Administrations, the

(4) [1863] 32 L. J. Adm. 97=11 W. R. 538=9 Jur. (n.s.) 961=8 L. T. 117.

(5) A. I. R. 1916 P.C. 7=40 Bom. 690=43 I. A. 164 (P.C.).

plaintiff's right was divested by the notice, and the District Traffic Superintendent could do nothing to prevent the result. But with respect I venture the opinion that this rule is modified by S 57, Railways Act, which gave the District Traffic Superintendent the right to ignore the notice and to make delivery to the plaintiff. Whenever there are two persons who claim delivery, a railway administration has a right to use this section, and to decide between them which is in its opinion "entitled to possession" This seems to me to be quite inconsistent with the rule in the Tigress case (4) which gives a carrier no choice in the matter but makes him a bailee for the consignor. To put the matter quite shortly, it cannot be supposed that the legislature has given railway administrations leave to hand over goods to persons who have no right to take delivery, and it follows that the section by implication modifies the rule in the Tigress case (4). A railway administration may accept notice, in which case the consignee's rights are divested, or it may act under S. 57, in which case there is no stoppage in transit as defined in the Contract Act, and the consignee's right is kept in abeyance I would only add that the provisions in the section about indemnity does not seem to affect this view. It is one thing to say that an administration may be liable for damages to a consignor who proves that he has suffered damage, and another thing to say that the mere disobedience of his orders gives him a right to damages.

For these reasons I agree with my learned brother that the plaintiff-appellant must be allowed to recover the wharfage paid by him. He had a right to delivery, and that right was not divested by the consignor's notice. It must be assumed, therefore, that delivery was made under the contract of carriage, and he was not liable to pay anything for the delay either on his own account or on account of the consignor. I agree with the order proposed by my learned brother.

Bombay Local Boards Act, S. 27—Illegal election—Chairman and Vice-Chairman to continue to perform duty till new Board begins to function—Balance of convenience is on the side of granting injunction and should not, therefore, be refused.

Where it is clear that if the new Board is not legally constituted its acts will be ultra vires and that if it be restrained from functioning, the duties of the Board cannot be carried on at all, the Chairman and Vice-Chairman of the old Board should continue to perform their routine duties until the new Board begins to function, and in such a case the balance of convenience is on the side of a person who has brought a suit for a declaration that the election to the Board is illegal and for an injunction to prevent the Board functioning, temporary injunction should, therefore, be granted. [P 225 C 1]

Fatehchand Assudamal— for Appellants.

Tejmal Hassamal—for Respondents.

Judgment.—A suit has been filed by one Mahomed Azim in the Court of the 1st Class Sub-Judge of, Hyderabad against the District Local Board, Nawabshah, and others apparently for a declaration that the election to the School Board of Nawabshah District was illegal and for an injunction to prevent the Board functioning. A temporary injunction was sought by the plaintiff and was given by the Court. But on the question of injunction being heard inter partes, the learned 1st Class Sub-Judge discharged it. His reason was that though he felt doubtful whether the old School Board could legally continue, he was afraid that the injunction would "paralyse in toto the machinery of the School Board," a result seriously detrimental to the interest of education and out of all proportion to the abstract sentimental satisfaction to the plaintiff of having worsted his adversaries so far.

The ground on which the plaintiff claimed that the election had been invalid was that, though he personally obtained more votes than the candidate below him, that candidate had been declared elected member because he was a Hindu. Now there is a rule that of the elected general members two must be Hindus, therefore, the first two Hindus on the list had to be declared elected whether they obtained more votes than the plaintiff or not. But what he alleges is that the third Hindu who had no special rights was declared elected though he had received a fewer votes than himself.

It appears, then, that what the plaintiff has complained of, is not that the election was illegal but that he himself is being refused admission to the Board though he was duly elected. But the result is the same because presumably if a candidate who is not elected is appointed to the Board, the Board will not be legally constituted as required by the Act, and its proceedings will be invalid.

Naturally the learned 1st Class Sub-Judge has not given any finding on the main question as to whether the plaintiff was entitled to be appointed on the Board and obviously we cannot give opinion on the merits without prejudicing the case. The only question is whether the balance of convenience lies in maintaining the injunction, or rather re-issuing the temporary injunction or in refusing to do so. And in considering this matter, we have to consider what will be the probable result of either course of action. It is clear that if the new Board is not legally constituted its acts will be ultra vires. On the other hand if it be restrained from functioning, the duties of a Board cannot be carried on at all, for the old Board cannot function without running the same risk. But we find out though the duties cannot be performed by the old School Board, the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman of the old Board can continue to perform their routine duties until the new School Board begins to function. By Government Resolution No. 2534 dated 12th April published in the Bombay Government Gazette Part 1 of 19th April 1928, p. 714 a rule has been made under S. 27 of the Act which provides as follows :

" The term of office of the Chairman and Vice-Chairman shall be co-extensive with that of the School Board; provided that, if either of them resigns his office or ceases to be a member of the School Board a fresh election to fill up the vacancy shall be held, and provided further that, on the expiry of the term of office of a School Board, the Chairman and Vice-Chairman shall continue to perform the current administrative duties of their offices until such time as a new Chairman and Vice-Chairman shall have been duly elected and have taken charge of their duties."

We find then that though the old School Board will not be able to function their work, will not be paralysed, as supposed by the learned 1st Class Sub-Judge inasmuch as the Chairman and Vice-Chairman will be able to carry on the current duties of their office until such time as they hand over charge to the Chairman and Vice Chairman who are to be elected of the new Board when they are elected.

The balance of convonience is then on the side of the plaintiff or rather on the side of granting an injunction for in this we do not consider the plaintiff but the public benefit. We, therefore, reverse the order of the lower Court and direct that a temporary injunction should issue to be maintained until the case is decided. At the same time we suggest to the learned Sub-Judge, he should expedite the final disposal of the litigation to the best of his abilities so that the dead-lock may be removed as soon as possible. Costs of this application to be costs in the cause.

(b) Civil P.C., O. 22, R. 9—Order of abatement is appealable.

An order of abatement must necessarily be followed by a decree and even if no decree be drawn up through the fault of the Court, such order is appealable. [P 226 C 2, P 227 C 1]

(c) Interpretation of Statutes—Court.

It is not the function of a Court to speculate as to the meaning of the legislature but to determine the meaning of words used. Courts' duty is not to examine the law to see whether it is equitable or not but to interpret it giving the words their natural meaning even though the interpretation based on recognized principles leads to inequitable results. [P 226 C 2]

Tahilram Manram—for Appellant.

Tolasing K. Advani—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The respondent Tikamdas filed a suit for partnership accounts against the appellant and his father and brothers. The Joint Judge Shikarpur made a preliminary decree and Lilaram appealed against it, and again against the final decree But while the appeals were pending his father died, and the Joint Judge passed an order directing the appeals to abate because the appellant had not applied within 3 months to have the legal representatives of his deceased father put on the record In fact the legal representatives were already on the record as there were no nearer heirs than the appellant and his brothers who had been co-defendants in the suit. The question then is whether in such circumstances it is necessary for the plaintiff or an appellant to make an application under R. 4, O. 22 to join as parties, persons who are already on the record or whether it is the duty of the Court under R. 2 to make an entry to the effect that the right to defend survives to the surviving defendant or respondents alone. The answer to this question depends on the meaning of the word "survive" as used in R. 2. It is urged on the one hand by Mr Tolasing that it is here used in the technical sense, and that R. 2 is meant to apply only to such legal representatives as have acquired the rights of the deceased by survivorship such as trustees and executors, and not by inheritance; and on the other hand Mr. Tahilram contends that the word must be used in its ordinary sense of outliving. We think that this latter view is the correct one, firstly because the ordinary rule of interpretation obliges us to give the word the same meaning in R 2 as in Rr. 1, 3 and 4, and in these rules obviously it is not used as a term of art; and secondly because of the wording of R. 4 itself. It directs the Court to cause a person to be put on the record, and it is not possible for the Court to obey, if that person be already on the record. Admittedly all that a Court can do is to make a note against his name as provided by R. 2. I would add that the legislature is not likely to have framed the rules in this way, had it intended that a formal application must be made on the death of any party, were it not that such an argument and all a priori arguments of a like nature are in my opinion illegitimate. It is not the function of a Court to speculate as to the meaning of the legislature but to determine the meaning of the words used.

This appears to be the first time that this question has come before this Court directly, but there are several rulings of other High Courts on the subject and they differ. The view which we have adopted agrees with that of the Madras and Rangoon Courts and with the latest Lahore rulings. : see Achutan Nair v. Manavikraman (1), Maung Po v. Ma Shwe Ma (2), Gopaldas v. Mulchand (3). On the other side is the Patna Court; Lilo Sonar v. Jhagru Sahu (4), but the most interesting case is that of Gurdittamal v. Mahomed Khan (5), as in it alone have we been able to find any reasoned decision. The ratio decidendi was that legislature evidently intended to allow a legal representative to file a fresh pleading on being joined and that unless he is joined under R. 4 (1) he can have no right to do so under R. 4 (2). This may be correct, and it is possible that a defendant may be seriously prejudiced if on succeeding to the rights and liabilities of another he be not allowed to plead afresh. But with respect we consider that that is all beside the point. It is not our duty to examine the law with a view to seeing whether it is equitable or not. All that we have jurisdiction to do is to interpret it, and the fact that our interpretation may lead to inequitable results cannot justify us from departing from recognized principles and ignoring the natural meaning of words. It has been contended that no appeal lies to this Court, as the appellant had a remedy under O. 22, R. 9, which permits an application to the original Court in which a suit or appeal has abated to set aside the abatement. Mr. Tahilram replies that his application under R. 2

(1) A. I. R. 1929 Mad. 152=51 Mad. 847.
(2) A. I. R. 1925 Rang. 95=2 Rang. 445.
(3) A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 607=7 Lah. 399.
(4) A. I. R. 1925 Pat. 123=3 Pat. 859.
(5) A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 87.

not be considered to have been an application under R 9 since at the time, the time limit had been extended and he quotes A. I. R. 1924 Lahore 424. This appears to be correct : but there is another answer to the respondent's objection and that is that the order of abatement must necessarily have been followed by a decree and every decree is appealable. In fact it appears that no decree was drawn up, but that is the fault of the Court and the parties must not be prejudiced by the mistake of a Court. For these reasons we allow the appeals, and remand the cases for trial on the merits according to law.

Asiatic Petroleum Co. (India), Ltd.—Plaintiffs.

Hafiz Azeezudeen & Son and another—Defendants.

Suit No. 663 of 1927, Decided on 5th April 1929.

(a) Civil P. C., S. 20—Suit on contract—Court where agreement is accepted has jurisdiction.

In suits on contracts the making of the contract is part of the cause of action. The Courts within whose jurisdiction the agreements in suit are accepted have jurisdiction. [P 228 C 2]

(b) Civil P. C., S. 20—Parties cannot confer jurisdiction by agreement on Court when it does not possess it.

A clause in agreements which provided that all legal proceedings instituted by the company or the agent in connexion with or arising from the terms and conditions of the agreement were to be tried by the proper Courts in the place where the head-quarters of the company were situated would not confer any jurisdiction on a Court which had no jurisdiction. [P 229 C 2]

(c) Civil P. C., S. 20—Defendant agent of plaintiff to sell goods at M agreeing to make payments, be accountable and to report stock at Karachi and also agreeing to sue and be sued in Karachi Courts—All clauses read together conferred jurisdiction on Karachi Courts.

Defendant was the plaintiff's agent for the sale of the plaintiffs' goods in the district of Meerut. He had to remit sale proceeds to Karachi, to render accurate and sufficient account of sales of goods every month and to submit to the plaintiff at the end of each month an accurate report of stocks of goods belonging to the plaintiff. This agreement further specifically stated, that "the agent must submit at the end of each month to the company at Karachi" a certified statement detailing the property of the company and it contained the clause that all legal proceedings are to be instituted in Karachi.

Held : that the clauses relating to payment accountability, reporting or jurisdiction in the agreements should be read together and the Court in Karachi had jurisdiction. (1898), A.C. 524; A.I.R. 1924 All. 530, Dist. [P 229 C 2]

W. Chenney—for Plaintiff.

Kewalram Jethanand—for Defendants.

Judgment.—This is a suit filed by the plaintiffs to recover Rs. 22,935-5-1 from the defendants as due from the defendants under the agency accounts, viz., Rs. 16,127-8-5 under the Kerosine Oils Agency account, Rs. 6,264-9-11 under the Motor Spirit and Petroleum Products Agency account and Rs. 543-2 9 under the Liquid Fuel Agency account The plaintiffs's case is that the defendants acted as agents of the plaintiffs inter alia at Meerut for the sale of Kerosine Motor Spirit and Petroleum Products entrusted to them on the terms and conditions mentioned in the agreements entered into between the parties the last of such agreements being dated 24th July 1923 regarding the sale of kerosine oil, 23rd July 1923 regarding the sale of motor spirit and petroleum products and 18th March 1924 regarding the sale of liquid fuel. It was understood by the parties under the agreements that the defendants would render monthly to the plaintiffs at Karachi an account of the sales effected by the defendants and pay moneys due by the defendants to the plaintiffs at Karachi and defendants did in fact from time to time render accounts. The three agencies of the defendants were terminated in March 1927. The defendants have failed to pay Rs. 22,935-5-1 which they owe. The plaintiffs contend that the Karachi Court has jurisdiction to try the suit because the agreements were accepted at Karachi, the defendants agreed to render accounts and pay moneys due from them at Karachi and the agreements provided that all suits were to be filed in Karachi. By consent issue 2 is being tried as preliminary issue. It is as follows:

1. Has this Court jurisdiction to try the suit (covers paras. 4, 5 and 9 of the plaint and paras. 4 and 5 of the written statement). With regard to issue 2, the plaintiff mainly relies on the fact, that the three agreements were signed on behalf of the plaintiff at Karachi that under the agreements for kerosine and petrol, the agents undertook to remit all proceeds of sale to the company to render at the end of each month to the company an accurate and sufficient account of the sales, and to submit at the end of each month a full and accurate report showing the condition of all stocks of oil and other property committed to their charge and that under the agreement for liquid fuel the agent undertook to make true payment and delivery of the sale proceeds and of all moneys and securities received by him on behalf of the company as and when required by the company and to submit to the company at Karachi at the end of each month a certified statement detailing all property of the company held by him. Reliance is further placed on the fact, that the petrol and liquid fuel agreements each contained a clause providing that all legal proceedings that might be instituted by the company or the agent in connexion with or arising from the terms and conditions of the agreement were to be tried by the proper Court or Courts at Karachi.

Defendants' letter Ex. 9 (e) dated 16th July 1923 indicates that plaintiffs on 9th July 1923 sent the defendant four copies of agreements. Defendant returned them duly witnessed together with two copies of petrol agreements signed and witnessed. The defence contend that the sending of printed agreements constituted an offer on the part of the plaintiffs which defendant accepted by signing the agreements and posting them to plaintiffs. On behalf of the plaintiffs it is contended that the sending of the agreements did not amount to an offer; it merely constituted an intimation that plaintiffs would be prepared to consider a tender or offer made by defendant on the terms mentioned in the draft agreements and that the agreements were not complete until plaintiff signed them in Karachi. Plaintiffs further contend that evidence relating to prior agreements was irrelevant, the agreements in suit being duly executed agreements in writing. Curiously enough, plaintiff in his affidavit has referred to the liquid fuel agreement as being an agreement dated 23rd July 1923. Mr. Chenny has assured me that this was a clerical error for 18th March 1924. I have verified the accuracy of this statement by referring to the agreement annexed to the plaint and marked C which is dated 18th March 1924; this agreement contains the clauses referred to in plaintiffs' affidavit and I am satisfied that 23rd July 1923 was a clerical error.

We have therefore on the one hand the statement in plaintiffs' affidavit that the three agreements in suit were accepted by the plaintiffs at Karachi where they were signed on plaintiffs' behalf by Mr. Hodges. This statement is not rebutted by the evidence put in on defendant's behalf. Defendant relies on an agreement entered into a long time previously, which was varied in part, e. g., as to the amount of security, by subsequent written agreements between the parties. The original agreement did not in my opinion form any part of the agreements in suit, and the circumstances in which it was entered into, in my opinion, throw no light on the question, when the agreements in suit were completed. Defendant relies on documentary evidence by the letter already referred to dated 16th July 1923 as proving that the agreements were accepted in Meerut. It is to be noticed, that the letter has no bearing on the agreement dated 18th March 1924 relating to liquid fuel, and if the letter is considered, it is clear that it lends no support to the defendant's contention, for the defendant in the letter does not treat the terms as finally settled. He has signed the agreement but in the covering letter he objects to one of the clauses in the agreement, which he has signed, and suggests an alteration, or action being taken under another clause. Plaintiffs did not agree to the proposed alteration and Mr. Hodges signed the agreement in Karachi, as it stood. In the circumstances I think the plaintiff rightly contends that the agreement was not completed until Mr. Hodges signed it in Karachi. In suits on contracts the making of the contract is part of the cause of action: see Mulla's Civil Procedure Code, 6th edn, p. 78. The allegation in plaintiffs' affidavit that the agreements in suit were accepted in Karachi is not rebutted and this Court would accordingly have jurisdiction.

With regard to the other facts relied on as giving jurisdiction the decision of the House of Lords in 1898 A. C. 524 shows that the mere fact, that an agent had to remit sale proceeds to a place within the jurisdiction of a Court would not suffice to give the Court jurisdiction to try a civil suit between the principal and agent, for the obligation to "remit" is consistent with the agent having discharged his whole obligation, when he posted the cheque, draft, or bill, outside the jurisdiction, and the contract was therefore wholly performable outside the jurisdiction. The present case, however, is distinguishable from 1898 A. C. 524. There the plaintiff having made advances and payments to J. P. & Co. on certain shipments of goods to Pernambuco sent bills of lading with a covering letter to defendant, directing the defendant to hold the bills and property in trust for plaintiffs and to receive payment from J. P. & Co, according to the invoices, and remit the proceeds in first class Bank bills to plaintiff. In the present case the defendant was not discharging duties similar to those of a banker, to whom bills of lading and invoices are sent, nor was he dealing with the plaintiff on the pucca adhattia system, as in Tikaram v. Daulatram (1) His position far more resembled the position outlined in the judgment in Tikaram v. Daulatram (1) at p. 468 (of 46 All) He was the plaintiffs' agent for the sale of the plaintiffs' goods in the district of Meerut; he had not only to remit sale proceeds to Karachi, he had to render accurate and sufficient account sales of kerosine and petrol every month and the word "render" in the context seems to me clearly to mean deliver or cause to be delivered to plaintiff in Karachi. He had to submit to the plaintiff at the end of each month an accurate report of stocks of oil and other property belonging to the plaintiff, (the word submit is explained in dictionaries as meaning present and in the context would mean I think present to the company or their head office at Karachi)

He had to make "true payment and delivery" of sale proceeds of liquid fuel "as and when required by the plaintiff" a provision which would in my opinion constitute the plaintiffs to require payment and delivery at their head office in Karachi. He had to "submit to the plaintiff at Karachi" at the end of each month a certified statement detailing all the plaintiffs' property held by him. In Tikaram v. Daulat Ram (1) at p. 468 (of 46 All.) the learned Judges observed:

"Persons who contract with agents 800 miles away and who wish to place their agents under an obligation to pay or be sued in the foreign district must in our view be careful to provide expressly for that in the contract."

It is noticeable in this connexion, that the petrol and liquid fuel agreements each contained a clause, which provided that all legal proceedings instituted by the company or the agent in connexion with or arising from the terms and conditions of the agreement were to be tried by the proper Courts in Karachi. This clause by itself would not, of course, confer any jurisdiction on a Court which had no jurisdiction but it seems to me when read with the other clauses to throw valuable light on the intention of the parties. In fact the clauses relating to payment, accountability, reporting or jurisdiction in the respective agreements should in my opinion be read together, each agreement of course be considered separately.

So far as the wording of the liquid fuel agreement is concerned there seems to me no doubt that this Court would have jurisdiction. The phrase there, is not "remit the sale proceeds," but "make true payment and delivery thereof as and when required by the company."

This agreement further specifically states, that

"the agreement must submit at the end of each month to the company at Karachi"

a certified statement detailing the property of the company and it contains the clause and all legal proceedings are to be instituted in Karachi. There seems to me no doubt that the intention of the parties was that the agreement was to be accountable to the company at the head office in Karachi and make such payments as were due in Karachi and sue and be sued in Karachi.

With regard to the petrol agreement the word "remit" no doubt occurs but it occurs in association with such words in other clauses in the agreement as

"render to the company accurate and sufficient account sales submit at the end of every month a full and accurate report" and it has the same clause as the liquid fuel agreement relating to all legal proceedings. I think the intention of the parties also with regard to the petrol agreement was the same and the inference does not appear to me to be removed by the mere fact that plaintiffs did not press their claim to discount on up country cheques or granted a concession if a remittance was made in a particular manner, viz., by a payment to the Meerut

(1) A. I. R. 1924 All. 580=46 All. 465.

Bank with a request to the Bank that the money might be credited to plaintiffs' current account with the Bank at Karachi.

The kerosine agreement on the one hand does not seem to me to comply with the conditions laid down by the Allahabad High Court in Tikaram v Daulat Ram (1) at p. 468 (of 46 All.). The agent had to "remit" sale proceeds, a duty which was performable in Meerut, the language no doubt is used in association with other words in Cls. 6 and 7 viz., "render" and "submit" which convey the idea that the agent was to report and account in Karachi and the agreement lacks the provision contained in the petrol and liquid fuel agreements that all legal proceedings were to be instituted in Karachi

Had the plaintiffs case depended on the wording of the kerosine agreement alone, my finding on issue 2 with regard to the kerosine agreement would have been in the negative; for the reasons already set forth, however, my finding on issue 2 is in the affirmative with regard to all three agreements Plaintiffs to bear the costs of the hearing of this issue, care being taken that defendant does not pay costs twice over.

RUPCHAND, A J. C.

Munshilal Amansing and another—Plaintiffs.

v.

Bishenlal Dattaram—Defendant.

Original Civil Suit No. 626 of 1928, Decided on 2nd July 1929.

Contract Act S. 254—One suit for settlement of different partnerships of different partners does not lie—Accounts of different partnership can, however, be gone into for other purposes in one suit—Court instituting enquiry into financial relations of partners inter se—Limitation offers no bar to Court—Limitation Act, Art 106.

No suit can lie for settlement of three different partnerships consisting of different partners. But it does not follow that the accounts of different partnerships cannot be gone into in one and the same suit for certain purposes or that the statute of limitation is a bar to the taking of such accounts for all purposes whatsoever. Limitation offers no bar to a Court instituting an enquiry into the financial relations of the partners inter se at the commencement of the partnership which the Court is engaged in winding up. and for this purpose, it may be necessary to go into the accounts of a previous partnership. Thus where a partner is neither seeking any relief against the heirs of a deceased partner, nor does he ask for accounts of partnerships dissolved by their deaths being taken for the purpose or making their heirs liable, but is only asking for dissolution and settlement of accounts of the partnership, the statute of limitation is no bar: Betjemann v. Betjemann, (1895) 2 Ch. 474 and 3 S. L. R. 108, Rel. on; 25 Mad. 26, Ref. [P 232 C 2; P 233 C 1]

Kimatrai Bhojraj and Tolasing K. Advani—for Plaintiffs.

Dipchand Chandumal—for Defendant.

Judgment.—This is a suit for dissolution and for settlement of accounts of a partnership carried on at Karachi in the name and style of Dattaram Munshilal. The plaintiffs are brothers residents of Hansi in the Punjab The defendant is also a resident of that place and is distantly related to the plaintiffs.

There is hardly any dispute about the facts It is alleged on behalf of the plaintiffs that both of them and one Charanjilal who is now dead, carried on business at Hansi in the name and style of Mataram Ruriram and that in Sambat 1972 or 1915 A. D the firm of Mataram Ruriram, the defendant representing himself and the joint family consisting of himself and his sons and one Sadaram started a business in partnership which was to be carried on at Karachi in the name of Dattaram Munshilal, the shares of the parties being ten annas, four annas and two-annas respectively

The accounts of that partnership are alleged to have been settled in Sambat 1974, a few months before the death of Sadaram which took place in that year. On his death the business is said to have continued in the same manner as before. In October 1927, Charanjilal died and thereafter again the business is said to have continued on as before.

On 21st September 1928, the plaintiff filed the present suit. Paragraphs 4 to 6 of the plaint which are pertinent to the points in issue read as follows:

"4. That the said Sadaram died in 1917, when his connexion with the partnership firm of Dattaram Munshilal ceased and the partnership business was continued by the remaining partners in the same name and style, the share of Mataram Ruriram being 12-annas and defendant four annas; 5. On 5th October 1927, the said Charanjilal referred to in para. 1 of the plaint died and, therefore, his share of the assets and liabilities in the firm of Mataram Ruriram was taken over by the plaintiffs: 6. That the partnership business of the firm of Dattaram Munshilal has continued up to this date, the share of the plaintiffs being 12-annas and of the defendant being four annas as shown in para. 4 hereof."

On 8th October 1928, the defendant filed a suit against the plaintiffs in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Hansi for settlement of accounts of the said partnership business, but made no mention therein of Sadaram or Charanjilal having been partners He averred that the two plaintiffs who are defendants in that suit and he himself carried on business at Karachi in the name of Dattaram Munshilal from Sambat 1972 up to 1st October 1928, and he wanted accounts of the partnership up to that date.

That suit being subsequent to the present suit has been stayed under S. 10, Civil P. C.

On 4th December 1928, the defendant filed his defence in the present suit denying that he had become a partner of the plaintiffs as representing the joint family consisting of himself and his sons, and pleaded that both before and after the death of Sadaram, his son Surajsingh had continued as a partner of the firm, that he himself had ceased to be a partner in the firm on the death of Charanjilal, that the sons of Sadaram and Charanjilal were necessary parties to the suit, that the suit was technically bad being in respect of three different partnerships, and that the plaintiffs were liable for certain alleged losses on several grounds specified in the written statement. He also disputed the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the present suit.

On these pleadings the following issues were raised :

1. Did the defendant enter into partnership as alleged in para. 1 of the plaint as manager or representative of the joint family consisting of himself and his sons ?
2. Is the partnership with a firm invalid in law ?
3. What were the shares of the original partners ?
4. Was Surajsing partner of the firm during the lifetime of his father ?
5. Did Sadaram's connexion with the firm not cease on his death, and did his son Surajsing continue as a partner representing his father's share, if not, who took up the share of Sadaram ?
6. Did the plaintiffs take over Charanjilal's share in the assets and liabilities of the firm ?
7. Did Lakmichand, son of Charanjilal, continue as a partner after his father's death ? If so, what were the shares of the partners ?
8. Were the partnerships dissolved on the death of Sadaram and Charanjilal ? If so, were the partnerships carried on after their respective deaths new partnerships and can all the said partnerships be impleaded in one suit ?
9. Did the defendant inform the other partners on the death of Charanjilal that he was no more their partner and not liable for any dealings subsequent thereto or was it agreed and arranged that he would not be liable for any future dealings ?
10. Are Lakhmichand and Surajsing's heirs necessary parties to the suit ?
11. Are plaintiffs liable to pay the amount due by the firm of Ramchand Ganchiram, if any ?
12. Are the plaintiffs liable to pay the losses due on the contracts with Ramkishen Mamraj?
13. On accounts being taken what amount if any is due and to whom ?
14. General.

FINDINGS.

Issue 1 has been struck off as it hardly arises at the present stage. The question of the liability of the joint family property, if any, for payment of the debts incurred by defendant 1 is a question fit for being determined in execution proceedings.

Issue 2 —This issue has not been pressed. The partnership was not between the firm of Mataram Ruriram and others but it was a partnership between the individual members of the firm of Mataram Ruriram on the one hand and others who joined them as partners in the firm of Dattaram Munshilal. Though the share allotted to the individuals composing the firm of Mataram Ruriram was one indivisible share, there is nothing in law to render such a partnership invalid except where the total number of partners composing such new firm exceeds twenty and thereby violates the provisions of the Indians Companies Act. My finding, therefore, on this issue is in the negative.

Issue 3.—There is no dispute about the shares of the original partners and no evidence has been given to contradict the averments in the plaint. I hold that their shares were as shown in the plaint.

Issues 4 and 5.—The plaintiff Ruriram has denied that Surajsing was a partner during the lifetime of his father. He has also denied that Surajsing continued as such afterwards. He is supported by entries Exs. 5/16 and 5/17 which show that in Sambat 1981 a sum of Rs. 428-9-0 said to be due by Sadaram was debited to the vatta account as irrecoverable.

The only evidence to the contrary is that of the defendants. He is a cantankerous old gentleman, and his evidence does not carry any weight with me. As a matter of fact, I have not called upon the plaintiffs to cross-examine him. In his anxiety to delay the settlement of accounts on which he is very probably heavily indebted, he has made certain contradictory averments in the plaint filed by him in the Hansi Court and in the evidence given by him before me. As a matter of fact, even if I were to hold that Sadaram's son continued as a partner after the death of his father for a couple of years as alleged by the defendant in his evidence, the position of the parties would be no better and no worse as will appear hereafter from the finding on issue 9. I hold on this issue that Surajsingh was not a partner in the lifetime of his father and that Sadaram's interest in that firm ceased on his death.

Issues 6 and 7.—Ruriram has sworn that as Charanjilal was heavily indebted to the plaintiffs and had left no property, they (the plaintiffs) took over the assets and liabilities of the firm of Mataram Ruriram on themselves and discharged Charanjilal's son from all liability either to the firm of Mataram Ruriram or to the firm of Dattaram Munshilal. This is a statement against the plaintiffs' own interests. It finds support in the evidence of Lakhmichand, the son of Charanjilal, a boy of about 21 years of age who was brought down to give evidence in this case. So far as the defendant is concerned, he is in no way affected by the relinquishment by the plaintiffs of their claim against Charanjilal's heir and by their agreeing to be responsible to the defendant in respect of any loss for which Charanjilal is accountable to the partnership of Dattaram Munshilal. The defendant's share was four annas as against twelve annas collectively allotted to the plaintiffs and Charanjilal, and his liability is neither less nor more than four annas in the rupee whether Charanjilal's heir continues as a partner or not. I hold on issue 6 in the affirmative, and on the first part of issue 7 in the negative; no finding is, therefore, necessary on the second part of issue 7.

Issues 8 and 10.—These seem to me the issues on which great stress has been laid by the learned pleader of the defendant in support of the several technical pleas raised in the written statement. Now, there can be no doubt that in law the partnership which was started in Sambat 1972, was dissolved in Sambat 1974 on the death of Sadaram, and that the business which was carried on by the remaining partners was a business carried on by them as constituting in the eye of the law a new partnership and that again on the death of Charanjilal in October 1927, the surviving partners continued on the business likewise as forming new partnership. It is also not open to argument that no suit can lie for settlement of three different partnerships consisting of different partners. But it does not follow that the accounts of different partnerships cannot be gone into in one and the same suit for certain purposes or that the Statute of Limitation is a bar to the taking of such accounts for all purposes whatsoever. The effect of surviving partners continuing the business without settlement of accounts after a dissolution caused by the death of one of their former partners was dealt with by the Court of Appeal in the leading case of Betjemann v. Betjemann (1). The facts of that case are that A and his two sons J and G carried on business in partnership from 1856 to 1886. When A died there were no articles of partnership and no settled accounts. After A's death, J and G, carried on business as partners without winding up the other partnership and without coming to any settled accounts. J died in 1893 and his executrix brought a suit for account of the partnership between J and G from 1893. G claimed the account of the old partnership to be taken from 1856, the executrix of J demurring to that plea inter alia on the ground that the Statute of Limitation was a bar to such account being gone into. In dealing with that point Lindley, L. J., observed at p 478:

"The plaintiff is the executor of John; and although John and George William the two sons continued the partnership, it was, in point of law a different partnership, viz., a partnership between two. They continued the partnership account as one account, and never wound it up. They brought in all the balances, carried on the balances at the bankers, carried on the ledgers, and carried on the account without a break. Now as between persons who deal with each other upon that footing, I fail to see the Statute of Limitations has any application whatever. Notwithstanding, therefore, that the partnership was determined between the three, and that there was a new partnership between the two, there was no break in the account and the account was never brought to an end. My view is that the learned Judge misapplied the doctrine of Knox Gye (2), in holding as between these two brothers, who went on without a break, that the account could be considered as severed in 1896, and that there was a new cause of action arising then."

The case was followed by Bhashyam Ayyangar, J., in Ahmsa Bibi v Abdul Kader Saheb (3) and by a Bench of this Court in Parchomal Vasandmal v Pamandas Alamchand (4) In the last cited case which is binding on me, Crouch, A. J. C. has said at p. 111 .

"When a partnership is a continuing one, there is, technically a new partnership formed whenever any partner dies. On such death, each surviving partner is presumed to invest in the new partnership his share of the assets of the dissolved partnership and to take over his share of the liabilities. As soon as the new partnership is formed, each partner is personally responsible to, and has personal rights against, all the others. When such new partnerships come into existence without settlement of accounts it is necessary, when winding up, to go into the accounts of the old partnership, in order to ascertain the state of accounts as between the several partners when the new partnership commenced. Three years after the death of a partner, the law of limitation presents a bar to any suit for accounts in respect of the partnership of which he was a member, and there can be no question of granting dissolution of a firm already dissolved. But limitation offers no bar to a Court instituting an enquiry into the financial relations of the partners inter se at the commencement of the partnership which the Court is engaged in winding up and, for this purpose, it may be necessary to go into the accounts of a previous partnership."

Now the plaintiffs are not seeking any relief either against Sidaram's heirs or against Charanjilal's heirs. They do not ask for accounts of the partnerships dissolved by their deaths being taken for the purpose or making their heirs liable, and so the statute of limitation does not apply. As no relief is claimed against such heirs either, prima facie no question of non-joinder of parties arises

The plaintiff's case is that on the death of each of the said persons, the partnership was continued without settlement of accounts, that when each new partnership was formed, each surviving partner was presumed to have invested in the new partnership his share of the assets of the dissolved partnership and to have taken over his share of the liabilities.

Now the plaintiffs seek in effect for dissolution of the new partnership which was continued after the death of Charanjilal up to the filing of the present suit. Now in order to determine what share of the assets and liabilities were brought in in this new partnership by the plaintiffs on the one hand and the defendant on the other, it is necessary to go into the accounts of the prior partnership which was carried on before that date with Charanjilal as an additional partner, and for the purpose of going into the accounts of that partnership for that limited purpose, there is no bar in law to the accounts being gone into either on the ground of limitation or on the ground of Charanjilal's heirs not being on the record as parties I can quite understand that if Charanjilal had a separate share in the partnership a question might have been raised as to the liability of defendant in respect of the amount which Charanjilal had to pay, and in that case the question whether Charanjilal's heirs should be on the record or not would have required serious consideration. But in the present case, Charanjilal had no separate share and so far as the liability of the defendant is concerned, the presence of Charanjilal's heirs is absolutely unnecessary. Apart from the above, we have the evidence of Ruriram that on Charanjilal's death, the plaintiffs took over his liabilities to the knowledge of the defendant and the defendant agreed to it. It is true that the defendant has denied that he was present at the interview between Ruriram and Lakhmichand, and so far as that part of his statement is concerned, I am prepared to attach some weight to it. I was not convinced with the evidence of Lakhmichand who attempted to improve the case of the plaintiffs much further than it was necessary, and went far beyond what Ruriram had stated in his own evidence, but I am prepared to accept Ruriram's own statement that he and his brother Munshilal did take up the liabilities of Charanjilal and discharged this penniless boy Lakhmichand of all his liabilities and that they informed the defendant about it who acquiesced in the same, and allowed the business to be carried on between the plaintiffs and the defendants as partners, they having the same shares as before, that is to say, the defendant having four annas share and the two plaintiffs having twelve annas share instead of the two plaintiffs and Charanjilal having that collective share. And I am supported in this very strongly by the plaint filed by the plaintiff himself where he has made no mention either of Charanjilal's share of the partnership having been dissolved at the death of Charanjilal, but he has treated the partnership as continuing up to 1st December 1928. It is hardly open to him to blow hot and cold and raise new technical pleas with the object of delaying the settlement of accounts merely and solely because he has been forestalled by the plaintiffs in his attempts to drag the plaintiffs to Hissar Court, and to have the accounts taken in this Court. If these accounts were taken in the Hissar Court he would be confronted by his own plea that the accounts could be gone into prior between the plaintiffs and the defendants and that Charanjilal's heirs and Sadaram's heirs were not necessary parties

So far as the accounts of the partnership prior to the death of Sadaram are concerned, the case of the plaintiffs is much stronger. In addition to the above arguments equally applying in respect of the accounts prior to the death of Sadaram, we have the further fact that the amount which was due by Sadaram was only a small sum of Rs. 428, and that though it was written off in Sambat 1981, the defendant never protested against it up to the filing of the suit. Perhaps it will not be necessary for the commissioner to go into the accounts prior to Sambat 1974, but if it becomes necessary to ascertain what are the assets and liabilities of the defendant which he brought into the hotchpot when Charanjilal died, and if that cannot be ascertained without going into the accounts of the partnership carried on before Sadaram's death, then I can see no reason why this account should also not be gone into. I hold on issue 8 that the partnerships were dissolved on the death of Sadaram and Charanjilal, and that the partnerships which were subsequently carried on were new partnerships in the eye of law. The suit being properly constituted for settlement of accounts of the last partnerships, it is open to the parties to go into the prior partnerships for the purpose of ascertaining the assets and liabilities brought by each partner in the new partnership. My finding on issue 10 is that Lakhmichand and Surajsingh are not necessary parties in the suit as so constituted.

Issue 9.— On this issue the only evidence is that of the defendant himself. He has flatly contradicted his own verified plaint filed in the Hissar Court and Ruriram has denied it on oath. In addition to that we have the letters of the defendant Exs. 5/12 and 5/14 where the defendant requested the plaintiffs to help him in deceiving the income-tax authorities and both letters show that the Karachi business was being carried on to the knowledge of the defendant after the death of Charanjilal. In Ex. 5/14 inter alia he has written as follows :

"What is your opinion about toorias? If you expect a rise and there is good demand from offices, and if the Europeans also expect a rise, then purchase 200 tons tooria. Pay in our account."

This letter is dated 2nd February 1928. Now no doubt the words "in our account" refer to the account of the firm of Bishinlal Dattaram, but this letter also proves that the defendant knew that the firm of Dattaram Munshilal was carrying on business in Karachi, and therefore, he asked that firm to make a contract if it was a profitable one. I have no hesitation in holding on this issue against the defendant

Issue 11 — This issue is based on para. 12 of the written statement which read as follows :

"It is further submitted that the plaintiffs are brothers being sons of the same father. There is a firm of Ramchand Ganshiram at Hansi in which the plaintiffs are also interested being partners therein. This firm of Ramchand Ganshiram had an account with the firm of Dattaram Munshilal on which there is due to the firm of Dattaram Munshilal a sum of about Rs. 40,000. This defendant submits that plaintiffs must be made to pay this amount."

As I read this paragraph the defendant's case was that as the plaintiffs were partners of the firm of Ramchand Ganshiram, they were liable to make good the loss of Rs. 45,000 due by that firm. He has given a complete go by to that written statement. I understand, his allegation at present is, that because the Karachi firm dealt with Ramchand Ganshiram who was a relative of the plaintiffs and because they did not get his consent before opening that account, he is not liable for the same. The additional ground on which he disputes his liability is evidently that because the plaintiffs neglected to take proceedings against Ramchand Ganshiram for the recovery of the amount due by him he being their relative, they should be made responsible for the same.

Apart from the fact that all these pleas were not specifically raised in the written statement, there is no substance whatsoever in them. The defendant has admitted in his examination that the manager at Karachi had full power to transact business with any persons he liked and that he himself was never consulted when the firm of Dattaram Munshilal opened accounts with any other constituent. If, therefore, that firm opened account with any particular constituent who was their relative, the mere fact that they failed to consult the plaintiffs will not make them liable. Apart from that, it is admitted that the defendant knew about eighteen months ago that Ramchand Ganshiram was indebted to the partnership to the extent of Rs. 45,000 and still he never raised any protest or sent any notice It also does not appear that the plaintiffs have been in any way indifferent in not making recoveries. It is in evidence that they have as a matter of fact realized as much as they could by taking over the properties of that firm in the name of Munshilal and thereby reducing the indebtedness of that firm by Rs. 18,000. If Ramchand Ganshiram is a man of no means, and if, therefore, no suit has been filed against him, it can hardly be said that the defendant can avoid his liability in respect of the same. I may further point out there are some relatives of the defendant himself who are indebted to the partnership and who are impecunious, but still the defendant has not agreed to undertake their liability on his own shoulders. I hold on this issue against the defendant.

Issue 12.— This issue is based on para 13 of the written statement. It is no doubt true that in this paragraph the defendant has alleged that the Karachi firm had unauthorizedly entered into contracts with that firm, and as the plaintiffs were related to the proprietors of that firm, they should be made liable. The reasons given by me in dealing with issues 10 and 11 equally apply to the present issue, and I have no hesitation in holding on both issues also against the defendant

Issue 13.— The case will now go to the commissioner with directions to speedily proceed with the accounts after requiring the plaintiffs to file a potamel showing what amount according to them the defendant has to pay and inviting objections from the defendant against the said potamel. The Commissioner should give fifteen days' time to the plaintiffs to file a potamel and a further time of fifteen days to the defendant to file his objection to that potamel

Issue 14. — I pass a preliminary decree for accounts of the partnership and order that the defendant do pay costs up to-date, Commissioner's fee Rs. 30 to be deposited in the first instance within seven days by the plaintiffs Report within two months.

Parumal Thawerdas—Appellant.

Abdul Rauf and others—Respondents.

First Appeal No. 23 of 1926, Decided on 3rd August 1929.

(a) Evidence Act, S. 68—Mortgagor, scribe and attesting witnesses dead—In view of amended definition of attestation and varied mode of proving attested document as amended by S. 68 proof of probability of execution is sufficient.

Where the executant of a mortgage-deed, the writer of the deed and the attesting witnesses have all died, having regard to the new definition of attestation in S. 3, T. P. Act, and to the varied mode of proving a registered document as amended by S. 68, Evidence Act, it is sufficient to satisfy the Court that the execution which was not specifically denied was so probable that a prudent man ought under the circumstances of the case to act upon the supposition that it was so executed. [P 236 C 2]

(b) Transfer of Property Act, S. 58—Combination of possession of lands and personal covenant to pay creates simple combined with usufructuary mortgage.

A mortgage-deed began by providing that the mortgagee should take the land and repay himself both principal and interest out of the products of land; it was also provided that in the event of the crop not being enough to satisfy the whole claim the mortgagor agreed to pay an enhanced rate of interest and to pay the amount due if demanded out of his other property, there was in addition a specific provision that the creditor was to be entitled to sell the mortgaged property.

Held that the mortgage was a combination of usufructuary with simple mortgage.

(c) Limitation Act, Art. 132—Combination of simple and usufructuary mortgage—Suit to recover amount from mortgaged property after 12 years is barred.

Where the mortgage is a combination of usufructuary with simple mortgage, a suit to recover mortgage money from lands brought after 12 years of the execution of the mortgage-deed is barred by Art. 132. A. I. R. 1929 P.C. 139, Rel. on. [P 237 C 2]

Judgment.—This appeal raises an interesting legal point and unfortunately it has been argued ex parte We should have welcomed an appearance on behalf of the respondents.

The facts are as follows: The plaintiff sues as heir of his deceased brother Harumal on a deed of mortgage which purports to have been executed on 23rd April 1909 in favour of Harumal by Sadallah and Dost Mahomed who are also dead, as are the writer and both attesting witnesses. He seeks to recover the principal sum of Rs. 6,800-0-0 with an equal amount of interest from land which fell to the share of the joint mortgagors at a partition in lieu of the 1/3rd undivided share of the estate which was mortgaged. The defendants who are the legal representatives of Sadallah and Dost Mahomed pleaded ignorance of the transaction and denied the claim.

The learned Sub-Judge decided that it had not been proved that Sadallah and Dost Mahomed had executed the document. Secondly that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the sum claimed from the mortgaged land or its substitute and thirdly, that his claim was time barred and he dismissed the suit with costs.

The first question for us to decide is whether it has been proved that Sadallah and Dost Mahomed executed the document and whether it is a mortgage, that is to say, was it duly attested as required by S. 59, T. P. Act. When the suit was decided, it was necessary for the plaintiff to prove not only that the mortgagors had executed the document but that their signatures had been attested by 2 attesting witnesses who were both present at the time of execution and signed the document. But the effect of the amending acts since passed, Nos. 27 of 1926 and 10 of 1927 had changed the position and all we have to see is whether each of the witnesses was present and saw the executants sign or received afterwards a personal acknowledgment from each. It is not now necessary that the witnesses should actually witness the act of signing. Further the mode of proof of an attested document has been changed by Act 31 of 1926. Up to the date of its becoming law, S. 68, Evidence Act, required that the person propounding an attested document should call at least an attesting witness if one were alive. If no attesting witness were available it was necessary under S. 69, to prove the handwriting of at least one such witness and in addition the handwriting of the executant. The new Act makes an exception in favour of registered documents provided that they are not specially denied and the amendment, to 68 covers 69 also which has to be read as a corollary to it. The result is that in the present case since there was no specified denial of execution, it was open to the plaintiff to prove the execution and attestation in any way, he liked, so long as the evidence was sufficient to satisfy the Court that the execution was so probable that a prudent man ought under the circumstances of this case, i. e., considering that all the parties and witnesses are dead, to act upon the supposition that it was executed. This being so, we find the evidence sufficient. The plaintiff has proved the handwriting of the writer and 2 attesting witnesses, and also that the Sub-Registrar satisfied himself that the executants were the men who acknowledged execution before him and in addition he has proved an admission of execution made by Dost Mahomed in a subsequent civil proceeding.

The next point decided by the learned Sub-Judge was that the mortgage was intended to be usufructuary and consequently, that since possession had never been taken by the mortgagee no mortgage existed. He treated the document as a mere agreement to mortgage and held that mortgagee had the right to sue for possession or under S. 68, for his money and no other remedy, and that both these remedies were barred by limitation. Assuming, however, that the plaintiff had the rights of a simple mortgagee none the less in the Sub-Judge's opinion his claim was time barred as his right to sue had accrued to him in 1909 when the mortgagor failed to give possession under the contract. Lastly, he held that in any case the cause of action must have accrued at latest on 1st April 1911, but I need not deal with this point as, though the deed speaks of four crops in several places, it interprets this phrase as being equivalent to 2 years.

It appears to us that the learned Judge has misinterpreted this document and that it was not a mere usufructuary mortgage but a combination of usufructuary with a simple mortgage. It begins by providing that the mortgagee should take the land and repay himself both principal and interest out of the crops of the 2 years 1909-1911, then comes a clause which provides that in the event of the crop not being enough to satisfy the whole claim, the mortgagor agreed to pay an enhanced rate of interest and to pay the amount due if demanded out of his other property. This amounts to a personal covenant and then there comes a specific provision that the creditor was to be entitled to sell the mortgaged property. But until he is paid or chose to sell the land he was to remain in possession. It seems to us that nothing could be clearer than that the mortgage was not exclusively usufructuary.

The question of limitation is left. The right to claim specific performance and the claim to recover the money on the personal covenant are barred. Both rights accrued in 1909. But it is contended that the right of sale did not accrue until 23rd April 1911 when the period of two years expired. Mr. Fatehchand's argument is that though in 1909 the mortgagee could have repudiated the contract and sued for his money under S. 68, T. P. Act, he had no right at that date to sue under the contract for the sale of the mortgaged property since by the contract it was not repayable until April 1919. He could interpret the words:

"when the money sued for becomes due in Art. 132, Lim. Act, as meaning due under the contract by which the immovable property was charged."

It appears to us that this argument cannot be supported without doing violence to the plain meaning of Art. 132, and producing a result which was never contemplated by the contracting parties. To begin with we are not entitled to add anything to a statute unless it is impossible to interpret it without an addition. Where the words are plain, effect must be given to them, without alteration, and in this case the wording is plain enough. Secondly, though undoubtedly under the terms of the contract the mortgagee was not entitled to sue for sale until the expiry of two years his agreement to wait was given on the understanding that the mortgagor fulfilled his share of the bargain and gave him the land. He cannot be held to be bound by this agreement after it was broken by the mortgagor. It follows that Mr. Fatehchand has no right to rely on the contract and must point out in the general law of mortgage some authority for the proposition that a mortgagee is not entitled to the benefit of his security as soon as he becomes entitled to repayment of his money. Naturally the learned pleader has not been able to find any such rule, on the contrary we find in the latest part of the Bombay Law Reporter a case on all fours with that in suit Narsingh Partap Bahadur v. Mahomed Yakub Khan (1). A money lender made an advance on the security of land on condition that he was to have possession, secure interest and a right of sale. The borrower did not give possession and he sued to recover principal and interest by sale. Their Lordships held that the mortgagor had deprived him of his security and that under S. 68, T. P. Act, the money had become payable and that a decree for the sale should be made. I quote the following words:

"It would indeed be a startling result of the legislature if in such a case as this where a default has been made of a kind which materially affects the security there existed no remedy for the immediate enforcement of the mortgage."

This remark was made because the Courts in India had held that the only relief was a suit for specific performance. The result would be even more startling here in Sind where the property of an agriculturist can only be sold in specifically mentioned mortgage, for a money decree would be probably quite useless to a mortgagee and he might have to wait for years to get either principal or interest if he could not get a decree for sale against the mortgaged property. For this reason we must reject the appeal.

(a) Railways Act, S. 77—Notice must be given to Agent and served as under S. 140—Notice to Divisional Commercial Superintendent is not sufficient.

Notice required under S. 77 read with S. 140 must be given to the agent concerned. Notice of suit against a railway company could only be served in one of the three ways described by S. 140. A notice of the claim against the railway company, even within the statutory period, to the Divisional Commercial Superintendent as per R. 6, Goods Traffic N. W. Ry. (c) Railways Act, S. 72—Consignment of animals delivered to railway company—Death of animal in transit—Insufficient provision of food and water by consignor—Railway Company held not responsible for death of animals.

A merchant delivered a consignment of 50 pigs to the railway authorities at Delhi for carriage to Karachi. The loaded waggon left for Karachi by the first available passenger train and arrived at Karachi after a delay caused by halt at the intermediate stations for about 18 hours. The two servants of the merchant left Delhi by the same train to which the loaded waggon was attached. 35 pigs of the consignment expired in transit before reaching Karachi. It appeared from the evidence that the servants failed to provide sufficient food and water in the waggon carrying the pigs.

Held : that the servants of the railway company were not guilty of negligence or misconduct and that they did nothing that contributed to the loss of pigs. [P 242 C 2]

W. Lobo—for Plaintiff.

Chanthram D. Motwani—for Defendant.

Kalumal, A. J. C.—The present is a case arising out of a consignment of 50 pigs delivered to the railway authorities at Delhi for carriage to Karachi Cantonment on 12th March 1925. A four wheeled wagon was requisitioned from N. W. Railway and utilized for carriage of the live stock. The passenger train with this consignment left Delhi at 5-30 p.m., on 12th March 1925, reaching Samasatta at about 4 p.m., on 13th March 1925. Probably the same train after a halt of about 6 hours at this station left, carrying pigs arriving at Rohri junction on 14th March 1925 at about 7 a.m. Here as the train bringing pigs had to stop the waggon with pigs was detached and taken to a goods shed platform. Another train to which this wagon was attached left Rohri at about 7 p.m. same day. 35 pigs out of this consignment expired in transit before reaching Karachi Cantonment. One of the remaining 15 pigs it appears died at Cantonment station and two more soon after they reached the farm of the plaintiff. Events so far are admitted or may be taken as established on the evidence recorded.

The defendant's liability for this loss of 38 pigs is based on the alleged neglect or misconduct of railway servants, firstly because the goods were dispatched from Delhi without obtaining freight in advance and instructions from the consignor or without affording the consignor an opportunity of giving instructions ; secondly, because the pigs were not dispatched by a through train so as to avoid detention of 12 hours at Rohri ; thirdly, because, the pigs were loaded in a waggon not sufficiently large to accommodate the number ; fourthly because Lachman, attendant in charge of pigs was not permitted to throw out carcasses of pigs found dead at Rohri ; and fifthly, as no opportunity was given for making proper provision for food and water needed for pigs. The loss suffered by the plaintiff is value at Rs. 1,373-10-0, the details whereof are found in the memo annexed to the plaint.

The action of the plaintiff is resisted on various grounds some of which are technical. Technical pleas raised are that the suit is not maintainable, no notice as required by S. 77, Railways Act, 9 of 1890, having been given to the Agent, N. W. Railway, and that the plaintiff being neither consignor nor consignee has no cause of auction. On the merits the claim is resisted on the ground that the consignment as required on 11th March 1925, by the plaintiff's agent left Delhi on 12th March 1925, by the passenger train at about 5-20 p.m. and that the waggon supplied at the plaintiff's agent's request having been loaded by about 12 noon, the plaintiff's men at Delhi had sufficient time to give instructions and make proper arrangements if they had desired to do so and that there was no unnecessary detention which could have been responsible for the death of the animals. Facts in para. 4 of the plaint from which inference as to neglect and misconduct is sought to be drawn have also been traversed. The defendant finally in the alternative has pleaded that the plaintiff or his agent having failed to make a declaration as required by S. 73 of the Act is debarred from claiming more than Rs. 10 for each of the animals lost, and that the claim, if allowed, should be restricted to 35 pigs and could not possibly cover the case of animals dying after they had reached their destination The plaintiff has also been put to the proof of various items comprising the claim as particularized in the memo above referred to.

On the pleadings, the following issues by Court embodying the contentions of the parties have been raised :

1. Is the suit barred for reasons given in para. 1 of the written statement ?
2. Has the plaintiff any right to sue ?
3. At whose risk was the consignment carried ?
4. How many pigs died in transit ?
5. Is the defendant responsible for the pigs that did not die in transit ?
6. Were the defendant's servant guilty of negligence and misconduct as alleged by the plaintiff ?
7. Did any of the pigs die through the neglect and misconduct of railway servants as alleged by the plaintiff ,
8. Is the plaintiff entitled to more than Rs. 10 per pig for the pigs for which the defendant is held liable ?
9. To what amount, if any, is plaintiff entitled ?
10. General.

The case has been argued at some length exhaustively, by pleaders concerned. The Court is now required to determine various points urged. It would be, I think, convenient first to dispose of two technical pleas raised embodied in issues 1 and 2.

The plea as to the plaintiff not having any cause of action is evidently based on the railway receipt wherein the plaintiff's agent Vellows is shown as consignor and consignee. The evidence adduced, however, leaves no room to doubt that the consignment was for the plaintiff and that Vellows acted merely as his agent. This plea for the defendant cannot therefore on this finding stand. Rightly, therefore, has this contention not been stressed by Mr. Choithram for the defendant. The plea, however, as to the notice being not proper needs serious consideration. The notice as required by Railways Act dated 15th October 1925, part of Ex. 21 addressed to the agent is clearly beyond six months as required by S 77, from the date of consignment. Such a notice is by S. 140, Railways Act, required to be sent to the agent by one of the three modes given there. The notice above referred to is prima facie invalid, having been sent more than six months after the goods had been consigned at Delhi to the railway for despatch.

To meet this plea which appears fatal to the plaintiff's claim, Mr. Lobo has contended that notice of the claim in question was given within the statutory period to the Divisional Commercial Officer known also as Divisional Commercial Superintendent who had been duly authorised to receive such notices by the agent as per R. 6, Goods Tariff, N. W. Ry. (1924). Such notice delivered to the officer abovesaid as held in Debi Ditta Mal v. Secy of State (1), is tantamount to a notice as required by statute to the agent under S. 77, Railways Act, read with S. 140 of the said Act This contention of Mr. Lobo, has no doubt support in this ruling in case delegation by the manager of such authority to the Divisional Commercial Officer be held proved. As a fact, Mr. Lobo's contention as far as I have understood him is not that the notice to the officer abovesaid must be deemed to have been sent by him to the agent, and that the agent should be deemed therefore to have received it within the statutory period as contemplated by S. 77 read with S. 140, Railways Act. If this is, however, his contention as remarked in Secy. of State v. Bellaram Mohandas (2), remarks at p. 28 (of 18 S. L. R.), the Court cannot from the fact that notice reached Divisional Commercial Officer deduce that this officer communicated the same to the Agent within the statutory period. This fact should be strictly proved and is not a matter of deduction.

Accepting that the law has been correctly laid down in Devi Ditta Mal v Secy. of State (1), though the view taken there and the reasoning underlying it borrowed from Mahadev Aiyar v. S. I. Ry. Co. (3), has been doubted in Secy. of State v. Bellaram Mohandas (2), above cited, could it now be said that the plaintiff has on the evidence in this case established delegation of authority by the agent as such? All that this R. 6 relied upon by Mr. Lobo says is that any application in connexion with claims for compensation and refund of overcharges relating to Karachi Division should be made to Divisional Commercial Officer, Karachi. This rule does not at all refer to the statutory notice as required by the Railways Act. In my opinion notice required by S. 77, Railways Act, should, to be valid, be addressed to the agent. Besides R. 6, Goods Tariff, applies to goods carried by goods trains and not to live stock carried by passenger trains. To the present case the rules in Coaching Tariff apply In the Coaching Tariff there is no rule corresponding to R. 6 of Goods Tariff. In this Coaching Tariff the provisions in S. 77 are reproduced in R. 32. This makes it abundantly clear that notice required under S. 77 read with S. 140,.Railways Act has not been dispensed with so far as the agent is concerned. The case reported in Devi Ditta Mal v. Secy. of State (1) is besides the case of dead stock not live stock.

Notice of suit against a Railway Co., could only be served in one of three ways described by S. 140, Railways Act, vide: Cawnpore Cotton Mills Co. v. G I. P. Ry. Co. (4) and G. I. P. Ry. Co. v. Chandu Lal Sheo Pratap (5). This has not been done in this case, with the result that no notice could be said as required by the Act to have been given to the agent.

This finding though by itself is sufficient to dispose of the case in its entirety, I would like to deal with other issues raised on the merits as well, parties having led their entire evidence on the said issues. However, before I deal with the rest of the issues, I would like to preface my judgment on this part of the case with few remarks not out of place at this stage. (The judgment then discussed inconsistency between correspondence and statements and proceeded). With these general comments, I think it is the duty of this Court to closely examine the evidence led for the plaintiff and not accept it unless it bears unmistakeable signs of truth and reliability. The plaintiff's own evidence is not of any value, at least not of much value, as his information is solely derived from his agent Vellows and his servant Lachman.

Issues 4 to 7.—It is convenient to deal with these 4 issues together. The plaintiff's case is that Vellows, his agent was sent to Delhi to purchase pigs for him that he was supplied with necessary funds to meet the cost including purchase price and railway freight, that he was supplied by the Deputy Station Superintendent with a waggon to load the animals in pursuance of his requisition made on 11th March 1925, that the pigs were all loaded on 12th March 1925 by about 12-30 noon, that it was arranged with the said Superintendent that the carriage containing pigs could be attached by the passenger train leaving next morning and that the freight was demanded of him in the forenoon of 12th March 1925, but not paid till about 6 p. m. that day. It is further stated that relying on the assurance given that the pigs would be leaving by the morning train of 13th March 1925 as arranged Vellows leaving Lachman with two water buckets to look after the pigs went to Delhi City at about 1 p. m. to arrange for food and casks needed for feeding and watering the pigs, on the journey, and that on his return to the station at about 6 p m. to pay freight he was surprised to learn that the pigs had already left by the evening train. It is asserted that Vellows there and then protested against this action and left that very night by another train to catch the train carrying pigs at Bhatinda. Vellows in this depressed state of mind due to anxiety about pigs going without food and water all the way, forgot to have food for the pigs or take casks that he had ordered to be made for watering pigs. It is further said Vellows though he succeeded in catching the train carrying the pigs at Bhatinda at about 2 a. m. on 13th March 1925, yet did not even have a look at the pigs there to see their condition that he travelled from Bhatinda to Samasatta by the same train carrying the pigs and that at Samasatta he caught Lahore Mail leaving Lachman behind to come with the pigs. This witness further asserts that he did not inquire even at this station if he could procure casks needed for watering pigs on the way.

This version of the plaintiff's case given by Vellows plaintiff's manager, it is extremely difficult for any Court to accept Comments already made are sufficient to destroy the value, if any such evidence has. Vellow's statement Ex. 10 admittedly taken down correctly at Cantonment Karachi makes no mention of the conduct complained of of railway servants at Delhi, is silent altogether about the promise by railway officers at Delhi, to send the waggon in question by passenger train on the morning of 13th March 1925. There is again sharp conflict between Vellows' statement and that of Lachman in very many important particulars. Lachman says that Vellows told him at Samasatta that he could not procuro casks at Delhi whereas Vellows' version is that he forgot all about them in the anxiety that he felt for the pigs going without sufficient quantity of food and water on account of the action of the railway authorities. Statements Exs. 9 and 10 in unmistakeable terms show that both Vellows and Lachman travelled by the same train that left with pigs on the evening of 12th March 1925. Statements made in this Court by these two witnesses are not only conflicting on this point but bear impress of falsity in several particulars. They contain many untruths and half truths more dangerous than untruths. Both these witnesses not only have shown no regard for truth, probably because they want to save their own skin, and escape the liability for loss caused to the plaintiff by their own neglect, but they created adverse impression on the Court while being examined. It is needless to analyse further this sort of evidence brimming with falsehoods.

It is urged for the plaintiff that the railway officials should have advised the plaintiff's agent to send the consignment of pigs by the morning train. It is no part in my opinion, of railways business to advise unasked the consignors as to the train or route they should send their consignments by. It is the business of consignors to acquaint themselves with rules and regulations of the railway to find out the train or route that will suit their purposes: vide Arunachalam v Madras Ry. Co. (6) remarks at p. 122.

The story told by Vellows, plaintiff's agent that he had sufficient funds to pay the freight on the morning of 12th March 1925 when the pigs were loaded, could not be true. He must have spent at least between Rs. 100 to Rs. 200 on the fare from Karachi for himself and the attendant Lachman and the food and other necessaries required for their stay at Delhi for about a week for loading the pigs etc. etc. He could not therefore be in possession of sufficient funds to pay the freight when demanded as he had not then received Rs. 1,000 remitted to Hiralal by the plaintiff.

Giving my very best attention to the evidence adduced by the plaintiff, I have not the least hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the story as to Superintendent at Delhi agreeing to send pigs by the morning train of 13th March 1925, as to the freight being paid after the pigs had as a matter of fact left the station and as to the plaintiff's agent being deprived of an opportunity to bring sufficient food and water for the pigs, is nothing but a fiction, creature of anxiety on the part of the plaintiff to snatch somehow or other a decree against the defendant. The correspondence read as a whole viewed in the light of the documents referred to above already and in the light of the comments already made, read with the testimony led for the defendant which I have no reason not to accept, has established beyond doubt that the railway servants were not in the least to blame, that the plaintiff's agent not knowing or anticipating what would happen to the pigs did ask the railway to send the pigs by the train leaving on the evening of 12th March 1925, and that both the manager and the servant of the plaintiff did leave by the train carrying pigs from Delhi. It appears to me that both these men either by reason of want of experience on their part of foresight or neglect of their duty failed to provide sufficient food and water in the waggon carrying the pigs, and by reason of that and because of their neglect to properly look after the pigs throughout the journey, the animals suffered and died. The animals were attended to after they had left Delhi station only two times, once at Samasatta and once at Rohri.

This certainly was dereliction of duty on the part of the plaintiff's agent and his servant. There is no evidence on the record reliable to justify this Court holding that 35 pigs died at Rohri after the train had arrived there and before another train taking the pigs at Rohri station had started. It appears to me that the pigs for want of care, scarcity of food and water not supplied to them by reason of neglect on the part of the plaintiff's servant and not by reason of heat, if there was any at all, at Rohri suffered soon after they had left Delhi and continued suffering thereafter with the result that 35 of the lot died during the course of the entire journey.

Under R. 150, Coaching Tariff, the attendant who is allowed to travel free is solely responsible for the watering and feeding of the animals en route. Under R. 98, Traffic Manual, the loaded waggon has to leave by the first available train as was done in this case. By despatch order placed with the railway by plaintiff's agent Ex 11 the railway authorities are not liable for damage or loss arising from delay not caused by the negligence or misconduct of their servants. It is inconceivable therefore in the circumstances of this case mentioned here and above that the defendant could be held liable.

Before I have done with these issues, I would very briefly touch the point as to burden of proof. This point in this case loses its significance as evidence has been led by both sides. It is only when evidence is led by one side not rebutted by the other side that the question as to onus assumes importance. Even assuming, as contended, that the onus lay in this matter on the railway to prove the cause or causes of loss of animals by death, the same has been in my opinion amply discharged.

It is doubtful in my opinion that in cases of this kind before the Court where the obligation as to looking after the animals as regards their watering and food admittedly lay on the plaintiff's attendant it is incumbent on the railway authorities to prove the cause of death of the animals in question. The consignment left as held by me, by the train as asked by the plaintiff's agent or as it should have ordinarily left and that the train missed no connexion at any junction en route. It is not proved that the railway officials by any act on their part or by omission to perform any obligation that lay on them contributed to this loss of the pigs. A person bringing cattle to the railway station is bound to inquire as to the times of running of cattle trains and cannot by omitting to inquire put upon the Company the obligation to forward cattle out of the ordinary course of their arrangement: see Halsbury's Laws of England Vol. 4 foot-note under para. 64 My findings on issues 4 to 7 are therefore that the pigs died in transit, that the defendant is not responsible for the pigs that did not die in transit, that the defendant's servants were not guilty of negligence and or misconduct, and that they did nothing that contributed in the least degree to the loss of pigs in question and that the pigs did not die because of any act of commission or omission on the part of the defendent's servants.

Issue 8. There is no doubt that even if the plaintiff had succeeded in making out the responsibility of the defendant he would not have been awarded more than Rs. 10 there being no declaration as required by S. 73, Railways Act. Issue 9. The plaintiff is not entiled to anything whatsoever.

The result of my findings is that the plaintiff's action must fail and be dismissed with all costs

Criminal Ref. No. 4 of 1928, Decided on 20th March 1928, made by the 1st Addl. Sess. Judge, Hyderabad.

Criminal P. C., S. 403—Magistrate of co-ordinate jurisdiction should not entertain fresh complaint after discharge on same facts and evidence and if complainant is aggrieved by refusal of the first Magistrate to examine witnesses as to alleged admissions of guilt he must appeal to higher Court.

Though there is no absolute bar to an accused person being again put in peril of a fresh trial in respect of the same offence in a case where the first trial has ended in an order of discharge, it is a well recognised and salutary rule of law that a Magistrate of co-ordinate jurisdiction should not entertain a fresh complaint in respect of the same offence when it is based on facts which are known to the complainant and on evidence which was available when the first trial was held; and so if the complainant is aggrieved by the refusal by the Magistrate who held the first trial to examine the witnesses as to the alleged admission of guilt it is his duty to appeal to the higher Court and not to have recourse to a fresh complaint being filed before another Magistrate of co-ordinate authority.

C. Lobo—for the Crown.

Judgment—The First Additional Sessions Judge, Hyderabad, has referred to us the case of Duru v. Alias with a recommendation that the proceedings taken by Duru before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Desert, be quashed on the ground that a similar complaint filed by him against the same accused before the First Class Magistrate, Mithi, had been dismissed under S. 253, Criminal P. C. It is clear from the deposition of the complainant that the only additional ground on which he has filed the second complaint is that during the pendency of the first complaint, the accused had approached him for a settlement and offered to pay him compensation, that at that time the accused had admitted his guilt and that though he had asked the first trial Magistrate to examine the witnesses as to the alleged admission of guilt, the first trial Magistrate had refused to do so. Now though no doubt, there is no absolute bar to an accused person being again put in peril of a fresh trial in respect of the same offence in a case where the first trial has ended in an order of discharge, it is a well recognized and salutary rule of law, that a Magistrate of co-ordinate jurisdiction should not entertain a fresh complaint in respect of the same offence when it is based on facts which are known to the complainant and on evidence which was available when the first trial was held. A departure from this rule is in effect an assumption by the Magistrate of the powers of the appellate Court, and is utterly contrary to sound principle.

It is abundantly clear from the statement of the complainant that there were no new facts and no new evidence had come to light after the passing of the order of discharge, and if the complainant was aggrieved by the refusal by the Magistrate who held the first trial to examine the witnesses as to the alleged admission of guilt it was his duty to have appealed to the higher Court and not to have had recourse to a fresh complaint being filed before another Magistrate of co-ordinate authority. For those reasons we accept the reference and quash the proceedings now pending against the accused Alias in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Desert.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 15 of 1929, Decided on 26th July 1929.

 Criminal P. C., S. 561-A—Relevant remarks, forming reasoned basis of argument, cannot be expunged from judgment.

Section 561-A declares the inherent jurisdiction of the High Court to make such orders as may be necessary to prevent abuse of the process of any Court or otherwise to secure the ends of justice and if to secure the ends of justice, it appears to be necessary to expunge any matter from the judgment of a criminal Court, then the High Court has power to do so. Principles which govern the action of High Courts in such a case are these: if an unjustifiable attack be made on a person who has had no opportunity of being heard in his own defence, and the remark is irrelevant and separable it can and should be expunged, especially if he is neither a party nor a witness. But it is not proper to delete them unless they are separable, that is to say, if they form an integral part of the argument. A Judge or Magistrate is bound to record reasons for his decision and even in the interest of justice, the High Court cannot delete those reasons and leave the decision without its reasoned basis. C. M. Lobo—for Applicant.

Partabrai D. Punwani — for the Crown.

Judgment.—The applicant is a Deputy Superintendent of Police in the Sukkur District. He was a witness for the Crown in Sessions Case No. 66 of 1928 in the Sessions Court, Sukkur and he asks us to expunge from the judgment of the Sessions Judge some remarks which were made against his conduct and character.

The remarks of which he complains were these :

"The whole thing has the appearance of being a job put up by the police with the assistance of these two zamindars," and secondly,

"It is much to be deprecated that a police officer of the rank of Deputy Superintendent of Police and two zamindars of such a high status should have lent themselves to such a scheme even out of mistaken zeal."

The sessions case was the trial of one Panjal and three others on charges of murder and under S. 201, I. P. C. The Crown sought to prove an extra judicial confession made by the accused Panjal to the zamindar Ghulam Nabi and K. B Imambux, and also that the accused had repeated a statement in the presence of the Deputy Superintendent of Police, K. S. Mahomed Hussain. This statement made by him had led to the discovery of certain ornaments which furnished evidence of a very valuable character. The learned Sessions Judge discussed this evidence and for several reasons stated that he was unable to accept the statements of the witnesses at their face value. He then made the remarks of which complaint has been made.

We have already, in dealing with the appeal made on behalf of Government against the acquittal of Panjal, commented on the evidence and expressed the view that there was no justification for the strictures made on the zamindars or on the Deputy Superintendent of Police, and accepting this evidence, we have convicted the accused of an offence under S 201. It is only necessary, therefore, to repeat that we are of opinion that a Sessions Judge should not make remarks of this nature against a high officer of police unless there are very solid grounds to support them.

The question now is whether we should expunge these remarks from the record.

Section 561-A declares the inherent jurisdiction of the High Court to make such orders as may be necessary to prevent abuse of the process of any Court 'or otherwise to secure the ends of justice,' and it has been decided that, if, to secure the ends of justice, it appears to be necessary to expunge any matter from the judgment of a criminal Court, then this Court has power to do so. The section is new but it has been made use of by other High Courts to justify the deletion of libellous remarks such as those complained of by the applicant, and we are satisfied that we have jurisdiction to expunge objectional passages in the interest of justice. The question is what principles should govern our action Obviously, if an unjustifiable attack be made on a person who has had no opportunity of being heard in his own defence, and the remark is irrelevant and separable it can and should be expunged, especially if he is neither a party nor a witness. But it is not so easy to expunge remarks which though unjustified, are relevant and we do not think that it is possible to delete them unless they are separable, that is to say, if they do not form an integral part of the argument. A Judge or Magistrate is bound to record reasons for his decision and even in the interest of justice we cannot delete those reasons and leave the decision without its reasoned basis. We can operate but we must not kill the patient.

We regret, then, that the remarks of which the applicant complains must stand, for they form a necessary part of the argument The prosecution sought to prove a confession, and the production of property ; and, if that evidence had been accepted, the Court was bound to convict. The learned Sessions Judge refused to believe the zamindars who swore to the confessions, and gave his reasons. But the zamindars' word was confirmed by that of the Deputy Superintendent of Police, who had heard the confession and seen the production. Logically then the Sessions Judge was bound to express his opinion of the Deputy Superintendent of Police and he did so. We do not agree with his views, but since we cannot say that they were irrelevant or expunge the passage without ruining the argument, we cannot legitimately interfere.

The learned Public Prosecutor has discovered three decisions on this section

Amarnath v. Emperor (1), Benarsi Das v. Emperor (2), Panchanan Banerji v. Upendra Nath Battacharji (3).

(1) A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 187=5 Lah. 476.
(2) A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 392=6 Lah. 166.
(3) A.I.R. 1927 All. 193=49 All. 254.

In the second of these cases, Benarsi Das v. Emperor (2), the remarks which were expunged obviously must have been irrelevant and separable Their Lordships remarked that not content with deciding the issues which properly arose out of the charge which he had to try, the Magistrate proceeded to express strong opinions as to the motives which he considered had inspired the prosecution, and declared that the accused had been the victim of a conspiracy on the part of the petitioner who was neither a party nor a witness.

In the Allahabad case it appears that the Magistrate had made the remark that the complainant was a profligate and this remark was not supported by the evidence, and appears to have been irrelevant to the case.

Our only difficulty comes in when we turn to the case of Amarnath v. Emperor (1). In that case the Magistrate, in dealing with the evidence of a police officer, stigmatized him as a perjurer and the High Court expunged the passage on the ground that the finding was based on evidence which was on the record, and that they had satisfied themselves that it was wholly unjustified.

This case perhaps might be taken as an authority for the deletion of relevant remarks made against witnesses, for it may have been necessary for the Judge or Magistrate to express an opinion on this particular witness. But the question as to whether a High Court has power to expunge relevant passages does not seem to have been raised, and it is not clear from the report that the evidence of the police officer was so important as to form the whole basis for the conviction, or acquittal as the case may be.

We, therefore, cannot look upon this decision as an authority for the proposition that a remark should be expunged if it is libellous and untrue, even at the risk of ruining of the argument of the Court. And we think we are justified in taking the view which we have indicated above that passages must only be deleted if they are irrelevant and do not form integral part of the judgment in which they appear.

For these reasons we must reject the application made by K. S. Mahomed Hussain but at the same time we repeat that we consider that the remarks made against him were wholly unjustified.

(a) Evidence Act, Ss. 24 and 27—Confession should not be accepted, when evidence does not show that it was not caused by inducement—Statement leading to discovery of articles is admissible.

Where the Court is not satisfied on evidence that the confession made by the accused was not caused by any inducement, threat or promise proceeding from any person in authority, the confession should not be accepted A statement leading to discovery of certain articles is, however, admissibe under S. 27. Mulchand—for Respondents

Judgment.—An appeal has been filed by the Public Prosecutor for Sind on behalf of Local Government against the acquittal of the four accused in Sessions Case No. 66 of 1928 of the Sessions Court, Sukkur.

The first accused Panjal was sent up on a charge of murder to the sessions Court. The three other accused were committed subsequently on a charge under S. 201, I. P. C. but that charge was amended by the learned Session Judge who added against them also a charge under S. 302. The first accused Panjal has been re-arrested but the three other accused have not been arrested and their whereabouts are unknown. However, as Panjal has now been in jail for several months and there appears to be no probability that the police will be able to find the other three men we shall take up his case and deal with it separately.

The charge against the four accused was that on 12th February 1928 they committed murder by intentionally causing the death of one Sahibdino Mehano. Sahibdino was a railway gangman and a brother of the witness Yakub (Ex. 6). Yakub deposed that Sahibdino came to visit him because there was a betrothal in his house. On the next day Sahibdino left his house in the evening, that is at Tipharı to go to the well of Miro accused 2. Miro lived near Yakub on the other side of a canal, and it is in evidence that Sahibdino had fallen in love with Miro's sister Mt. Izat, who was separated from her husband and lived with Miro. Sahibdino did not return and Yakub searched him but without success He appears to have obtained some information from one Juwan and on the third day Sahibdino's corpse was found buried near the well of Miro. Yakub then went to the police and laid the information. He stated that on the day after the marriage ceremony in his house Sahibdino had left his house and had not returned and that he had been informed by Juwan that he had seen him (Sahibdino) near the well of Imambux Khan, where accused 2, Miro, used to cultivate. He described the search and the discovery of the body, and then stated that Sahibdino had been on terms of criminal intimacy with Mt. Izat, the sister of Miro, and on that account he suspected Miro his uncle Makhno and Panjal. Panjal was no relative of the other accused but was living with Miro as a servant or partner. Yakub suspected him because it was supposed that he too was intimate with the woman Izat.

After this information had been recorded, the Sub-Inspector Mr. Fakir Mahomed went to the scene of the offence and commenced inquiries. He remained there till 28th February and returned on 4th March and stayed in or about the village till 13th March but was unable to find any evidence at all. During this time Miro was questioned by Ghulam Nabi a local zamindar, who had been called in to help in the investigation Finally Ghulam Nabi was asked by the Sub-Inspector to question Panjal, and he took the opportunity offered by the visit of Panjal to offer condolence to him on the death of one of the relatives and questioned him. He has deposed that, after he had questioned him for sometime, he made a statement, and on this he called the Deputy Superintendent of Police, K S. Mohomed Hussain Shah who was also engaged in the investigation. It was then ascertained from Panjal that he had in his possession a silver chain which had been worn by the deceased. He was taken to the house of Miro and produced a silver chain from a hiding place under a mat in the hut. After that he was questioned about two gold ornaments which the deceased had been wearing in his ears and which were missing (the lobes of the ears had been cut off). He stated that he had given one of the kevtis (ear ornaments) to a goldsmith named Lachman that he might have a ring made out. Lachman was called and produced a kevti in three parts, and stated that it had been given by Panjal The police obtained statements from Zangi and Izat the sister of the accused Miro. And on the strength of this evidence the accused Panjal was committed for trial on a charge of murder Some time afterwards the police learned to have witnessed the burying of the body and implicated the three accused; and on that evidence they too were committed to the Court of Sessions on a charge under S. 201 but as I have said the learned Sessions Judge added a charge under S. 302

The evidence as against Panjal with whom we are now concerned consists of firstly, the evidence that he had made a confession to Ghulam Nabi Zamindar and repeated it to Khan Bahadur Imam Bux Khan, Honorary Magistrate of the Second Class, secondly that he had made a statement to the Deputy Superintendent of Police as well as to these zamindars and had produced ornaments which, it is alleged were on the person of the deceased at the time he was killed. Thirdly, there is the evidence of Izat and the boy Zangi and lastly, the evidence of Pathan and Ghulam Ali that they had seen Panjal and the other three accused burying a body on the evening of the disappearance of Sahibdino.

The learned Session Judge agreeing with all four assessors found that the accused were not guilty of any offence. He disbelieved the evidence of Izat and Zangi and styled it as "obviously worthless and unreliable" because, though they had made clear statements before the committing Magistrate implicating Panjal, they had attempted to resile from those statements in the Court of Sessions. He expressed the opinion that these witnesses had implicated Panjal probably with the idea of saving Miro, who was the father of one and brother of the other witness. As regards the confession the learned Sessions Judge has said that he was unable to accept the evidence of zamindars at its face value, firstly because pressure had been brought on Panjal, secondly because the statement of the accused Panjal given in the words of Ghulam Nabi, was extremely bald and unsatisfactory; and thirdly in view of the discrepancies between the statements of the two zamindars as regards the discovery of silver chain and kevti he expressed the view that:

"the whole thing has the appearance of being a job put up by the police with the assistance of the two zamindars," and further on:

"A perusal of the statement of the witness Lachu is also sufficient to show that the whole story about the kevti being left with him by the accused is a fabrication."

But he has not indicated in detail as to what part of this statement was so improbable as to be unworthy of credit. We are quite unable to agree with the learned Sessions Judge that there is any reason for supposing that there has been any "job put up by the police with the assistance of these two zamindars." It is possible and as I shall show later, not improbable that some pressure was brought to bear on Panjal to make a confession. But this is altogether besides the point. The present question is as to whether accused Panjal did make any statement at all; and we find it very difficult to believe that these zamindars have concocted the evidence. We have listened to Mr. Mulchand on the subject for a considerable time but he has not been able to give us any satisfactory reason even for the suspicion why they have done so. His sole argument is that K. B. Imambux Khan Jatoi had a grudge against Panjal because Punjal's brother had made an application to the District Magistrate for the transfer of a case in which he was interested, from the Court of the Khan Bahadur to some other Court, on the ground that the Khan Bahadur was a friend of his opponent. Possibly the Khan Bahadur may have been irritated or annoyed by this application But it is scarcely conceivable that so unimportant a matter led him to wreak his vengeance on Panjal's brother by concocting evidence so as to procure Punjal's conviction on a charge of murder, i.e., that he would abet a legal murder

Apart from this the evidence shows that it was Ghulam Nabi, who pays Rs. 4,000 assessment and is a Commissioner's durbari, who first questioned the accused Panjal and to whom Panjal made his first statement, and it is not suggested that Ghulam Ali had any ill will towards Panjal or that Khan Bahadur had any influence over him. Further it is clearly proved by the evidence of the Deputy Superintendent that Panjal did produce a silver chain which was buried in his hut and that he did make a statement which led to the discovery of another ornament which had been worn by the deceased The production of these ornaments shows that he must have made a statement of some sort, unless of course the Deputy Superintendent of Police was also a party to the plot. This has been suggested by the learned Sessions Judge as a reason for refusing to consider his evidence, but we feel that we must strongly repudiate the suggestion The Deputy Superintendent is a high officer of the police and it is not the least likely that he would be a party to any such inequity. I need not labour the point for the defence has not been able to point out to a single piece of evidence to justify this view.

The next question is whether the accused Panjal made a voluntary confession and before we can consider the evidence as to what he said we must be satisfied that it was not caused by any inducement threat or promise proceeding from any person in authority. We are not so satisfied. The evidence on the point is very meagre. Ghulam Nabi stated to the Committing Magistrate as follows. "I reminded him that he was the culprit and such things could not remain secret." That is all there is on the record about a conversation which must have been prolonged; and it is not shown what induced Panjal to confess to a murder. It is true that strictly speaking it was for him to show some ground for the belief or at any rate suspicion that pressure had been employed or inducement given; but in practice it is clearly impossible for an accused person to produce evidence of this nature, and Courts are bound to form their views from a consideration of all the surrounding circumstances In this case there are circumstances which certainly raise a suspicion that Panjal had been induced to speak by some threat or inducement. The investigation had gone on without result for three weeks and the police were faced with failure Ghulam Nabi had questioned Miro without success and it is not improbable that he was authorized to make an offer to Panjal as an inducement. And it is difficult to see why Panjal should have confessed of his own free will for no reward. Ghulam Nabi was not his chief or employer and had no particular authority over him, and it is not likely that he was suffering from remorse. We think then that the learned Sessions Judge was justified in refusing to accept the confession, though we do not agree with the reasons which he has given

The evidence of the confession must, therefore, be excluded except the statements made by Panjal that he had hidden a silver chain and given gold kevti to to the Sonar Lachman. This part of his statement was admissible because it led to the discovery of both articles, which were identified as the deceased's and undoubtedly must have been his. These statements and the production are guaranteed by the evidence not only of the zamindars but also of the Deputy Superintendent of Police. They connect Panjal with the crime.

The next question then is whether he committed the murder. Apart from this statement about the ornaments the evidence is not satisfactory. Izat and Zangi made statements in the Court of the committing Magistrate and tried to resile from them in Sessions Court This of course does not show that they were false witnesses, nor does their delay in making statements to the police affect their value. But their evidence must be treated with caution, since they are closely connected with the three other accused, Miro, his brother and cousin. When four men are suspected and the relatives of three try to implicate the 4th alone and is a stranger they are naturally suspected of bias, and the principle universally adopted in the case of co-accused comes into play, that is to say a Court will naturally require some independent corroboration. It is useless to say that Panjal was Izat's paramour, for this has not been proved; even if he was her paramour or one of them, it is not unlikely that she was prepared to sacrifice him for the sake of her brothers. We agree then, with the learned Sessions Judge that it is unsafe to rely on the uncorroborated testimony of witnesses who are likely to have had an interest in protecting the accused. Further there are two circumstances which indicate that they have not told the whole truth. In the first place the boy deposed that the deceased was trussed up before he was killed. This was probably the truth It is not a detail he is likely to have invented and it suggests that Panjal was not the only one engaged. The other point is that the Crown put forward two witnesses who swore that they had seen the four accused burying the body at or about sunset The learned Sessions Judge refused to credit them because they kept quiet for two months I grant that their evidence would not be enough to justify the conviction of the three, but Panjal is entitled to the benefit of it, and it contradicts Zangi's story and connects Panjal's co-accused with the crime

To sum up we exclude the confession except so far as it relates to the ornaments discovered and the evidence of Izat and Zangi and we are left with clear proof that Panjal was a party to the disposal of the corpse, but not that he murdered Sahibdino. He is not shown to have had an adequate motive, and he is implicated merely by the near relatives of his co-accused.

We convict him of an offence under S. 201, I P. C. and sentence him to rigorous imprisonment for a period of five years.

The latter portion of S. 120 has a reference to the forfeiture of fares and of passes or tickets and to the removal of the offender from the railway by any railway servant, and thus shows its inapplicability to railway servants. [P 249 C 1, 2]

Hassaram Jashanmal—for Applicant.

Partabrai D. Punwani — for the Crown.

Judgment —This is an application of the revision of the judgment of the learned Additional City Magistrate of Hyderabad who convicted the applicant and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs 20-0-0.

It appears that the applicant is an Assistant Station Master, Hyderabad Station. The complainant is a Guard on the North Western Railway and a dispute arose about the time which should be entered in the summary as the time of the departure of the train of which the complainant was a Guard. The complainant had previously suspected the chaprasi of the accused named Goso for the theft of his lamp some three days before. The Assistant Station Master did not share in this suspicion and believed that his chaprasi was innocent. The Guard on the day of the alleged offence and previously cursed the man who stole his lamp. The accused is alleged to have abused the Guard and used obscene language and to have assaulted him. The learned Magistrate considered that both parties were at fault, and that a nuisance under S. 120, Railways Act, had been committed by both. But since the police had only sent up the Assistant Station Master, he sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs 20-0-0.

Our attention has been invited to the provisions of the Railways Act, and to the fact that Ss 87 to 98 refer to forfeitures incurred by the Railway Co., Ss. 98 to 105 to offences committed by the railway servants, Ss. 106 to 130 to other offences and S 131 to procedure. It is contended that S. 120, the section under which the accused was convicted has no application to railway servants A reference to that section appears to confirm the contention, for the latter portion of the section has a reference to the forfeiture of fares and of passes or tickets and to the removal of the offender from the railway, by any railway servant. It would follow, if S. 120 applied to railway servants, that an Assistant Station Master might be removed from the railway by any porter, if he used abusive language. The learned Public Prosecutor concedes that S. 120 has no application. The circumstances do not appear to be such as to justify our convicting the accused of any offence.

We therefore set aside the conviction of the applicant and order the fine, if paid, to be refunded.

Penal Code, S. 367—Test of lawful guardianship is that infant or minor should be in position to apply to his guardian for protection.

The test of lawful guardianship is that the infant or minor should be in a position to apply to his guardian for protection. It is not necessary and the law does not require that the Crown should prove that a minor has been taken actually from the actual custody of his guardian. [P 250 C 1]

Partabrai D. Punwani — for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellant was committed to the Court of Sessions, Hyderabad, and was tried by the Additional Sessions Judge of Hyderabad on a charge under S. 367, I. P. C. The case for the prosecution as given by Fakiro the complainant, was as follows .

Fakiro was a boy of 10 years who belonged to Karachi. He said that he had left Karachi and had gone to Hyderabad to stay with an uncle At the end of 20 days his aunt and her son left for Sehwan to see a fair and he expressed his desire to go with them. They went to the Hyderabad station where Fakiro missed the train. He then went to Kotri and caught another train. At Kotri he says he met the accused who spoke to him and they went together as far as Sehwan. When they reached Sehwan, the accused, he said, would not let him go, frightening him with a story that the police would arrest him for travelling without a ticket, but took him to a jungle, where he tied his hands and feet and left him. He remained there for several days in confinement and then the accused took him across the Indus to a deserted house. The next day he took him to a village to beg and while in the village he succeeded in attracting the attention of the passers-by to whom he made a complaint The result was that both boy and man were taken to the police and the accused was prosecuted for an offence under S 367, I P C., that is with kidnapping the boy with intention to satisfy unnatural lust.

The learned Judge framed three issues. The first as to kidnapping, the second as to intention and the third as to wrongful confinement He decided that the boy had been kidnapped from lawful guardian but that the accused had not had the intention of satisfying his unnatural lust and thirdly that he had wrongfully confined him in such a way that his relations might know it.

We are quite unable to agree with the reasons which the learned Additional Sessions Judge has given for his findings on issue 1. He relied merely on the word of the boy. But the boy's evidence was not sufficient to show that he was in the lawful guardianship of any one at the time when he met the appellant. The test of lawful guardianship is that the infant or minor should be in a position to apply to his guardian for protection. It is not necessary and the law does not require that the Crown should prove that a minor has been taken actually from the actual custody of his guardian, so long as he is in a position to resort to his guardian he is said to be in the keeping of his lawful guardian. In this case, however, the boy was in Kotri. His father was in Karachi. And there is no evidence of any sort that he had any uncle or aunt at Hyderabad. On the second point, we agree with the finding of the learned Additional Sessions Judge. The boy certainly did allege that the appellant had committed sodomy with him, but he was not sent to a doctor for examination and we think it would have been unsafe to rely on the mere word of such a witness. On the third point, as to whether the boy was wrongfully confined, we are of the same opinion and we do not think that the learned Additional Sessions Judge was well advised in accepting his uncorroborated word. We prefer to follow the assessors who disbelieved him. We accordingly set aside the convictions and sentences and direct that the appellant be released.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 227—Fact that prosecutor might have examined witness is no ground to add charge of conspiracy to charge of offence under Penal Code S 314.

The fact that the learned Public Prosecutor might have examined witnesses had he not been of opinion that they had been tampered with is not a reasonable ground for adding a charge of conspiracy to a charge of an offence under S. 314, Penal Code in the absence of any evidence of such a conspiracy. T. S. Elphinston—for Applicants.

C. M. Lobo—for the Crown

Judgment. — This is an application made by the accused to this Court in the exercise of its High Court jurisdiction to quash the commitment of the accused to the Sessions Court

Section 215, Criminal P. C , provides that a commitment once made under S 213 by a competent Magistrate can be quashed by the High Court only and only on a point of law.

It was pointed out by Lord Buckmaster in the case of Nafar Chandra Pal v. Shukur Shiekh (1) at p. 195 (of 46 Cal.) that questions of law and of fact are some times difficult of disentangle

"The proper legal effect of a proved fact is essentially a question of law so also is the question of the admissibility of evidence, and the question, whether any evidence has been offered on one side or the other , but the question whether the fact has been proved when evidence for and against has been properly admitted is necessarily a pure question of fact."

On behalf of the applicants it is contended that there was no evidence that the accused Jan Mahomed committed any offence, that there was no evidence that any of the accused committed an offence under S. 314, I. P. C , the only charge exclusively triable by the Court of Sessions, on which the accused Osman and Bhiru were committed and that on the remaining charges under Ss 368 and 120-B certain alleged statements made by the deceased Khanzadi would be inadmissible in evidence under S 30 (1), Evidence Act, since in the charges under Ss 368 and 120-B the cause of Khanzadi's death was not in question The defence contend that if the charge against the accused under S 314, is eliminated and so too the alleged statements of Khanzadi the evidence remaining on the record on the charges under Ss 368 and 120-B, does not amount to a prima facie case and that since the learned Magistrate had jurisdiction to try an offence under Ss. 368 and 120-B and could have inflicted in the aggregate 4 year's imprisonment and fine he misdirected himself in committing the accused to the Court of Sessions It is further contended on behalf of the applicants that the Sessions Court, Larkana, had no jurisdiction to try the case and that, therefore, the Judicial Commissioner's Court had no power to transfer the case to the Sessions Court at Hyderabad, since cases can only be transferred which have been committed to a Court having jurisdiction. I agree with the contention put forward on behalf of the accused Jan Mahomed, that there is no evidence against him of the commission of any offence The prosecution case against him is that he is the son of the accused Nooh in whose house the abducted woman Khanzadi is alleged to have died, that neither Jan Mahomed nor his father alleged that they did not live together although the learned Public Prosecutor was unable to point out any evidence that they lived together. The witness Hayat merely alleged that they lived in a forest about a call from Mahomed Osman. The further evidence against Jan Mahomed is that he is related to the servants of Mahomed Usman, that he attended the funeral of "Khanzadi" and expressed opinions about the cause of her death, which did not in any way incriminate himself.

With regard to the charge under S. 314, I. P. C., the learned Public Prosecutor stated that he wished to have a charge framed against all the accused of having entered into a conspiracy to commit that offence. The difficulty in the way of this, is that there is no evidence that the accused conspired to commit an offence under S. 314, as the learned Magistrate pointed out in his order. The learned Public Prosecutor now states that his three principal witnesses were not examined in the Committing Magistrate's Court and that he told the Magistrate they had been tampered with. The fact that the learned Public Prosecutor might have examined witnesses had he not been of opinion that they had been tampered with, does not appear to me a reasonable ground for adding a charge of conspiracy to commit an offence under S 314, in the absence of any evidence of such a conspiracy and it does not appear to me to be a matter to be taken into consideration when determining whether the evidence recorded amounts to a prima facie case In turning now to the case against Mahomed Osman and his brother Bhiroo on the charge under S. 314, I. P. C., a considerable amount of evidence has been admitted and placed on the record The learned Public Prosecutor concedes that since the Crown did not put Janat into the witness box the statements she is alleged to have made as to the cause of Khanzadi's death were inadmissible in evidence

It seems to me also clear, that the statements alleged to have been made by other accused implicating Mahomed Usman but not in criminating themselves, were also inadmissible against Mahomed Usman S. 30, Evidence Act, provides that when more persons than one are being tried jointly for the same offence and a confession made by one of such persons affecting himself and some others of such persons is proved the Court may take into consideration such confession as against such other person as well as against the person who makes such confession The statements relied on did not incriminate the persons who made them (except indirectly with regard to an ingredient of another charge) and so they could not be considered as evidence against Mahomed Usman and Bhiroo. Parts of the statements, however, were in my opinion admissible in evidence as admissions against the persons who made them indicating knowledge on their part, that the woman had been abducted. This Budhoo is alleged to have said that it would have been better if the woman had been returned. This was in my opinion evidence against Budhoo of guilty knowledge for the purposes of S. 368, I. P. C Similarly another class of evidence to which strong objection has been taken by the defence, namely, statements alleged to have been made by Khanzadi as to her name and husband's name and as to her alleged abduction by Wahiddino and rape by Bhiru and removal to Habibullah would be inadmissible under S. 32, Evidence Act, against Wahib Bux and Bhiru on the charge under S 368, I. P. C Since that was not a matter in which the cause of Khanzadi's death came into question they would, however, be evidence that Khanzadi gave information to Sidik and Ali Mahomed as to her identity and as to her abduction and would therefore be evidence of knowledge on the part of Sidik and Ali Mahomed And statements alleged to have been made by Khanzadi as to the name of her mother and other relations (except her husband) would be admissible under S 32 (5), Evidence Act. And the alleged statement of Khanzadi to Hayat that she was confined in the house of Usman, that Habibullah was keeping watch over her and that Bhiru had raped her on account of which she had become pregnant, that they were now getting ready to give her medicine to miscarry and so put an end to her life was in my opinion admissible in evidence under S. 32 (1) as a statement made by a person as to the circumstances of a transaction which resulted in her death in a case in which the cause of her death came into question.

It is clear that the cause of death comes into question in a charge under S. 314 and the circumstances to which "Khanzadi" referred were circumstances in a transaction resulted in her death. In addition to the above evidence the Crown led evidence to show that the woman was taken from Usman's house to the house of Budhoo and then taken to Nooh's house in the jungle and that she died in child-birth after having given birth to a still born child, that she and the child were buried, but that when the police had the graves opened, in the course of their investigation the corpses had been removed.

If the inadmissible evidence regarding the alleged statements of Janat and of the co-accused is eliminated there appears to me insufficient evidence to justify the commitment of the accused Mahomed Usman and Bhiru under S. 314, I. P. C. There is nothing to show that any drug was administered to Khanzadi, there is nothing to show that she exhibited any of the symptoms of poisoning. Beyond the fact that she was delivered of a still born child in the house of Nooh in the forest and died soon afterwards and the statement she made that "they were getting ready to give her medicine to miscarry" there is practically no evidence on this charge. There is nothing to show who removed the corpses and the statement of Khanzadi is so vaguely worded that it may merely have amounted to an expression of her apprehension or suspicion With regard to the charges framed against all the accused under Ss 368 and 120-B the case is in my opinion different :

"There is direct evidence and circumstantial evidence; there is evidence of motive; there is evidence that the woman who the prosecution say was detained in the house of Wadero Wahid Bux and was subsequently with Avees in the village of Gudd and with Mahomed Osman and his brother Bhiroo in Tatta Taluka and taken by the Kamdar of Usman and Bhiroo to Budno and who died in the house of Nooh in the forest could have been none other than Khanzadi."

Inadmissible evidence has been recorded as to the pointing out of the place of burial by Nooh It has been repeatedly held by the Judicial Commissioner's Court that a fact known to the police cannot be re-discovered on the statement of an accused person so as to make such incriminating conduct as the pointing out of a place admissible under S. 27, Evidence Act There is other evidence, however, against Nooh. The learned Magistrate in my opinion exercised a right discretion in committing the case to the Sessions. The alleged offence was of a grave character; the case for the Crown was that the offence was committed not as a result of human weakness or frailty, not on account of the infatuation of one of the accused with the deceased but simply and solely for the sake of causing misery and suffering to the husband of the unfortunate woman, by way of revenge. The woman it is alleged was kept in confinement under circumstances causing her acute anguish and suffering and she eventually died. Had the learned Magistrate decided to try the charges which he framed under Ss. 368 and 120-B himself he would in my opinion have erred and he would have exercised a wrong discretion.

With regard to the point taken on behalf of the applicants that a transfer could only be made by a High Court from a Court having jurisdiction to try it, reliance has been placed on the ruling of Spencer, J. and Sundaram Ayyar, J. in Asst. S. J., North Arcot v. Ramammal (2). The learned Judges there followed a ruling of the Privy Council in Ledgard v Dull (3) which related to the transfer of a civil suit. The same Court in Ganapati Chetty, In re (4) held that even if the High Court had no jurisdiction on its original side to try a case, an order could be made under S. 526, Criminal P. C. directing the trial at the High Court Sessions. Another case relied on by applicants was Emperor v. Sheo Dayal (5) but this was dissented from by the same Court in Mubarak Ali v Abdul Haq (6). Reliance was also placed on Bhagwati v Emperor (7) but the facts there were distinguishable since the Patna High Court had no power to transfer a case out of the Provinces I agree with the view expressed in Queen Empress v. Ram Debi (8), Queen Empress v Thaku (9) and Queen Empress v. Atmaram (10) that the High Court has power to transfer a case to the Court having jurisdiction.

For the reasons I have mentioned I quash the commitment of Jan Mahomed and I quash the commitment of Mahomed Usman and Bhiroo on the charge under S. 314, I P. C. I dismiss the application to quash the commitment of the accused (with the exception of Jan Mahomed) on the charges under Ss. 368 and 120-B..

Sanwaldas Kundandas—Accused—Applicant

v

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 202 of 1929, Decided on 1st October 1929.

(a) Evidence Act, S. 24—Conviction may be based on retracted confession though it must be dealt with caution—Criminal Trial.

A retracted extra judicial confession can in law be a sufficient basis to support a conviction. Though utmost caution must be used in dealing with retracted confessions, there is no rule that they are not by themselves legal evidence sufficient to justify a conviction. A. I. R. 1921 Sind 129, Foll. [P 254 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 32 — Award of punishment should be in proportion to conduct and attitude of accused.

Magistrates when deciding on the question of sentence are justified in taking into consideration the conduct of an accused person in his own defence.

Where an accused person is clearly guilty and instead of throwing himself on the mercy of the Court defends himself by throwing mud at witnesses who are persons of standing and honour, he really is deserving of very little consideration. [P 255 C 1]

C.M. Lobo—for Applicant

D. N. O. Sullivan—for the Crown

Rupchand, A. J. C.—Mr. Lobo has been unable to satisfy us that the extra judicial confession made by the accused to Mr. Jamshed Mehta, President of the Karachi Municipality and relied upon by the learned trying Magistrate was not voluntary or that it was not true, and therefore though it was retracted in Court, it could validly form the basis of conviction: Mahomed v. Emperor (1). But in this case, there are strong circumstances which amply corroborate the extra judicial confession. We have it that the accused made certain inculpatory statements to Mr. Kamberally which statements were repeated by him before Mr. Rewachand, Ex. 3 is their record. There is also strong corroboration of his conduct in having approached principal Gokhale through his friend Professor Kusalramani, and though he himself did not say anything in the presence of principal Gokhale, the discription given to us of what transpired at that interview by principal Gokhale is very strong corroboration of what the accused subsequently admitted to Mr. Jamshed. The evidence in this case has been accepted by the learned trying Magistrate and by the learned Sessions Judge who summarily dismissed the appeal as to the merits. There are no grounds whatsoever for us to come to a different conclusion. We therefore dismiss the revision application.

One further point attracted our attention during the course of arguments. The accused has been very leniently dealt with by the learned Magistrate. He received one day's imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1,000 on each of the counts. This fine was limited in appeal to Rs. 2,000 only. The question, however, was whether in view of the seriousness of the offence with which he was charged and the conduct of the accused in having retracted his confession and challenged the credibility of each of the witnesses some of whom occupy a very high position, he should have been so leniently dealt with and whether this was not a fit case where we should issue notice to him to show cause why his sentence should not be enhanced. We have, however, seen the accused here in Court and we think that in view of his tender age, and the facts that he is a misguided youth, and that the conduct of this case has probably been in the hands of some other persons than himself, we have refrained from calling upon him to show cause why his sentence should not be enhanced.

Barlee, A. J. C.—I concur. The whole basis of Mr. Lobo's argument in revision is that on the record there is no legal evidence to support the conviction. It is his contention that a retracted extra judicial confession cannot in law be a sufficient basis to support a conviction. This point, however, has been settled by the case of Mahomed v. Emperor (1), quoted by my learned brother. The confession in that case was an extra judicial confession and it was laid down by the Court that, though utmost caution must be used in dealing with retracted confessions there is no rule that they are not by themselves legal evidence sufficient to justify a conviction.

In this case, then, in my opinion, the applicant has been rightly convicted, for it seems to me that it is as certain as anything can be that Mr Jamshed did not make a mistake. All the circumstances of the case point to that fact that the applicant admitted his guilt to him.

As regards the sentence, I find that the learned Magistrate took a lenient view of the case because the accused was an inexperienced young man. I quite agree with my learned brother that the sentence was unduly light, but I do not think it necessary for us to issue notice for a enhancement. I would point out, however, as I did in a case which recently came up before this Court, that in my opinion Magistrates when deciding on the question of sentence are justified in taking into consideration the conduct of an accused person in his own defence. Where an accused person is clearly guilty and has really no defence, but instead of pleading guilty and throwing himself on the mercy of the Court defends himself by throwing mud at witnesses who are persons of standing and honour, he really is deserving of very little consideration But I agree that in the present case, it is not necessary to enhance the sentence and that no notice should be given. For these reasons, I concur in the judgment just delivered

PERCIVAL, J. C. AND ASTON, A J. C.

Saleh—Appellant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 157 of 1929, Decided on 24th September 1929, from decision of Addl. Sess. Judge, Hyderabad, D/- 1st June 1929.

(a) Penal Code, S. 392—Court cannot base conviction on insufficient evidence—Admission in statement of accused examined under Criminal P. C., S. 342 of receiving property but for some other purpose does not cure defect in prosecution evidence — Evidence Act, S. 101.

It is not open to a Court to base a conviction under S. 392, on insufficient evidence coupled with the mere fact that accused in his statement admitted to have taken the property from the complainant for some other purpose, which was not believed by the Court.

In the darkness of night, accused were alleged to have robbed the complainants of Rs. 50, which one of the complainants had on his person. The prosecution evidence was insufficient by itself to justify conviction. But the accused, while being examined under S. 342, Criminal P. C., admitted receiving Rs. 50 by way of fine, to hush up a criminal offence committed by one of the complainants. This admission, though not believed by the Court, was taken into consideration while convicting the accused.

Held, that the evidence was insufficient by itself to justify the conviction of the accused. [P 256 C 2]

 (b) Criminal P. C., S. 342—Evidence in criminal case — Statement under S. 342, cannot fill up gap in evidence of prosecution divorced from context.

The Crown has to rely on the prosecution story and the evidence called in support of it. It cannot fill up a gap in the evidence for the prosecution by a statement made by the accused in his examination under S. 342, and a fortiori it cannot for such purpose rely on an admission in the statement of the accused, divorced from its context: 26 Cal 49 and 27 Mad. 238, Rel. on. [P 256 C 2]

Aston, A. J. C.—This is an appeal from the conviction and sentence of the learned First Additional Sessions Judge, Hyderabad, dated 1st June 1929, convicting the appellant under S. 392, I. P. C, and sentencing him to rigorous imprisonment for one year and a fine of Rs 50 or in default to suffer rigorous imprisonment for three months.

The facts of the case briefly, according to the prosecution, are that the complainants Saleh and Abdullah are tin smiths who go from place to place in search of work. On 4th January 1929, they were in Matal's village and asked the Zamindar Matal for food and shelter. He replied that he was ill and had a guest, they could go to the mosque, he would give them food but could not give them bedding. They did not like the idea and on meeting the accused and on being invited by the accused to go with them and be entertained, they preferred to accept the invitation of the accused. The complainant's story is that they were given food and shelter by the accused and at 2 a. m in the darkness of the night, the accused robbed them of Rs 50, which the complainant Abdullah had on his person. Accused 3 then lighted a fire for the purpose of counting the money. They were locked up in the house for a certain time and then taken to a pit at the outskirts of the village and then released with threats that if they raised an outcry they would be cut into pieces and charged with theft.

There was a grave weakness in the case for the prosecution for two reasons. In the first place, the complainants in their first report alleged that it was they who lighted the fire in the house to which they were taken and that they lighted it before the robbery, whereas in evidence their story was that accused 3 lighted the fire after they were robbed at 2 a. m. for the simple purpose of counting the money.

The next weakness was that the complainants in their evidence deposed in detail to the acts committed by the various accused while robbing the complainants, while later on they admitted that the night was so dark that it was impossible to identify any person until some time after they were released from the pit to which they were taken a considerable time after the offence was committed In the early stage of investigation a defence was raised by Sumar in whose house the offence is alleged to have been committed that the complainant Saleh had had intercourse with a filly. The accused at the early stage made no mention of the alleged defence and at the trial the other accused with the exception of the appellant did not raise this defence but when the appellant was asked to make his statement to the Court he appears to have considered it advisable to put forward the defence which was raised by Sumar and he adopted that defence namely that the complainant had had intercourse with a filly, that he had been taken to the Zamindar Matal, and thence to the accused's house, that the complainant's brother had paid Rs. 50 as a fine and that the matter had been hushed up.

The learned Sessions Judge drew attention to the weakness in the case for the prosecution arising from want of light. He was unable to believe the complainant's story that they had identified the other accused committing various acts He also considered the story for the prosecution that accused 3 lighted the fire for the purpose of counting the money was an improbable story and he acquitted all the accused except accused 2.

In the case of No. 2 he referred to the fact, that this accused had admitted receiving the Rs. 50, and therefore since he did not believe it was paid as hush money, there could be no doubt so far as the guilt of this accused was concerned.

I am unable to agree with this view of the case. It seems to me that the circumstances were more favourable so far accused 2 was concerned than the other accused. The acts alleged against the other accused were more detailed than those against accused 2. Throughout the incident, according to the prosecution story, accused 2 is alleged to have played a less prominent part. If the darkness prevented the identification of the other accused in the commission of any act, which formed part of the alleged robbery, it a fortiori prevented the identification of accused 2. I am of opinion that it was not open to the Court to base a conviction on such evidence coupled with the mere fact that No. 2 in his statement adopted a story which was not believed by the Court, that the complainant's brother had paid him Rs 50, by way of fine, to hush up a criminal offence. The Crown had to rely on the prosecution story and the evidence called in support of it. It cannnot fill up a gap in the evidence for the prosecution by a statement made by the accused in his examination under S. 342 : see Basant Kumar v. Queen Empress (1) and Mohideen v. Emperor (2) and the other cases cited in Sohoni's Code of Criminal Procedure p. 764, and, a fortiori it cannot for such purpose rely on an admission in the statement of the accused, divorced from its context

The prosecution evidence in this case was insufficient by itself to justify the conviction of the accused. The mere fact that the accused in his statement under S 342, adopted a story, which was not believed by the Court, a part of which included an admission of the receipt of Rs. 50, under totally different circumstances, does not appear to me to have remedied the defect.

For these reasons I would set aside the conviction and sentence of accused 2 (Saleh) and direct the fine, if paid, to be refunded
